THE little political interest to be found in public affairs, has been this week totally suspended, and as the present affords nothing of this kind for discussion, some degree of attention has been attracted to a document rife with a political interest drawn from the past. We allude to a letter published in an evening paper, by the Duke of Newcastle; it is called forth by a recent discussion in the house of Commons, on a motion made by Mr. Williams, the member for Coventry, for an enquiry into a purchase made some twenty years ago by the noble Duke, of an estate, the property of the Crown. Why such an old transaction should have been raked up for enquiry after the lapse of so many years, and the succession of so many Governments, just when the son of the Duke of Newcastle happens to be the official chief of the department, by whom all such purchases and sales on the part of the Crown are managed, is more than we can explain; but if there was any motive less defensible than a zeal on behalf of the public interests, the display of it has done everything except to raise the hon. member who brought the matter forward, in the opinion of the house. Never was a charge insinuated, rather than made, more completely refuted, and to the credit of Mr. Hume we should state that he was evidently ashamed of the accidental part he took in the business. As the sale of the land by the Crown took place about the time Lord Lincoln was imbibing the "humanities," as a school-boy careless alike of office and its toils, no reflection could possibly be made upon him; as the fair value of the land was demanded by the Crown, and paid by the Duke of Newcastle, we do not see what there was to complain of in this part of the case either. A proper vigilance in such matters is a very commendable quality in those who represent us, but a little tact might enable them to exercise it without being either impertinent or personally offensive. The standard of public morality is not raised by establishing, on every occasion, the inference that all public bargains are jobs, and both the parties to them sharpers—on one side betraying the interests of the people, and on the other, overreaching in order to take care of their own. In this case, a charge that never ought to have been made, was instantly and completely refuted. There was no need of any further defence, and though the Duke of Newcastle has rushed into print, and the papers, about it, the interest of his letter does not arise from the "Hafod estate," but from very different matters. It is a voice from the past, which conveys at once a lament and a lesson. It is the lament of an old man over the changes of events, circumstances and opinions, in which he could not mingle; it is a lesson to all the possessors of wealth and power not to hold themselves entirely aloof from the movement of human affairs, which is always onward, whether they join it or not, unless they prefer to be at last, what the Duke of Newcastle says he is, an isolated being, of no party, of no influence, identified with no actual interest, having, in common with those moving in the same sphere, scarcely a single principle or a single opinion. "When I began life," says the Duke in a tone of regret, which, unavailing as it is, is not without a touch of the pathetic, from its evident earnestness, "I had the fairest prospects before me; in a political point of view I possessed great power." That power is gone—and why? The Duke says, all around him changed, deserted, and betrayed him, their party and themselves; but the true reason he seems never to have perceived—that his "great power" was founded on a great wrong and a gross injustice, which in the very nature of things could not endure; a wealthy, active, and intelligent people would not submit to the dictation of Dukes as to who should tax and govern them, and swept away the "power" he so much regrets. Is England less powerful, less prosperous at home, less respected abroad—is her public credit more doubtful now than then? By no means; is the machinery of her Government less manageable or less efficient? Not at all; there was never a House of Commons in which a prime minister had more power on all important questions than the present one. When a whole world follows one course, and an individual chooses to take another, it seems to us something like blindness or arrogance for the one to accuse the many of having gone wrong. Did a doubt never cross him that the world might have taken the most practical path, while he had persisted in one impossible to tread, and which he finds, too late, has landed him in nothingness and "mere oblivion?" There are some other points of the Duke's letter worth a little examination for the sake of their connexion with an interesting period, the events of which are now matters of history; like many men of strong feelings he expresses himself strongly, but with little reflection, and consequently he involves himself in contradictions, the latter end of his story forgetting the beginning; thus he says:—

> Though in the eyes of the Reformers I was regarded as an obnoxious boroughmonger, still my power and influence were indubitable. I ask—Did I avail myself of my position to do wrong? Did I sell the seats for gain, or dishonestly traffic with them, either privately or politically? Did I ever act unconstitutionally as regarded them, or as concerned the State? I aver that, to my knowledge, I never did; nor do I conceive it to be possible that I could, as such proceedings would have been utterly repugnant to my feelings and principles.

All this is begging the question. "Did I ever avail myself of my position to do wrong?" Not what he thought so, perhaps, but what the nation had good reason to feel was wrong, whatever it might have been in the Duke's opinion; the people and his grace happened to come to exactly opposite conclusions, as to the wrong and right of political ethics. "Did I sell the seats for gain, or dishonestly traffic with them, either privately or constitutionally?" Perhaps not, again, in the ordinary sense of buying and selling; but, granting that his grace's nominees did not purchase their seats by a money price, did they not pay for them by political dependence on him? This we apprehend was one of the elements of that "political power," which he says was "indubitable." They spoke, and voted in the Legislature as he pleased, and no otherwise, this being the true interpretation of the phrase, "political influence." But even this assertion, that he did not sell his boroughs, we cannot reconcile with what immediately follows the passage we have quoted:—

> My boroughs then, on the one hand, were not productive of profit; whilst, on the other, they entailed prodigious losses and sacrifices, by feeding the interest, by contests, petitions, and, finally, by their Parliamentary confiscations, when I was robbed, without compensation, of a valuable consideration, probably, not short of £200,000.

Now, if they were a positive loss to hold, the taking of them away must have been as positive a gain; they could only have been made a loss of hundreds of thousands when swept off, by having been a source of commensurate profit, in some shape or other, while in possession. In whichever way we examine the Duke's assertions, we cannot understand them; both of them cannot be true, and taking the view of the matter most honourable to his grace, that he did not make any profit of his boroughs, we must think his loss of £200,000 by the "confiscations" of schedule A., is one of imagination only. Again, as a proof of his disinterestedness and superiority to ordinary influences, he says, he has "never yet obtained any situation of emolument for his family," forgetting, apparently, that his son is, at this moment, the Chief Commissioner of the Board of Woods and Forests. Lord Lincoln is an able and active Minister; the Board, under his management, is doing more for the health and recreation of the people than all the other departments of the Government put together, and it is possible he may have "obtained" the post by his own merits alone, without any "family" solicitation. But it is somewhat strange to observe how invariably the prizes of office do fall to those who have the advantage of birth and connection. So invariable is it, that we believe the "family" is the certain cause, and the talents quite an accident. To the poor Duke's complainings of the expense he has incurred by filling the office of Lord Lieutenant of the County, and the heavy fees he paid on being invested with the Order of the Garter, we have nothing to say, except this—that such things are honours that may be declined, not imperative duties that must be performed; having sought the first, and not having resolutely declined the second, it is rather ungracious to speak of the mere vulgar cost of them; surely there are things for which, to a peer of the realm, the more or less of coin is not a standard to measure by. The whole letter is a curiosity; it is a manifesto from one of the last of a race of politicians, which will soon become as extinct as the fossils of the primitive formation. Were one of the stony anomalies of the Museum to take life, and walk into the midst of the thriving farmer's stock, noisy with trivial cackle, or busied only for their daily food, the exhibition would, scarcely be more incongruous with "external circumstances." With a High Church Lord Chancellor breaking down the legal distinctions between Christian and Jew, and a Tory Prime Minister abolishing "protection," endowing Maynooth, and complimenting Joseph Hume on the value of his public services, what could the companion of Eldon, and the honoured of George the Third do?

Nothing but that which he has done—complain—complain of all—of his party that has left him, of his order that deserted him, and lastly, of the world, that to all these complaints will not give one grain of sympathy.

POSTSCRIPT.

Saturday Evening.

EXECUTION OF JOHN TAWELL.

(From our own Reporter.)

Yesterday (Friday), the above unfortunate but notorious man, convicted at the last Assizes of the murder of Sarah Hart, otherwise Lawrence, underwent the extreme penalty of the law in front of the Aylesbury Courthouse, adjoining the gaol. But for misrepresentations which have appeared respecting the past life of the criminal, any further enlargement of the subject, save the details connected with his last moments, would, perhaps, be unnecessary; but, in order to set our readers right, we endeavoured, as far as possible, to obtain all authentic information.

Since the period of the unhappy man's condemnation, letters have been received from all parts of the country by the Editors of several of the metropolitan journals from persons, who, in undertaking to supply the public with facts connected with his past career, actually gave circulation to some very aggravated statements, not having any real foundation. The statements given in evidence at the trial regarding his conviction for forgery, and his subsequent transportation, were substantially true; but not so many of those gratuitious accounts before alluded to. The prisoner's father was a native of Norfolk. He was not a member of the Society of Friends, as stated, but of the Church of England, in which he brought up his children, the convict, John Tawell, included. At an early age, however, the latter evinced a preference to the religious precepts inculcated by the very well conducted body with whom he latterly identified himself, and was declared a member. On the conviction for forgery, he, however, was expelled. Since his return to England he made many fruitless attempts to again become a member of the Society; his repeated rejections were, it may be necessary to add, in a greater degree owing to his immoral practices (which were not wholly unknown to members of the body) than to the conviction for forgery, which we have reason to believe would have been forgotten and forgiven had he for the future led a proper life.

The unfortunate man's brother, William Tawell, resides at Erlscove, near Colchester, in Essex, and is a woollen draper by trade. Regarding him we have nothing further to say than that he is much respected by his fellow-townsmen, amongst whom he has resided many years. This gentleman, as well as his wife and children, are, we are informed, members of the Established Church, but we can safely say that they never had any connexion with the Friends, whose principles had never been professed by any other of the family excepting the convict. The many statements set afloat respecting the death of the unfortunate man's partner are gross misrepresentations, no such person having been ever in existence. Some other well informed individuals have located him in various places throughout England which he had never entered, and at intervals which formed part of the time spent by the wretched man in Sydney.

The last fact of importance connected with him, was the farewell visit of his wife and daughter in-law, on Wednesday; since which time he appeared altogether to be divested of earthly consideration, and resigned to his unhappy fate. His sleep on Thursday night was somewhat, according to the officers who had attended him, broken, and not so calm as on other occasions. During the day he employed himself in writing and praying. In the evening he was visited by his brother, who remained with him for about half an hour. The interview was almost entirely devoted to the perusal of some documents relating to family matters, and business transactions of the unfortunate man. Previous to leaving the town, Mr. William Tawell expressed his strong belief in his brother's innocence, and added, in reply to some questions regarding the probable confession, that his brother would not make any; his words being, "What has he to confess, when he is innocent?" It may be added, that this belief did not, so far as we at least could learn, extend beyond the members of his family.

At four o'clock on Thursday the convict was served with his last dinner, which consisted of some boiled beef, potatoes, and apple tart, and of this he partook, under the circumstances, somewhat heartily. After the meal he was joined by the Rev. Mr. Cox the Ordinary, who continued to use his best endeavours in administering that spiritual consolation so much needed by persons placed in the melancholy position of the prisoner. On arriving in Aylesbury on Thursday evening, it became known that the execution was fixed to take place at eight o'clock on the following morning, instead of twelve, as agreeably to the system adopted in nearly all the provincial gaols throughout the kingdom.

On speaking to the Governor of the Goal, several of the reporters were informed that the High Sheriff for the county had written to state that the members of the press should not be admitted. Letters of remonstrance were then forwarded to Mr. Tindal, the Under Sheriff, but without success. In their anxiety to discharge their duties, several called on that gentleman, at his residence, near Aylesbury Church, but without being fortunate enough to see him. From what transpired it would appear that this strange conduct on the part of the Sheriffs was owing to some request of Tawell's friends; and we may add, that it was severely censured by all the respectable inhabitants of the town, who considered that no deviation from the uniform practice should be made in Tawell's case, or in that of any other rich man convicted of such a cold blooded murder. Much difficulty was also felt in obtaining authentic information, and this was also owing to the obstructions which proceeded from head quarters.

It is but justice to the Governor of the Gaol to state, that there were no grounds for imputing any disrespectful conduct to him, as he acted agreeably to the orders which he had received.

So great was the interest evinced by several respectable individuals to witness the execution, that many were obliged to put up with very meagre accommodation at about double the London price. "Such things don't always happen in Aylesbury!!" said several. Medical gentlemen, with many phrenologists, arrived with the hope of being allowed to take a cast of the head and other interesting portions of the body, but—no. Albeit many and earnest entreaties were made, the Aylesbury officials were inexorable. A Birmingham gentleman urged the great good that would result to society if he were only allowed to place a little clay on the head and face of the unfortunate man when dead. The officials' characteristic reply was, "The operation would disfigure his hair!"

The County magistrates, not anticipating a large attendance, did not make any preparations for the preservation of the peace, further than the securing the services of the few men comprising the Borough police, who were placed under the command of an inspector.

The preparations for the execution had been completed the day previous. The gallows had not been in requisition since a Thomas Bate was hung for murder on the 31st of March, 1837.

Calcraft, the Old Bailey executioner, arrived at the gaol on Thursday evening, and there remained till his important duties had been discharged.

As early as five o'clock on Friday morning workmen were engaged on the balcony in completing the scaffold, and in a very short time all was in readiness. The morning was remarkably disagreeable; the wind blowing and a misty rain falling without much intermission until about half-past seven o'clock, when the weather cleared up. At that time, about 5000 persons had assembled in the large space of ground fronting the building, which is capable of affording accommodation to five times that number; so that the attendance was much smaller than might have been anticipated. A formal application for admission, on the part of the reporters, was once more made in the morning, but without success.

Precisely at a quarter before eight o'clock, the crowds were startled by the sudden appearance on the scaffold of the unfortunate culprit, in company with Wall, the principal turnkey, and Calcraft, the executioner, the Sheriff, the Ordinary, and other officers, being stationed at the door leading to the fatal drop. The unfortunate man was habited in the dress he wore on first entering the gaol; kept his eyes directed heavenwards, and in the fervency of his devotion, appeared to be wholly unconscious of the presence of the thousands who had assembled to witness his ignominious death, and who, we have the most sincere satisfaction in stating, conducted themselves in a most becoming manner; an unbroken silence being preserved throughout. Indeed, all appeared to be more or less affected, while many shed tears. The windows of the more respectable houses near the melancholy spot were closed.

After the rope had been adjusted, the unfortunate man knelt down on the scaffold, and for the last time, and offered up a momentary prayer. On turning his eyes downwards, however, and perceiving the numbers assembled beneath him, he rose hastily and resigned himself to his fate with much composure.

Calcraft then drew a cap over his face, and in the next moment the fatal bolt was withdrawn. The unfortunate man struggled most violently for about five minutes, when life became evidently extinct. The body remained suspended for one hour and five minutes, after which Calcraft, assisted by two of the turnkeys, cut it down inside. Shortly afterwards, the remains having been placed in a shell, were removed for interment to the Infirmary-yard, being the portion of the establishment set apart for such purposes.

The crowd then very quietly dispersed.

CONFESSION OF GUILT BY THE PRISONER.

Shortly afterwards we were informed by the Governor of the Gaol that the prisoner had left a full confession of his crime in care of the reverend Ordinary, with the understanding that none of it should be made public save the ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF HIS GUILT, not only of the murder of the unfortunate woman, but of an unsuccessful attempt of affecting his fiendish purpose in September. This, our readers will remember, was alluded to in the luminous charge of Mr. Baron Parke. We were further informed that the wretched man had assigned as his reason for committing the crime for which he yesterday suffered, fear of a exposure of his immoral connexion, and not any wish for getting rid of the pecuniary claims entailed upon him by his unfortunate connexion with his victim.

We were also favoured with the following document from the Governor, who, in every way possible, afforded the members of the press that information which their non-admission to the gaol had otherwise withheld from them.

"John Tawell passed the whole night (Thursday) with almost unabated firmness, only giving way to a few tears and occasional emotions. He listened with becoming attention to many portions of the Scriptures, and read many himself, joining with propriety in observations arising from them, and not only did he listen to and unite in the prayers that were offered up for him, but he several times retired into his sleeping cell, and, falling on his knees, prayed aloud most fervently and penitently. His firmness never forsook him."

Late on Thursday night the unfortunate man took his last farewell of the several officers by whom he had been attended since his committal.

It may be proper to state that the sacrament was not administered, as so doing is not in accordance with the forms of the religion which the wretched man had so doggedly persisted in identifying himself with. Neither was the prison bell heard nor the funeral service performed, agreeably to the formalities of the Church of England. The procession to the scaffold moved from the condemned cell, passing through some other apartments leading to the Court-house.

A very characteristic letter was, on Tuesday, written by the prisoner to Mr. Sherriff, the governor, who, as well as Mrs. Sherriff, has, throughout Tawell's imprisonment, manifested towards him the most humane consideration. The following is a copy of the letter in question:—

"Aylesbury, March 28, 1845.

"Dear and worthy friend—Mr. Sherriff,—It is not less my duty than great pleasure, as well as from feelings of deep and sincere gratitude, that I can thus offer my poor but unqualified thanks to both thyself and dear Mrs. Sherriff, for the continued and marked kind attention which has been shown so uniformly to myself and my dear and valuable family and friends since my unfortunate confinement in this prison, by allowing us all the access which urbanity and philanthropy could suggest, under such circumstances, to the participators in this their severe affliction.

"And now their deeply-distressing probation is nearly concluded, I have to desire that this may be accepted as the most grateful acknowledgment, both on account of myself and them.

"I can for myself desire that the Divine blessing may largely rest on thyself and Mrs. Sherriff and young family, and my own valuable family will lastingly have to re-echo this poor, but sincere, benediction of thy faithfully but afflicted friend, "JOHN TAWELL.

Superscription—"Mr. Sherriff, Aylesbury.

"From J. Tawell, 25th March, 1845."

The date inside the letter had originally been 25th March, as on the outside, but had been altered by the prisoner to the 28th.

The last act of the prisoner was to leave a small amount of money, with a written request that a shilling or two should be given to one, and a shilling or two to another of those who had been his fellow prisoners. This will, of course, be complied with by the Governor.

So great a sensation has not been excited generally throughout the country by any similar event for many years past. Among other proofs of this interest it may be mentioned that some of our Liverpool and Manchester contemporaries had their emissaries on the spot to despatch a report of the event by the first down train from Tring after the execution was over.

Along the line to town the common inquiry at every station was, "How did he die? How did he die?" and great satisfaction was expressed on hearing that he had made a confession of his guilt.

As the fate of the criminal Tawell has excited such great interest in the public mind we subjoin some additional facts connected with his closing career.

As Thursday night drew on, Mr. Sherriff, the gaoler relieved one of the turnkeys, who had previously lent the prisoner a penknife, for the purpose of making some slight erasure where he had been writing. The turnkey soon returned to the cell, and, whispering to Mr. Sherriff, acquainted him with the circumstance, adding that he did not see the knife in question upon the table. Mr. Sherriff, after reprimanding the man for his carelessness, gave him an opportunity to ask for the knife. Upon his doing so Tawell saw immediately the precaution in view, and observed—"Ah, Mr. Sherriff, you are quite right, and I commend your prudence; but there is no occasion, I assure you, for any such care."

Both the chaplain and the governor of the prison sat up all night with the wretched man. During all the time and up to the moment of his death, his presence of mind and extraordinary fortitude never left him. The night was spent chiefly in prayer and a perusal of the Holy Scriptures. Once or twice, while divine mercy was sued for in his behalf, he shed tears, but his emotion was that of mild contrition. He was perfectly resigned, and his sole thought and endeavour appeared to be in the way of preparing for the punishment which he was soon to suffer. He gave his attention readily to certain passages of Scripture that were pointed out to him, and selected from the Book of Psalms, many of which he read and commented upon himself. Several times during the night he withdrew to his sleeping-cell, and, falling upon his knees, prayed aloud with great eloquence and fervour. The language upon those occasions breathed earnest contrition, and those who were about him entertained no doubt as to the sincerity of his penitence.

After hours of prayer and religious exercise, he inquired whether he might retire to rest. It was now about four in the morning, yet he undressed and lay down in his sleeping-cell. From the manner of his breathing it was soon discovered he had fallen asleep. His slumber was of brief duration, for, upon the sounds of his breathing having subsided, the governor entered his cell, but, before he could approach his side without disturbing him, the wretched man heard him, and turned round and spoke. He was not in bed more than half an hour. Previously to his seeking repose, he requested to be called at five o'clock, should he sleep so long.

At five o'clock he proposed to have some breakfast, and expressed a wish that the gaoler and the chaplain would partake of it with him.

No change whatever appeared in his manner. He was obviously prepared and resigned.

At about half-past seven o'clock it was reported to the deputy sheriff that everything was in readiness, when Mr. Sherriff (the governor) went into the cell where Tawell was still engaged at prayer. Upon Mr. Sherriff taking up his hat, the wretched culprit understood what the act implied, and rising, meekly expressed his readiness to be conducted to the scaffold. Upon being asked whether he was quite prepared, he said, "Quite; I am ready to go." It was unnecessary to say many words to him at any time in way of explanation of what was to be performed. He was dressed in his usual clothes—the dress of a Quaker. Upon arriving in the great hall, out of which the drop was erected, he was taken to the inner or court hall, where he was requested to sit down. Upon being shown a chair, he immediately understood that the pinioning was to take place, observing, mildly, "Oh, I am to be pinioned, I believe, now," and submitted to the performance with his usual fortitude. It may as well be stated, that upon his being asked whether he would take the sacrament, he declined, saying he had no wish to do so; but if it was requested of him he would waive his objection. Of course he was not pressed upon the matter. Some prayers were then said, in which he joined with great self-possession. He shook hands, as well as the fastenings of his elbows together would permit, with a prisoner who was in attendance. On arriving at the scaffold, he was conducted to the centre of it, when a cap, which had been placed on his head, was pulled down over his face. He said, "Allow me to pray;" and, kneeling down, delivered a brief prayer, saying repeatedly, "Sweet Jesus, receive my spirit." Upon rising, he was placed with his face to the people. His hands were firmly clasped all the while, and his lips moved perceptibly.

He then stared around with a sort of inquiring look of surprise, and immediately bent his knees, clasping his hands together, as if desirous of uttering a prayer. Twice he did so, and in the meantime Calcraft, the executioner, drew the cap close over his face, and lower than it was before he unexpectedly made his appearance. It was then that he asked permission to pray, and immediately he knelt down, with his face away from the crowd, and seemed to pray most earnestly. In that posture he remained some minutes, and did not make any attempt to rise until the executioner took hold of his right arm and lifted him up.

Again, when so raised, his lips were seen to move as if ejaculating fervent cries for mercy, his face being lifted up towards the heavens; while, at the same time, the hangman adjusted a rope first about the neck of the malefactor, and then deliberately threw the other end of the rope over the cross-beam, an operation that consumed some two or three minutes. The small figure of the criminal, as he thus stood under the stalwart executioner, produced a contrast, coupled with his meek attitude and air of utter submission, which awakened amongst the assembled multitude generally a feeling of pity and commiseration, and that feeling was greatly heightened by what followed.

When the fixing of the rope had been properly completed, which occupied but a few minutes, the executioner and the turnkey withdrew into the hall, and the bolts sustaining the platform on which the wretched man stood were instantly pulled back, and he fell; but the length of the drop allowed him was so little, that he struggled most violently. His whole frame was convulsed; he writhed horribly, and his limbs rose and fell again repeatedly, while he wrung his hands, his arms having been previously pinioned, and continued to wring his hands for several minutes, they being still clasped as though he had not left off praying. It was nearly ten minutes after the rope had been fixed before the contortions which indicated his extreme suffering ceased.

According to the Times: "There was nothing about the execution to give it the force of a warning example to the badly disposed. It took place before the accustomed and expected time; there were no official persons present on the scaffold, except the turnkey and the hangman; neither the sheriff, sub-sheriff, nor chaplain was visible; and below, in the space before the County-hall, there was not even a constable, policeman, or javelin-man. There was no air of authority about the proceeding; nor was there any public display of solemnity suited to it. The consequence was, that the subdued exclamation of the populace, uttered "more in sorrow than in anger," was, "Why, they turned him off like a dog!" A just observation; it was truly a hang-dog affair. Not a hiss, not a groan, not a yell, not any expression of feeling against the unfortunate man, mute or audible, was perceptible amongst the multitude, many of whom left the spot immediately, and the rest within a few minutes after the body had been removed. And the removal of the body was quite consistent with the rest of the revolting tion, for it was not cut down, but the turnkey held up the legs while the exhibi executioner untied the rope, which was certainly a new one, and probably considered worth saving for some purpose or other.

Another account says: "When Tawell made his appearance on the scaffold he walked with great firmness, not appearing to falter more than a man of his age would upon any ordinary occasion requiring exertion. He was assisted, however, by Wall, the turnkey, who rendered him support when he seemed to require it. The cap was on his head when he came forward; but, immediately on arriving at the scaffold, he put up his hands (which were pinioned in front) and pulled the cap over his face, as if to hide from himself the sight of the crowd. He was dressed in black, his clothes being of the Quaker cut; a large white neckerchief, which he had put on, was taken off and thrust into the breast of his coat. The flapping of this by the wind caused much inquiry among the crowd as to its meaning. The rope had a coarse and ugly appearance. The executioner was decently dressed in black, and had on white kid gloves. After all was over, some of the women in the crowd fainted away, and their swoons caused some excitement. Many persons in the crowd exclaimed 'This is dreadful,' and all seemed shocked at the entire absence of decent ceremony with which a fellow creature had been ushered into eternity. We understood that the poor wretch was buried in the suit of clothes he suffered in." Some persons were known to have come upwards of 50 miles, and to have staid in the town all night, for the mere purpose of witnessing the execution, having no other business whatever—such is the intense taste for blood, and the morbid curiosity respecting the horrid details of death, created by public executions.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

Her Majesty left Windsor this (Saturday) morning for the Isle of Wight. She arrived by railway at Gosport from Farnborough at two minutes past one, and embarked from the Clarence yard on board the Royal yacht, for Cowes, accompanied by Prince Albert and the Princess Royal. Her Majesty was received by Sir H. Pakenham, Col. Henderson, and the other directors of the railway. Her Majesty appeared in excellent health. The journey was performed in one hour and a half.

This information was received by the electric telegraph at the Nine Elms station at 20 minutes past one, and was communicated to us very soon afterwards. The Black Eagle, which was to have conveyed her Majesty, came into collision with a merchant ship, on Thursday night, off the North Foreland, and received much damage, two of the crew also injured. The Lightning was therefore despatched to take the Queen and Prince Albert from Gosport to Cowes.

Sir Robert Peel left town yesterday by the one o'clock train of the South Western Railway, for Southampton, in order to meet her Majesty at Osborne House, Isle of Wight.

THE PROJECTED ROYAL VISIT TO IRELAND.—It has been determined to fit up the Chapter-room of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, in a superb manner. The necessary contract has been delivered, and the stipulation is that it must be completed within three months from the present time. It is likely that her Majesty will hold a Chapter of the Order of St. Patrick, as did George the Fourth when he visited Ireland. It is her Majesty's intention to honour the Duke of Devonshire with a visit at Lismore Castle, during her stay in that country.

RETURN OF THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—The Queen Dowager is expected to return to town from Witley Court on Tuesday next. The Directors of the London and Birmingham Railway Company have recently constructed a new state carriage for the use of her Majesty, which will be brought into use for the first time on that day.

CABINET COUNCIL.—Summonses were issued yesterday morning for holding a Cabinet Council at the Foreign Office, on Monday next, at two o'clock.

THE NEW BISHOP OF ELY.—Dr. Ireland, the Dean of Westminster, has been appointed to the vacant see of Ely.

DEATH OF SIR HERBERT OAKELEY.—The Rev. Sir Herbert Oakeley, Bart., died on Thursday, after a protracted illness. The deceased baronet was born in 1791. He was Archdeacon of Colchester, one of the Prebendaries of St. Paul's, and Vicar of Ealing. He is succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Charles William Atholl Oakeley, Bart., born in 1828.

ANOTHER NIGER EXPEDITION.—Another expedition to the river Niger has been organised, and is by this time far on the way to its destination. The subscriptions for it have been raised chiefly in London and in Liverpool, and at the head of the former list is the name of the late Sir T. F. Buxton, for £500. The command of the expedition is entrusted to Capt. John Becroft, who was second in command under Colonel Nicholl at Fernando Po.

QUICK RAILWAY TRAVELLING.—A few days ago Mr. Brunel travelled in the fast train from London to Exeter. The whole journey was performed in four hours and three quarters, including stoppages at Swindon, Bath, and Bristol, of 22 minutes, so that the actual time of travelling 196 miles was 4 hours 23 minutes. The greatest speed attained on the journey was 70 miles an hour, and at this apparently frightful velocity there was no unpleasant motion. Mr. Brunel declares that if the directors would permit, he would undertake to perform the journey to Exeter in four hours instead of five.

SUDDEN DEATH OF MR. GILL, THE CHEMIST.—On Thursday an inquest was taken at the Silver Cross, Charing-cross, before Mr. Bedford, on the body of Mr. John Gill, aged 70, who, for many years, had carried on the business of a chemist in Whitehall-place. It appeared that the deceased was attended by Mr. Lawrence for an affection of the chest. On Monday morning, after breakfast, complaining of his chest, Mr. Woodward, his assistant, advised him to send for Mr. Lawrence. The deceased declined, remarking that he should be better shortly. About 12 o'clock, the assistant, finding the deceased to be in great danger, sent for Mr. Lawrence, who promptly arrived, but by that time life was extinct. The jury returned a verdict—"That the deceased died from natural causes."

ACTION FOR LIBEL.—At Kingston Assizes, on Thursday, an action was tried, Solomon v. Lawson. The plaintiff is a merchant, residing at St. Helena, and the defendant is the printer of the Times newspaper. The declaration stated, that the plaintiff was in the habit of supplying ships which went to St. Helena with fresh water. It added, that the ship Moffat, amongst others, had stopped at St. Helena, and had been watered by the plaintiff. It stated that an illness occurred in the vessel, and it then charged the Times newspaper, by two letters signed "Nauticus," with having published that the water supplied by Mr. Solomon was supplied from water-tanks of a poisonous character, and that that was the cause of illness under which the passengers were suffering when the Moffat arrived at London, to the injury of Mr. Solomon's character and business. The defendant pleaded, first, not guilty; then, that the water was unwholesome; and then there was a plea setting out that the passengers had been ill, and that their illness had resulted from the state of the water supplied by Mr. Solomon. After a long trial, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £500.

A BUTLER CHARGED WITH STEALING £1000 WORTH OF PLATE.—At MARLBOROUGH-STREET, on Thursday, William Jagger, butler, in the service of a maiden lady, Miss Fanny Watkin Wynn, of No. 104, Piccadilly, was brought before Mr. Hardwick on suspicion of having robbed his mistress of a quantity of silver plate, of the value of £1000. The prisoner was taken into custody at a public-house in Dover-street, and when told of the charge, replied that he did not steal the plate, he had only pawned it. On searching the prisoner at the station-house, forty-six duplicates were found upon him, all of them relating to valuable property which he had pawned, and which he had taken from the plate chest. The property consisted of large quantities of spoons, forks, candlesticks, tureens, dishes, teapots, &c., upon which the different pawnbrokers had lent upwards of £260.—Mr. Hardwick asked the prisoner if he had any answer to make to the charge?—The prisoner said he was guilty.—At the request of the police the prisoner was remanded for a week, in order to make full inquiry.

THE ADMIRAL'S GOOD SERVICE PENSION.—The Earl of Haddington has conferred the Admiral's good service pension of £300 per annum, which reverted to his lordship's patronage by the decease of Vice-Admiral Sir T. Baker, on Vice-Admiral of the Blue, Henry Hill.

THE NEW GOVERNOR OF CARMARTHEN WORKHOUSE.—Thomas Evans has been elected governor of Carmarthen workhouse. Evans was last year taken prisoner amongst a party of other Rebeccaites for an attack on this very workhouse, and, strange to say, he is now duly installed master of it. It is expected the Poor-law Commissioners will interfere.

PURCHASE OF MANORIAL RIGHTS BY THE CORPORATION OF MANCHESTER.—The Corporation of Manchester have completed negociations with Sir Oswald Mosley, Bart., for the purchase of the manorial rights of the town, which are estimated to be worth £218,755. The average proceeds for the last few years have been £9214 16s. 8d., arising from tolls, properties, &c. The council have agreed to pay Sir Oswald Mosley, the sum of £200,000 for the whole of his manorial rights and properties, and so mortgage them for the interest of the amount, which is to be paid at the rate of three-and-three-quarters per cent. per annum. They have also agreed to pay off the principal by instalments of not less than £4000, and of not more than £6000 per annum. By this arrangement it is calculated that the tolls, chief rents, &c., will realise £1000 a year more than the sum required to pay the interest. How far these anticipations may be realised is very doubtful. It is worthy of remark, however, that in the year 1808 the proceeds of the Manchester manorial rights were £2800, whilst in 1844 they amounted to upwards of £10,000.

CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH.—On Tuesday Mr. Baker held no fewer than five inquests upon the bodies of children burnt to death. The first inquest was held at the London Hospital, and was upon the body of Jane Stevens, aged five years. Deceased's parents reside in Crisp street, Poplar, and on Saturday week she was striking a lucifer match, when a spark from it ignited her dress, and set her on fire, from the effects of which she died in the above Institution on Friday.——The second inquest was held at the same place, and was upon the body of Emma May, aged four years; deceased's parents reside in Pelham-street, Spitalfields, and on Thursday last she was reaching something from the mantel-shelf, when her clothes took fire, and she expired from the effects of the burn on the next day.——The third inquest was held at the same place, on the body of Peter Tomm, nine years; deceased's parents residing in Dunn's-alley, Bishopsgate. On Friday, whilst alone in a room, he began playing with some lighted shavings, set himself on fire, and died on the following day from the burns.——A fourth inquest was held at the same place, on the body of Louisa Collnay, aged 11 years. Deceased's parents reside in Union-street, Whitechapel, and on Thursday evening last she was looking into a cupboard for some currants, with a lighted candle in her hand, when she accidentally set her frock on fire, and the injuries she received were so severe that she expired on the following day.——The fifth inquest was held at the Green Dragon, Wells-street, Hackney, on the body of John Pusgood, aged four years. Deceased's parents reside in Gun-wood-row, Hackney-wick, and on Thursday, during the temporary absence of the mother, the poor little fellow got playing with the teakettle on the fire, and set his pinafore in flames, and died from the severe injuries the same night. Verdict, in each case, "Accidental death."

THE EASTER HUNT WITH THE ROYAL STAG HOUNDS.

The merry good horn
At early morn
Sings, Up and away!
Sings, Up and away!—
With the huntsman's halloo
And the game just in view
'Gins the Sport of the Day—
'Gins the Sport of the Day.

BURTHEN.

All near old Windsor's Castle Towers
Thus do we spend the Springtide hours.
Old Berkshire Ballad.

Contrary to general foreboding, the hunt with the Queen's Stag-hounds, on Easter Monday, proved a very spirited affair. It was expected to have been a dull business, not only from the extremely heavy state of the country for miles around Windsor, arising from the sudden breaking up of the long-continued frost, but from the great quantity of rain which fell throughout the day preceding, Sunday.

The morn of Monday, however, broke most favourably for the lovers of the chace, and long before the appointed time for the meet on Stoke Common, not less than between four and five hundred well-mounted horsemen (including a great many of the officers of the regiments stationed at Windsor, Hampton Court, and Hounsıow, and several from the metropolis) had assembled on the heath. Many of the neighbouring gentry and their families, in their carriages, were also congregated in the immediate vicinity, while the pedestrians could not have amounted to less than between three and four thousand. The celebrated clipper, Rob Roy, was selected for the day's sport, to the great disappointment of those, but of those only, who were mounted upon second or third-rate cattle; for upon all former occasions none but the A 1's have been enabled to live with the Scottish chieftain. Rob Roy, upon being uncarted on the common, shortly before twelve o'clock, took away in the direction of the vicarage at Fulmer, doubling to the left towards Hedgerly, and again back to the Common, where, upon being met and turned by the foot people, he went away in right earnest, at a tremendous pace, tailing off several of "the half-guinea hacks," to Fulmer Bottom, up the high meadows skirting Bulstrode Park to Hedgerley, where he doubled to the right, crossing the turnpike-road, and away to Stony Dean, down the Three Households, into Chalfont St. Giles's, where he took soil for nearly a quarter of an hour before he was whipped out of a large pond, thus giving a little welcome breathing time to many of the almost exhausted nags. Rob then again went away, by the Vetch on Chenies and Latimers, crossing Shepperfield Common, to King's Langley, in Hertfordshire, where he again took refuge in a pond, at the back of the church, and was there taken, after one of the most gallant runs this season, of upwards of two hours and three-quarters, over at least 26 miles of heavy country. Upwards of forty well-mounted horsemen were well up at the finish. The distance gone over, from point to point, "as the crow flies," was at least 20 miles. The run throughout was at a racing pace. The hounds, which went 12 miles to the meet, and were 32 miles from the kennel at the take, returned to Ascot the same evening, having traversed during the day upwards of 70 miles.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Mr. Planché, to whose able pen we are indebted for so many pleasant dramatic versions of our old nursery stories, has this year forsaken the repertory of the Countess D'Anois for the columns of "Lempriere's Dictionary," and brought out a classical burlesque, in every way calculated to foster the taste for the Greek drama, called up by the revival of "Antigone." As it has lately been the fashion here, as in France, for two authors to write together—an excellent plan, by the way—so this last entertainment may be described as concocted by Messrs. Planché and Euripides: the former of these gentlemen is well known; the latter was a Greek dramatist, who might be considered, from his numerous productions, as the M. Scribe of his time, and whose plays were represented "for the first time on any stage," at the Theatre Royal, Athens, about two thousand three hundred and twenty-five years ago; and, from their success, he appears to have enjoyed considerable popularity in his day.

The burlesque of "The Golden Fleece" is in two parts. The first is described as "entirely original, founded on the third and fourth books of 'The Argonautics,' a poem, by the late Apollonius Rhodius, Esq., principal librarian to his Egyptian Majesty, Ptolemy Evergetes," and entitled "Jason in Colchis." This portion of the piece, which is acted on the raised Greek stage, as in "Antigone," contains the early history of Jason, connected with his expedition to Colchis, his courtship of Medea, and his final departure with the fleece, to the great sorrow of Æetes—a proceeding admirably shown in an effective tableau at the end of the part, where the theatre disappears, and the Argo is seen, manned by the Argonauts carrying off the treasure. The second part is denominated "Medea in Corinth," and is taken, pretty accurately, from the "Medea" of Euripides. The action, as before, passed on the Greek theatre; but there is also a concluding effect, representing the departure of Medea from Corinth, in a chariot horsed by dragons.

Nothing can exceed the correct taste displayed in putting this extravaganza on the stage; and the same praise may be extended to the acting, which was in every respect perfect. The name of Mr. Planché is a sufficient guarantee for the writing being up to the mark.

Jason, "married but not settled, exceedingly classical but very far from correct," was played with much piquancy by Miss P. Horton; and Medea was ably sustained by Madame Vestris, according to the approved style of dishevelled tresses and severe costume. Mr. James Bland had the important charge entrusted to him of personating two kings, Æetes, King of Colchis, and Creon, King of Corinth. According to the bill, he had, "by particular desire, and on this occasion only, most obligingly consented to be twice the King he usually is at this festive season." And those who know what Mr. James Bland's Kings are, may imagine how doubly great he was upon the present occasion. To Mr. Charles Mathews the audience were indebted for the Chorus, and, by representing the entire body of "sixty male voices," he rendered fifty-nine perfectly unnecessary. He was most amusing; and his continual interruptions, comments, and explanations, were as quaintly conceived as they were excellently rendered. A rapid song, of which he did not know the words, was droll from that very circumstance, and created great laughter. Altogether, the "Golden Fleece" was entirely successful. Some parts of it may be a little too fine in their allusions for a general audience to take up; but, as a whole, it is one of the best things Mr. Planché has ever done.

SCENE FROM THE EXTRAVAGANZA OF "THE GOLDEN FLEECE," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.

BIOGRAPHY OF FELICIEN DAVID, AUTHOR OF THE SYMPHONIC ODE, "THE DESERT."

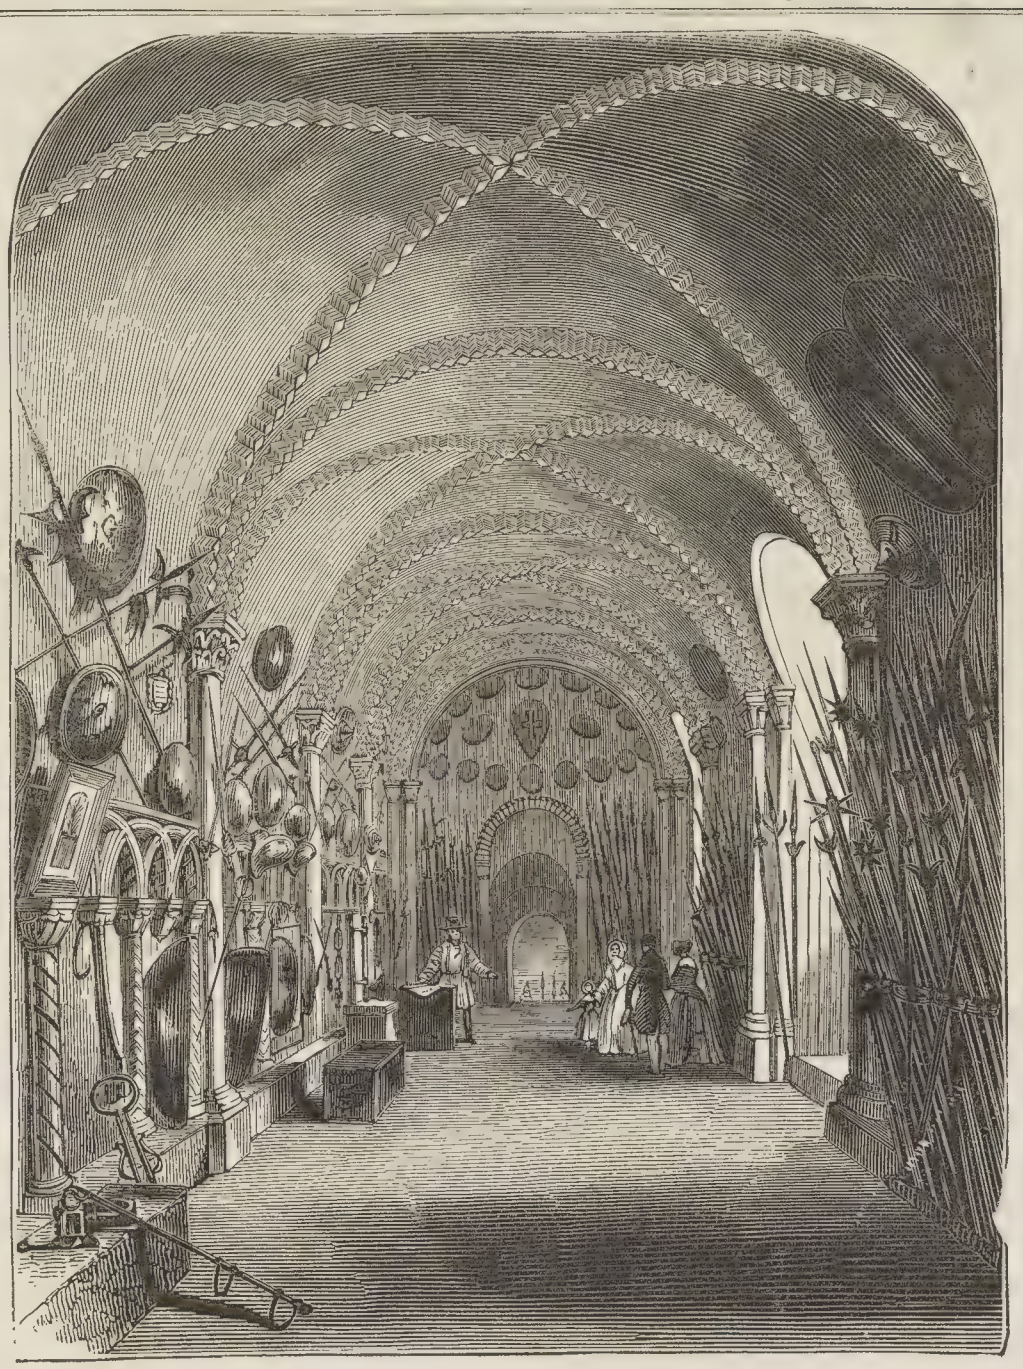
The great master, for so all Europe now admits him to be, a sketch of whose biography we are about to give, affords another proof of the difficulties which genius ever has to encounter on its road to fame, and of the certainty of the reward which sooner or later attends the artist who is worthy of it. Felicien David was born in 1810, at Cadenet, a small village near Aix, in the midi of France. At the early age of four, he showed strong musical indications. He expressed the greatest delight on hearing the piano or the violin; and he sang with so much sweetness and precision, that his family and friends looked upon him as a little wonder. When he was six years old he was heard by a distinguished professor, M. Garnier, who at once pronounced him to be an inspired child; and he recommended his friends to lose no time in procuring him the best instruction. The family of Felicien soon after removed to Aix, and succeeded in placing him in the seminary of St. Sauveur. There he commenced his regular musical instruction at the age of seven, and in a short time surpassed all the students of the same class. From thence, at a riper age, he was transferred to a College of Jesuits, where his musical education was perfected, not in slight or frivolous composition, but in the study of the great masters—of Mozart, Beethoven, and Cherubini. At sixteen he left the Jesuits, and was placed by his family in a solicitor's office; but the desk and his dispositions did not harmonize; he abandoned it, and took refuge as second violin in the orchestra of the theatre of Aix.

After experiencing many difficulties in provincial life, Felicien David came to Paris to seek fame and fortune, provided only with the limited means his family could afford, and fifty francs a month furnished by a rich old uncle, who hesitated a long time before he consented to give even that little sum. In 1830 he saw the great metropolis, and, having laid one of his compositions before Cherubini, director of the Conservatoire, he was admitted at once as a student in that magnificent establishment. There he worked hard, and became a master of harmony in the classes of Fetis, Leseur, and Benoit. He took the great Beethoven as his model, and produced pieces, not borrowed from that distinguished master, but full of his inspiration and science. All this time he was struggling with limited pecuniary means, and even the distress of that situation was aggravated by his uncle suddenly withdrawing the monthly payment of fifty francs, which had induced Felicien to leave home. None but a man of genius could have borne up against the sorrows that now assailed him on every side: sickness of body and of mind, poverty and all its ills, at once bore heavily on him; but he struggled to the last—still working hard at his profession, and paying his daily way by the sale of some trifling compositions.

M. FELICIEN DAVID.

In 1834, Felicien David, seduced by the promises of that collection of knaves and fools, called St. Simonians, at Paris, quitted the Conservatoire to enrol himself in their ranks. He was declared the composer of the society, and all the hymns which attracted so much notice in their meetings at Menilmontant were produced by him. The society was soon after broken up; the force of humbug could no longer sustain it, and the members were dispersed to seek fortune all over the world. Many of them now hold distinguished places, and consequently no prejudice can be entertained against David, for having, under the influence of an excited imagination, associated with them.

Our hero's lot was cast for Egypt, and we find him, in 1833, visiting every part of that remarkable country, and filling his mind with the impressions which are now produced in his great work. He extended his researches into Syria, and visited in succession Gaza, Jaffa, Jerusalem, St. Jean d'Acre, and Sidon. He next went to Constantinople and Smyrna, and paid a flying visit to all the Greek Isles of the Levant. He then returned to Egypt, and studied once more the immense and lonely desert on which he was to frame the great work that was to give him immortality. In 1833, he returned from the East, and, after a short residence in Provence, he came to Paris, where he at once set to work, and published a series of Oriental Melodies, with the hope of making his name known to the public, and of preparing the way to more serious compositions. But his melodies had no success—a patron was wanting—his name was unknown in the market; and, as if to drive him to despair, the greater part of the edition and the plates of the music were burned at the great fire which destroyed the Italian Opera in 1833, and the houses adjoining, in one of which his papers were deposited. David was now so weighed down by misfortune that he was forced to accept the hospitality of M. Tourneur, at whose country seat he lived for three years, very rarely coming to Paris, and spending all his time in studying the harmonies of Beethoven.



In 1838 and 1839, two grand symphonies of David's were executed at the concert-rooms of Valentine and Musard; but they did not take with the public, as he failed to adopt the usual resource of unknown composers, and force himself into notice by means of puffing and paid paragraphs. He still persevered, and, supported by a few kind-hearted friends, he obtained at last permission to give a concert at the Conservatoire. He then determined to compose the "Desert," and having procured the words from M. Collin, of Marseilles, a gentleman who accompanied him in his wanderings, he created, in the space of three months, this sublime composition. The object he had in view was to convey, with the aid of harmony and melody, the impressions produced on his mind by the immensity and solitude of the desert. He sought to describe the passing of a caravan, the repose at night, and the destruction of the travellers by the Simoon. All this he has accomplished in a magical manner. Nothing can be more sublime, more terrific, and affecting. The Symphonic Ode combines all the force of Beethoven, the wildness of Weber, and the delicacy of Cimarosa. The "Desert" was performed at the Conservatoire on the 8th of Dec. last year. It was at once successful, and Felicien David was rewarded for all his pains and sufferings. Like Lord Byron, "in one day he was famous." The Desert was afterwards performed at the Italian Opera House. That great theatre was crowded to an overflow by all the rank, talent, and musical public in the metropolis. The Ode was again crowned with success; and it is already placed in harmonic archives alongside the masterpieces of Beethoven.

EASTER MONDAY AT THE TOWER.

The Spanish Armada came to show
Itself as a stout and a valiant foe,
But little the boasters seem'd to know,
Or even to guess,
What good Queen Bess
Had in store for their final overthrow.
Here does she ride
In her Majesty's pride,
As she rode in her victory long ago!

Although Government liberality has not yet rendered the Tower one of the "gratuitous exhibitions" of the metropolis, the fine old prison-fortress was thickly besieged on Monday by curious visitors; and, probably, during the day, there were not less than a thousand persons admitted to the Armouries alone, at the reduced charge of 6d. The increase of visitors, since the reduction of the admission money in 1838, has been tenfold, which shows, at least, an inclination in the public to know something of the ancient costume and weapons of their ancestors. At present, we shall confine our Illustration to the Elizabethan Armoury, in which the ancient weapons in use previously to the general adoption of the musquet among our troops may be examined. This collection was formerly called the Spanish Armoury, from the fable of its having been formed from the spoils of the Armada. The name has, however, for some time, been changed to the more appropriate title of Queen Elizabeth's Armoury, most of the weapons contained in it being of the period of her reign or of those immediatly preceding. It is, altogether, a very interesting collection; its foreign character is referred by the author of an ingenious treatise on ancient armour, to the anxiety of Queen Elizabeth to maintain the hardy character of her people, joined to the desire for warlike expeditions to foreign shores which seemed to actuate the whole British nation in the days of Raleigh and Essex and Sydney; for which purpose many improvements and importations from Italy and Spain were effected in the fashion of armour and warlike instruments of this period.

Queen Elizabeth's Armoury was formerly in a building opposite the south-western corner of the Horse Armoury. It is now removed to the White Tower, entering which, through a passage formed in the eastern wall, (here 14 feet in thickness, of solid masonry) the visitors pass into the Armoury, the apartment assigned by tradition as the prison of Sir Walter Raleigh; the dark closet pajoining is said to have been his sleeping room. But the place no longer bears the appearance of a prison-lodging, nor can we look upon it as it was when Raleigh paced its floor to and fro. The inscriptions yet existing on the wall have, however, been carefully preserved: they were principally written by prisoners confined here during Mary's reign, for their share in Wyatt's conspiracy. Facing the coved, or entrance end of the room, is a deeply recessed arch, where the presiding genius of the place appears in all her majesty, Queen Elizabeth herself, in costume, said to be a fac-simile of that worn by her on going to St. Paul's to return thanks for the delivery of her kingdom from the threatened invasion of the Spaniards. Her horse is led by a page in the costume of the period; and by her side is an archer of the guard, wearing a brigantine jacket and morion.

EASTER MONDAY.—THE ELIZABETHAN ARMOURY TOWER OF LONDON.

The chief contents of this Armoury, including many varieties of lances, long swords, pikes, musketoons, battle-axes, &c., were formerly shown to wondering visitors as the spoils of the Spanish Armada. "Down even to the times of our excellent great-grandfathers and grandmothers, people used to go and look at the various instruments of torture here exhibited, and lift up their hands and eyes in amazement at the cruelty of the Spaniards, and the wonderful escape we had all had from those devilish instruments." Later researches have satisfactorily shown these to be chiefly of English manufacture.

A systematic view of the contents of this interesting room would occupy nearly as many columns as we have lines to spare; we shall, therefore, merely premise that the collection consists chiefly of weapons of the 15th and 16th centuries. Among the more interesting individual objects are two very curious swords, which hang against the wall covered with black rust, and one much eaten away: they are said to have been used by crusaders, in the Holy Wars. Next is the Morion Star, or Holy-Water Sprinkle, a ball of wood, armed with iron spikes, and fixed at the end of a long pole; a weapon in use among the infantry from the time of the Conquest till the reign of Henry VIII., whose "walking-staff" it was reputed to have been.

On the floor of the Armoury are some of the most attractive relics, as the Heading Block on which the Lords Balmerino, Kilmarnock, and Lovat were decapitated on Tower Hill, in 1746; the Heading Axe, reputed to be the one used in the execution of the Earl of Essex, in the reign of Elizabeth; some curious shields and crossbows, targets, &c. We must not, however, forget the Thumb-screws, or Thumbikin, an instrument used to extort confession, and applied by compressing the thumbs between two bars of iron by means of the screw, which was then made fast by a lock. Beneath them is a veritable specimen of Spanish ingenuity—the "Iron Collar of Torment, taken from ye Spanyard in ye yeare 1588;" and the Cravat, an iron instrument for confining at once the head, hands, and feet: it was also called "the Scavenger's Daughter," or "Skeffington's Daughter," a name said to have been derived from its inventor, one Skeffington.

Probably, the most circumstantial guide to the Tower Armouries will be found in Mr. Hewitt's little volume, published by authority of the Master-General and Board of Ordnance, at the Tower.

There are, in the above collection, some arms of much higher antiquity than the Elizabethan period; but, a few of the more rare descriptions of weapons are models only: these are, in all cases, distinguished by their staves being painted red.

EASTER MONDAY.—THE GREAT ZOOLOGICAL GALLERY, BRITISH MUSEUM.

EASTER MONDAY AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

A motley crowd was gather'd there
As ever throng'd a show—
Many as worthy of a stare
Themselves, I well do trow,
As those strange things they came to see,
Things pick'd up throughout Christendee!

Foremost among the more intellectual recreations of last Monday, must rank a visit to the British Museum; and, if any evidence were wanting to stimulate the liberality of Parliament in voting grants of money for the improvement and increase of this grand national treasury of Nature and Art, the living stream which passed, for hours, continuously through the saloons in Great Russell-street, on Easter Monday, would surely have convinced the most obdurate economist; and even William Cobbett, who sneered at the Museum as a heap of "dead insects," would have been moved by so many thousands of the classes whose interests he claimed more especially to advocate.

The British Museum, as all our readers may recollect, has been for several years in course of rebuilding. A considerable portion of the principal front, already engraved in of our journal has been completed, and, by its handsome appearance, bids fair to disarm many of the abusers of the architect's design. As the new building is internally finished, the Museum contents are re-arranged in the respective apartments; this "transition state" being far preferable to the closing of the Museum for some months, for an entire re-arrangement.

Among the noble saloons already finished, the Great Zoological Gallery, represented in our engraving, proved the greatest attraction to the holiday folks of Monday. This vast gallery was formerly occupied by Minerals, but is now appropriated to Birds and Shells: the room is 300 feet long, and 50 wide, and contains one of the richest ornithological collections in Europe. The cases are glazed with large sheets of plate glass, with very numerous brass bars: the smaller Birds are arranged on a new plan, on box-shelves, each bird having a close back-ground, so as to show its outline distinctly, and relieve its colours; and the Shells, occupying several table-cases, are exhibited on black velvet, which gives them admirable relief.

The birds, unquestionably, form the most popular attraction in the Museum; and, probably, this was never more evident than on Monday. Then, how interesting it was to watch the visitors, alike wonder-struck with the gigantic emu and the diminutive humming-bird; whilst others might be seen busy among the cases of Shells—"the glory of the sea," as they have been poetically termed.

The Ornithological Department is admirably arranged. The system observed is that of Temminck, whose generic names are, in most cases, adopted, with the specific names of Linnæus, and the English synonymes of Latham. Thus, we have in the first division of cases, the Raptorial birds, as vultures, eagles, falcons, buzzards, kites, and owls: next are the Perching-birds, subdivided into the goat-suckers and swallows; the honey-eaters and wheatears; the crows and finches; and the parrots and woodpeckers; to these succeed the Gallinaceous birds—pigeons, turtles, pheasants, partridges: then the Waders, comprising the ostriches, trumpeters, storks; and, lastly the Web-footed, as the flamingoes, swans, and ducks. Ranged to correspond with the cases of the birds, and placed opposite them, are other cases of their eggs; thus completing the systematic illustration.

We must pass rapidly by the more minute, yet scarcely less wondrous Shells, to say a few words on the Portraits, which line the upper walls of the Gallery. They are considerably more than 100 in number; and, though of various grades of merit, deserved better housing than the attics of the Museum buildings, wherein they lay hidden for several years; till, at the suggestion of an eminent printseller of the metropolis, the pictures were removed from their dusty depository, and now form a goodly muster of sovereigns, statesmen, heroes, and men of science; in short, of almost every variety of character; and they are, we believe, the largest collection of portraits in the kingdom. The execution of many of them is but indifferent; there are others which are exceedingly curious, and some unique. Great part of them came into the Museum from having belonged to the Slonean, Cottonian, and other collections, which now form the magnificent library; and others have been the gifts of individuals. A very interesting catalogue raisonnée of these portraits was printed in the Times, in the year 1838.

The Northern Zoological Gallery is devoted chiefly to Reptiles; to apes and monkeys; rats and mice, porcupines, hares, and squirrels; and to the spiny-rayed and anomalous fish. On the floor of this gallery, are cases filled with Insects, Crustacea, Corals, Starfish, Sponges, &c.; and, against the walls, above the cases, are ranged the larger sword-fish, sturgeon, and conger.

Of course, our descriptive journey might be extended through many saloons and columns; but, enough for the present, in illustrating the nucleus of attraction during the recent Easter visit.

EASTER HOLIDAYS.

AMUSEMENTS OF THE PEOPLE.

Although the previous cold weather of the month—"the wintry aspect of this freezing March"—had originated a sort of prophecy that this Easter would be a North-Easter, yet the Boreas did not come, but, on the contrary, a most genial moderation of temperature, with a fine dry sky, and a pleasant stream of sunshine, began this festive week, and made the famous holiday, Monday, a pourer of gladness in the hearts of the people. A fine burst of busy joy has been waking echoes in fair and field, and animating the soul of city and of suburb; and although upon such high days the flood of loosened merriment will sometimes overflow its banks, and pass the bounds of staid discretion, yet it is a cheerful thought that the amount of enjoyment in which the million revel, with an annual delight, is generally innocent, and in recent years has become rational and even instructive in its pleasure. This is not more owing to the improved regulations of our fairs, and of the limit of extravagance and duration in the quirps and sports which accompany them, than to a general direction of public curiosity in the metropolis to the more intelligent and elevated order of amusement which is to be found in the many remarkable exhibitions of London, and which afford varied information and entertainments to thousands who prefer the mental pabulum they offer to the attractions of the booths of Stepney, or the more rollicking gambolings of Greenwich, with all the laughter-rousing adventures of its One-tree-hill.

It is a pleasant and refreshing recreation to lounge through the exhibitions in an Easter week, and watch the various emotions and excitements of the emancipated holiday-makers. It also presents to the journalist a fair opportunity of giving an annual—and, if we take in Christmas-time, a biennial—notice of the exhibitions themselves, which, as they are continually ministering to public amusement, deserve to be re-mindfully kept before the public attention. We have this week, therefore, availed ourselves of a ramble with the million; and let us now see into what comfortable quarters of recreation we have borne them company.

Foremost as place of popular resort, is wherein the intellectual and instructive so greatly predominate over the merely curious; and it indicates a rising intelligence and thirst of knowledge on the part of the people, to find them flocking to the regions of mechanical contrivance, and the progress of science and the arts. Doctor Ryan's chemical lectures are daily opening wider to the public mind the beautiful and interesting field of inquiry in which he has engaged, while it has been humorously said of the directors of the institution, that they only bring forward Professor Backhoffner, that he may bring the people oftener back!

Amid the thousand objects which attract and distract the attention of the holiday crowd in this place, they will, while in the act of enquiring and learning, still have their quiz, joke, remark, and repartee; and the natural sallies of buoyant minds buzz merrily through the place, and keep its very knowledge alive in an atmosphere of smiles and laughter. Thus a young lady, "with silken cheek and chin devoid of hair," proclaims her intention of having her portrait taken "by the Beard;" while a gentleman inquires of the diving bell if it would not be possible to give it a galvanic ring! Some gallant cockney puzzles the fair one on his arm by announcing that he has brought coals to Newcastle, and then wakes her titter with the explanation that there could be no necessity to bring among so many models one who is a model of perfection in herself! A lady in heavy silk rustles by some of the beautiful engines, and a holiday man behind likens her to a modern chummy, because she is sweeping by machinery. Jokes about being perfectly shocked at the practice of electricity—getting up the steam for the holidays &c.—passed in abundance; and when some fine talker declared it beautiful to see the way in which the Institution had been rocked in the cradle of science, a wag retorted, "It was no wonder, for the principal director was a Nurse!" Ainsi va le monde of the Polytechnic at Easter. So you are told at

MADAME TUSSAUD'S INSTITUTION,

That every one who goes there must wax eulogistic; and when the ejaculations of wondering admirers echo round the rooms, somebody insinuates his surprise that the warmth of the praises does not melt the figures.

Madame Tussaud's is certainly an exhibition of remarkable interest, by reason first of the eventful histories that attach to the characters, and next of the air of life which is called into their effigies, not more by the truth and beauty of the waxen sculpture than by the vivid reality of costume, imitated in all its guises and colours. Persons may really make themselves as familiar with the external demeanour and appearance of public men of celebrity in former times, as if they were living in our own day; and those who, like our Easter holiday-makers, cannot always go to the bar, the pulpit, or the senate, to make acquaintance with the "popularities" of the present hour, may have what is next door to a personal introduction to them under the auspices of Madame Tussaud. So completely is the fac-simile of the personnel preserved, that as you watch the unaccustomed visitors pressing by the groups it is by no means uncommon to hear an old gentleman apologise for having brushed the coat of Canning, or a young lady beg pardon for treading on the toe of Burdett! The real people, in fact, continually take the figures for real people too.

What Madame Tussaud has effected for the interest and celebrity of the art to which she has devoted herself, poor Miss Linwood did for poetry and painting in wondrous needlework. She has lately died full of years and honour, and in our last paper were recorded not only her genius and her virtue, but a noble portrait of her intelligent face. We do not know if her splendid gallery remains open, but if it do, there is no more delightful visiting spot for the temporary resort of those who are genuine lovers of pure and elevated art.

We cannot, however, expect so vast a progress in that refinement which is one element of the enjoyment of pictorial art (the public taste is happily leading even towards this, and has had we hope a very significant and powerful impetus upon the right path by our own exertions to familiarize the beauties of art to the people by means of an Illustrated Press), as should carry holiday crowds to Panoramas, Dioramas, Cosmoramas, and Picture Galleries, with such a multitudinous patronage as they bestow upon institutions which have the advantage of greater number, novelty, and curiosity in their subjects. Nor, on the other hand, are even these rushed into so rapidly as the theatre or the fair. Still we met a good sprinkling of her Majesty's lieges at the Cosmorama, Regent-street, where a series of beautiful and instructive subjects are produced, admirably painted, and finely aided in their magnificent effect by very clever and ingenious machinery.

THE CHINESE COLLECTION,

Reposing in Celestial dignity within the Palatial Pagoda of the Park of Hyde, has been so often illustrated by us in this journal, that we have little more to say of its very curious and complete attraction. Public interest in it will long preserve a freshness while new sources of commercial enterprize and social communication are opening up between the strange people whose whole country it illustrates, and the subjects of our own realms; and John Bull, when he comes from his rural farm, or turns out for his metropolitan holiday, will still crave a further acquaintance with the Celestial tribes who send him his Bohea and Souchong—his Hyson and his Gunpowder—through the divulging and instructing influences of this remarkable exhibition.

GAIETIES AND GRAVITIES OF THE WEEK.

The news out of Parliament, and in the Easter week, is even of a gossiping character—it oscillates between foreign gravity and domestic gaiety—between the chances of a war with America, and the adventures or misadventures of a Greenwich fair. Or, reversing this order, it has domestic tragedy in the shape of executions for murder to contrast with the Parisian Carnival, and the promenade of the Longchamps parading the fashions of the spring. The people, meanwhile—like the Legislature—do not much busy themselves with a consideration of public affairs. They will have their holiday whether it be outside the debtors' door at Newgate—crushing each other to death in a morbid furor, after criminal retributions—or dancing the Polka in Richardson's booth. Very right they should, too, have their sprinkle of happiness—only we would rather they should seek it in the Park than by the felon's gaol—and it would please us to know that the million gathered the inspiration of their enjoyments from more wholesome sources than the curiosity which is whetted either by the sympathy with, or the execration against crimes of enormity. The scene at Tapping's execution on Easter Monday, was most horrible; and the loud applauses of the populace—as though the culprit on the scaffold had been some great actor performing life's last tragedy on life's last stage—and enacting moreover, the part of hero in the dark performance, sounded like the death knell of public morality and leaves a horrid impression upon the heart. These public executions do a mischief far surpassing the value of their example.

To turn to public affairs. It seems to us that Ministers will have their work cut out for them to know how to deal with America. Mr. Polk's presidentship has commenced after an inaugural ceremony, which had in it a good deal of republican mummery, with nothing that was imposing, but with this remarkable feature, that it was not attended by a single member of the diplomatic corps. This might have been accident or design; but it is not a bad commentary upon the fact that diplomacy with America so far resembles the pecuniary contracts of that vivacious country, that so far as good faith is concerned, it is of very little use. For instance a diplomatic negotiation is now pending between Great Britain and the United States upon the subject of the Oregon territory, and Mr. Polk, as chief magistrate, comes before the country with an address in which he states that the right of America to that territory is "clear and unquestionable." We guess he will find it not only pretty considerably questionable, but pretty considerably questioned, and we shall be tarnation flabbergasted if the "I wish you may get it" of John Bull is not at least as forcible as the "clear and unquestionable" of Mr. President Polk. Touching the annexation of Texas the same worthy has also ripped up the old farrago of its having belonged to America before, and evolved the logical query as a sort of sequitur of, therefore—"Why shouldn't they have it again." He is, at all events, favourable to the annexation.

It is amusing enough in the meanwhile to hear him giving monarchical names to the various divisions of his precious Republic.

He says in his address, that each State is a "distinct Sovereignty," and that the whole Union is a "distinct Sovereignty," a contradiction in terms about as admissible as the justice of the annexation of Texas, or the claim to the Oregon territory. In a serious point of view, however, owing to the position of power in which this ambitious Polkist is placed, his mad opinions may work considerable influence upon the destinies of Europe, and are especially to be regarded by this country with decisive circumspection. If the Congress should deem it expedient to follow out the views, which his inaugural address implies are likely to be propounded by the President, we do not see how Great Britain is to escape from a war.

The question of Texas might become one of arrangement, though not without the imminence of a dangerous crisis, but that of Oregon admits of no compromise, and in it the rights of this country must be vindicated without the cession of one inch of their legitimate footing. Lord Aberdeen is a hard-headed politician of the coldest diplomatic school, with sufficient amor patriæ and Scotch feeling moreover, in favour of sticking to what is his country's and his own, to ensure to society a conviction that, so far as he is concerned, we are likely to have either an Oregon territory or an American war, or both, as the issue of battle or negotiation may decide. These matters are fast drawing to a consummation, and the cautious eyes of politicians, above all of governing politicians, cannot be directed upon them with too watchful vigilance.

All over Switzerland they are expelling the Jesuits, and all over London they are stealing the dogs. It may be all very pleasant for a Swiss to get rid of a Jesuit whom he hates, but it is not altogether so gratifying for an English gentleman to lose an animal to which he is attached. Upon the principle of "look at home," therefore, we throw overboard the Jesuits, and adhere to the dogs and gentlemen, more especially as the quadrupeds and bipeds last implied have this week received a heavy blow and a great discouragement at the hands of magisterial authority. It appears, that amongst a number of the biped race who have had their dogs stolen, was a Mr. Vulliamy, who being directed or escorted to some depôt for canine theft, is there refused the restoration of the dog stolen, although there before him, and in all the ecstatic agencies of joyful recognition, unless he consents to be forthwith mulcted, in a sum, according to his own statement, exactly forty-eight times the value of the animal decoyed. In the event of his refusing this, the cool dog-stealer propounds the other alternative, to kill the dog and throw it to the dogs; in other words, to hurl its carcase into the street, to test the difference of pressure between the wheel of a gentleman's carriage and that of a brewer's dray. "You love your dog," says the dog-stealer, "and he is worth half-a-crown; it would be palpably absurd to ask you to pay six pounds for your dog, but if you have a spark of humanity in you, or of dogmanity in you, I will make you pay six pounds for your love; if you don't, hocus-pocus presto! Pincher dies! Upon this Mr. Vulliamy goes to consult Mr. Hall, no doubt upon a case of open-mouthed, profligate, and defying felony, but Mr. Hall abrogates the magisterial responsibility of taking cognizance of anything so trifling as a theft, when the thief is not brought before him, gives Mr. Vulliamy the gratuitous information that Bow-street is not an advertising office, and that he, Mr. Hall (the country ought to congratulate itself) is not an M.P., and advises him to seek redress in the columns of a morning newspaper!! We do readily admit that morning newspapers, and newspapers generally, frequently enforce the redress of grievances which magistrates would leave in their pristine state of injustice; but, in the meanwhile, Mr. Vulliamy compromises with the dog-stealer for thirty-two times the amount of his animal's value, and pays him four pounds for his half-crown favourite instead of six. It strikes us that when saddlers and cobblers sat upon the stipendiary bench, their qualifications for administering justice proved nearly as efficient as those of some of our briefless promoted, who have graduated in the inns of court.

So much for stipendiary; now for unpaid wisdom. A man in Buckinghamshire, being threatened with a thr shing from some other lumpkin of the same locality, applies to the magistrates to have the menacer bound to keep the peace. Those solons thought the case too trivial, and so perhaps it was; but they further added the following piece of advice, with the persuasion of Nestor and the caution of Ulysses:—"Carry with you a thick stick, and if he molest you, lay the stick about his back." The man takes the advice of the magistrates, and speedily possesses himself of a bludgeon. His opponent, hearing of the shillelah, picks up a rusty bayonet, and, with true military ardour, carries it about in his pocket in defiance of the blackthorn of the magistrates' pet. The rivals meet, and there is a scrambling encounter, in which th stick does a little mischief, and the bayonet draws a very little blood. The man with the bayonet is taken up for stabbing, and in order to show that he has no more chance against the stick, before the judge, than he had before the magistrates, he is tried as that revolting animal which Eugene Sue calls a "chourineur," and sentenced by Mr. Justice Parke to FIFTEEN YEARS TRANSPORTATION!! This comes of magistrates recommending blackthorns.

What has the Colonial Office been at, in meddling with the Malta currency? Wherein has the heavy dollar so offended Lord Stanley or the Treasury, that one or either of them should curtail it of its fair proportions? Why should the confiding Maltese, who fancied that he had four and twopence in his pocket, with every "gracious impress of the country's coin," be electrically roused to the conviction that he has only four shillings? We did not much like, in money-changing London, paying the differences between the heavy sovereigns and the light; the penny or twopence in the pound, which we lost by the wear and tear of our specie, seemed a grievance to us here, but what must it be in little mercantile Malta, for people of all degrees to lose twopence in the dollar, because some idler in the English Ministry has taken a fit of industry, and vented it in the scribbling of the Colonial Despatch.

Lord Ellenborough gives Sir Charles Napier a sword, and Glasgow, Sir Henry Pottinger a dinner; two or three Generals have fallen out of life, but General Tom Thumb has been fêted at the Tuileries, and multiplying himself into a number of Grecian statues to delight the classicality of the King of the French.

The Dublin Royal Society has professed a similar enthusiasm for the Greek drama, and has concentrated it upon the persen of Helen Faucit, in the form of an elegant brooch. The Philharmonic Society, in the pursuit of its hot career of mismanagement, has been obliged to curtail its mismanagement, and to forego Dragonetti. The Easter theatres have filled capitally. The Suffolk-street Gallery is open, and there is just now a considerable abundance of literature and art. We have not been to Greenwich Fair, but intend to go next Whitsuntide.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

EXECUTION OF THE BETHNAL GREEN MURDERER.

On Monday morning, James Tapping was executed at Newgate, for the murder of Emma Whiter, at Bethnal-green.

The conduct of the wretched man, both before and since conviction, was marked by the strictest propriety of demeanour.

The wretched man mounted the scaffold without the slightest assistance, and walked deliberately forward towards the centre of the drop. In this position he stood for a moment, apparently contemplating the sea of upturned faces directed towards him. He then bowed thrice in a somewhat theatrical manner, turning himself successively to the west, north, and south. This unusual movement was greeted by loud cheers and clapping of hands from the crowd. As soon as he had thus bowed, he appeared about to address the assemblage in front of the scaffold, but the buzz which arose from the mass of human beings congregated evidently convinced him that it was useless to attempt to make himself heard, and turning to the chaplain and ordinary, his last words were, "I acknowledge the justice of my sentence, and I forgive everyone, as I hope by God's blessing to be forgiven." He then shook hands successively with the executioner, the ordinary, and Mr. Sheriff Sydney, grasping the hands of the latter gentleman, and kissing them with great apparent fervour. The wretched man then resumed his position in the centre of the drop, and looked up with apparent curiosity at the beam and fatal chain. The cap was immediately drawn over his face, the rope adjusted, and the unfortunate felon, whose firm nerves never for a moment deserted him, was turned off, and died without a struggle.

Tapping was a young man of rather prepossessing appearance, and had scarcely completed his 22d year. He wore a black velveteen shooting jacket and grey striped trousers, and had a very clean and neat appearance.

The crowd at one period must have numbered between 6000 and 7000 persons. The majority seemed to have made their pilgrimage to Newgate the opening of a day's holiday.

THE LATE STEAM BOILER EXPLOSION AT BLACKWALL.—On Wednesday the coroner, and jury impannelled to inquire into the cause of the death of Thomas Wright, George Chapman, Richard Grimes, William Neale, and Jonathan Smith, the five individuals who lost their lives by the explosion of a steam boiler on the premises of Messrs. Samuda and Co., at Blackwall, reassembled at the Town Hall, Poplar, for the fifth time. The several witnesses were bound over to give evidence against George Lowe, the foreman, at the next Central Criminal Court. Previous to the jury being discharged they handed to the coroner a statement to the following effect:—"The jury cannot close this investigation without expressing their opinion that the application of low pressure boilers to high pressure purposes, is highly dangerous, and ought to be prohibited by law. And they are further of opinion, that the important facts elicited on the inquiry should be laid before her Majesty's Government, in the hope that some legislative enactment may be adopted, whereby, if possible, to prevent that fearful destruction of human life which arises under the present imperfect system." The Coroner said he should be happy to give effect to the opinion of the jury, which he thought to be a very proper one.

EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF TWO LIVES AT POPLAR.—On Saturday afternoon a fatal explosion took place in the manufactory belonging to Messrs. Robeson and Highams, patent signal light manufacturers, near Poplar. It appears that five or six persons were employed in the shop—a long range of shedding, one story in height—in the manufacture of the signal-lights; that one of them by accident fell from a shelf on to a stove used for the purpose of warming the building, and that it exploded with terrific violence. Engines having arrived and put out the fire, the ruins were searched by the firemen, and the bodies of a fine young girl, and a young man named Henry Jones, were found among the rubbish. The spectacle was dreadful. The shed in which the accident took place is only 30 yards in length, and 13 in breadth. There were two explosions, the second following the first at an interval of a few seconds. The names of the deceased were Henry Jones and Charlotte Exley. The former was in his 16th year, the latter was in her 13th. An inquest was held on the unfortunate sufferers on Tuesday evening, by Mr. Baker, at the Britannia Tavern, Limehouse. In the course of the examination, the coroner remarked that it would appear that the deceased, Charlotte Exley (thirteen years of age), was not acquainted with the nature of the combustibles she was intrusted with, and the jury could hardly feel that it was proper a child of her inexperience should have been permitted to have had the handling of such dangerous articles. Mr. John Higham, the partner of Mr. Robeson, in the manufacture of the patent signal light, was of opinion that the mode of ignition used in the patent must have been accidentally used by the deceased Exley. He was packing up some of the lights for her Majesty's Customs, and found some of them improperly labelled, and he gave them back to Charlotte Exley to do properly. His impression was that in taking off one of the labels she withdrew the tin slide, and, having injudiciously placed it back again, ignited the light, and in her alarm dropped it amongst some others. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

A MAN KILLED AT STEPNEY FAIR.—On Monday night a very appalling accident happened to a man of colour named Morris, whilst engaged in turning one of the ponderous circular swings at Stepney fair, and which, we regret to add, terminated in his instant death. The unfortunate man was on a kind of a platform at work at a large fly-wheel, which moved the machine, full 30 feet from the ground, when the handle suddenly moved round, overbalancing him, and before he could recover himself, he was precipitated over the platform on to the ground, falling on his head with much violence. He was instantly removed to the surgery of Mr. Faulkner, when it was found that he was quite dead, the heavy fall having apparently broken his neck. It is stated that the sad accident was entirely attributable to the man's own fool-hardiness. It is usual in these machines to provide against danger to the man at the wheel by erecting a breast-work around the scaffold in which he is employed, but Morris refused to avail himself of this precaution, alleging that he worked with more ease and freedom in its absence.

STRANGE SUICIDE OF A TRADESMAN IN THE CITY.—On Monday evening Mr. Joseph Payne held an inquest at the Blossoms Inn, Lawrence-lane, Cheapside, on the body of Mr. Thomas Smith, aged 33, painter and glazier, at No. 10, in the above lane. From the evidence of the witnesses it appeared that the deceased had been unusually dull, low-spirited, and taciturn, for the last few days, a change in his disposition which could not be accounted for. He went out early on Sunday, and his wife supposed him to be out the whole day; but as he remained out all night, and as she could not learn where he was gone, the house was searched, and he was found in one of the cellars hanging by the neck. He had been dead some hours. His affairs were in a favourable state, and no cause could be given for either the sudden change in his temper or his suicide. Verdict, "Temporary insanity."

COUNTRY NEWS.

Execution at Reading.—On Saturday last Thomas Jennings was executed in front of the New Gaol, Reading, in the presence of nearly 6000 persons. It will be remembered that the criminal was tried before Mr. Baron Platt, at the Berkshire Assizes, on the 3rd instant, for the wilful murder of his daughter at the village of Thatcham. The evidence adduced was so clear that the jury, without hesitation, returned a verdict of guilty, but, strange as it may appear, they recommended him to mercy. The learned judge, however, in passing sentence, held out not the least hope of mercy in this world. Since his trial the reverend ordinary has been most unremitting in his care of the condemned criminal, who, to the last, steadfastly maintained his innocence. That he perpetrated the horrible crime no reasonable being could doubt, notwithstanding he persevered in saying, up to Friday, that "his Eleazer had been murdered by a girl, who saw him put away a bottle containing arsenic, which he had procured in order to destroy some mice." The greater portion of Friday was spent by the chaplain with the criminal, with whom he prayed most earnestly, during which time Jennings frequently sobbed aloud, yet no confession was made by him that we heard of. On Saturday, at an early hour, the reverend chaplain visited the wretched man, and remained with him until the last moment of his earthly career. At twelve o'clock the prison bell commenced to toll. About five minutes past twelve o'clock the mournful procession reached the top of the gaol, headed by the chaplain, who read, in a most impressive manner, the burial service. Jennings followed, with his eyes turned heavenwards. In the course of a few minutes the fatal bolt was drawn, and the wretched man was soon dead The body having hung the usual time, it was cut down and taken inside the gaol.

The Murder in Derbyshire and Suicide of the Murderer.—Last week we mentioned that Joseph Hawksley, farmer, of Whittington, a village two miles north of Chesterfield, was apprehended at Sheffield on suspicion of having murdered Mrs. Green, at the latter place, on Thursday, the 13th inst. Mrs. Green was discovered dying by the neighbours. On the arrival of the prisoner in Chesterfield, he was brought up before E. G. Maynard, Esq. The prisoner was remanded till the following Wednesday On that day the inquiry was proceeded with. A number of witnesses were examined, whose testimony made out a case of grave suspicion against the prisoner. After a hearing, which lasted four hours, the prisoner was remanded till Monday week, to afford time for further inquiries. We now supply full particulars, so far as they have transpired in evidence The deceased, a Mrs. Elizabeth Green, was a widow, aged 68, who resided in a farm-house, situated about the centre of the straggling village of Whittington, and close to the separation of the old roads leading from Chesterfield to Eckington and Sheffield respectively. About twelve months ago the son-in-law of the deceased, Joseph Hawksley, came to live in a part of the house which was partitioned off. Hawksley having neglected to pay his rent, quarrels arose between him and the deceased. The former was heard to threaten her, and she was subsequently found with her throat cut, and died of the wound, which had been inflicted by a razor. From an examination of the premises it appears that the deceased had been cleaning the hearth, as a pail full of dirty water was standing on the right side of the fire-place. The front of the hearth was clean, and one of the stones of the floor was wet, a rubbing stone lying upon it. Between these and a carpet there were several large drops of blood, and a razor lying close beside them. The false curls worn by the deceased lay at some little distance, and a piece of ribbon, spotted with blood, and similar to that upon her cap, was also found on the floor. Blood was traced to the back door, on which there were a number of spots of blood, and marks of five bloody fingers. The key and the bolts were also marked in a like manner. The drops of blood were traced down the causeway, across the grass-plot to the gate, on which there is a mark, as though a bloody hand had been laid upon it. Mr. Boddington, surgeon, arrived at the spot about a quarter-past ten o'clock on the morning in question; but Mrs. Green had ceased to exist some time before his arrival. At the close of a long hearing before the magistrates, the prisoner was committed to take his trial for murder. The examination terminated at four o'clock, shortly after which the prisoner was taken back to the prison. At six o'clock he was seen alive by the wife of the keeper, but at a quarter to seven, on Mr. Hollingworth (the keeper) entering the cell, he found him hanging by his neck-cloth to one of the hinges of the door. He was immediately cut down, but life proved to be extinct. At the close of the examination the prisoner had declined to make any defence, but requested the magistrates to come down to the prison on the following evening, when, said he, "I will tell you all about it, and prove that I am innocent." It is now evident that this request was a mere feint to divert attention from his purpose.

The tunnel which is in the course of construction on the line of the Chester and Wrexham Railway, near to Dodleston, about five miles from Chester, gave way last week.

A SKETCH OF TAWELL'S HISTORY.

John Tawell, the unhappy man who was executed yesterday at Aylesbury, was born in 1784; was the second son of Thomas Tawell, who for a considerable number of years kept a general shop in the parish of Adleby, a village in Norfolk, about six miles from Beccles. In this quiet and secluded village the subject of this memoir was born, and spent much of his childhood and early youth. He received a plain and useful education—such as would serve the pursuits of trade for which he was intended—at the village school. At this school John Tawell continued for about seven years, and became a proficient in the humble sciences which constituted the amount of his teacher's professional stores.

John Tawell, about the year 1798, entered the service of a widow (one of the Society of Friends) who kept a general shop in the village of Pakefield, near Lowestoft, in Suffolk. In this situation he remained about five years; and by the activity and industry of his life, and the strict decorum of his habits, he gained the confidence of his employer and the respect of her customers, who were chiefly the inhabitants of that and the adjacent villages. It was here that Tawell was induced to attach himself to the views, and to adopt the garb, the phraseology, and the other general characteristics of the Society of Friends. While in this situation Tawell formed a rather close intimacy with Joseph Hunton, the Quaker linen-draper, who in 1828 was executed at Newgate for forgery. At that time Hunton resided at Yarmouth; Tawell went occasionally there on business for his employer, and also on "first days" often went thither for the purpose of attending worship in the Friends' meeting house in that town. The young men frequently met, and thus an intimacy sprung up between two persons whose subsequent career in vice, though somewhat varied as to the character of their respective crimes, afterwards procured for both an undesirable notoriety, and an ignominious death on the scaffold. Hunton was detected and executed after Tawell had been transported for an offence of the same class. As Hunton was known to have been long engaged in the practice of forging and negotiating forged bills of exchange—which, as they became due, he paid with the proceeds of other forgeries—it is by no means improbable that Tawell's intimacy with Hunton, which he continued after his arrival in London, might have gradually undermined his moral principles, and suggested the idea of forgery as the means of raising pecuniary supplies. Hunton had married a Quaker lady of Yarmouth, of highly respectable connections there; and, at the time of his apprehension for the forgery for which he was executed, and for some years previously, had been in business as a linen-draper, in Norton Folgate. On Tawell's return from Sydney, he inquired after his old acquaintance, Hunton, and, on being informed of his fate, expressed much sympathy.

In the latter part of 1803, or beginning of 1804, Tawell entered London, bringing with him letters of introduction to some of the Society of Friends, from their Suffolk connexions. These speedily procured for him a situation with a member of their own community, a Mr. Janson, the proprietor of an extensive linendrapery establishment in Whitechapel. It was here that Tawell met with the young woman he afterwards married; but under circumstances which tended to diminish the respect he had acquired by his previously correct morals. This offence against morals was considerably increased by the fact, that Tawell was at the time carrying on a correspondence, with a view to marriage, with a young person of a respectable Quaker family at Yarmouth, with whom he had become intimate when a resident in Norfolk. Tawell and his wife were unhappy. The issue of this marriage was two sons, to whom reference has been made.

On leaving Mr. Janson's establishment, which he did soon after his marriage, Tawell obtained temporary employment in his own business. Being intelligent, active, and enterprising, he naturally sought for some pursuit more profitable in its remuneration, and better suited to his taste. At length he was recommended to Mr. Marsden, the head of an extensive wholesale drug and patent medicine establishment in the neighbourhood of Queen street, Cheapside. He was engaged to travel for the house; and evinced so much activity and business tact, combined with devoted zeal to the interests of his employers, that he was highly prized by them as an efficient and trustworthy representative. During all this time Tawell retained his preference for the peculiarities of the sect with which he had been early associated, and was known on the road as "the Quaker traveller." While in Mr. Marsden's employ, Tawell is supposed to have acquired that knowledge of drugs, their properties and uses, and the mode of preparing them for medicinal purposes, which he subsequently turned to good account in Sydney; and which suggested the idea of using prussic acid to destroy the life of the unfortunate woman whom he murdered. Tawell continued in this situation about seven years, and was again rising into respect. As an intelligent and pushing man of business, the confidential representative of a first-rate commercial house, Tawell was deserving of the respect in which he was held by those with whom he was brought into intercourse; and everything seemed to be proceeding, month after month, in a way at once satisfactory to his employers and advantageous to himself. At length the forgery on the Uxbridge Bank—the particulars of which were, to a considerable extent, suppressed at the time of its detection—burst upon the connexions of Tawell, and produced astonishment that one in whom so much confidence had been placed should have been induced to embark in a scheme, the failure and detection of which involved not merely the loss of character, but, at that time, the forfeiture of life. Having a forged Bank of England note in his possession at the time of his apprehension on the more serious charge—although there is reason to believe he had no guilty knowledge of its character—it was used as the means of procuring his escape from the consequences of the capital offence he had actually committed. The benevolent bankers (who were Quakers) were thus relieved from the necessity of prosecuting; the Bank of England took up the case of the forged note on their establishment; Tawell pleaded guilty by arrangement; and in 1814 was sent, a convict, to Sydney.

In that colony Tawell arrived in 1815. Here his knowledge of drugs immediately availed him. Instead of being assigned to a settler, and sent up the country, he was retained in the service of government, as one of the assistants in the convict hospital at Sydney. In this situation he continued rather more than three years. His intelligence, assiduity, and carefulness here also acquired for him the favourable regards of his superiors, and by their recommendation, the Governor, Major-General Macquarrie, first granted him a ticket of leave, and shortly afterwards an emancipation ticket. Aided by some friends he had made among the officials in the colony, Tawell first commenced business in a small shop in Hunter-street, Sydney; and, meeting with encouragement, subsequently removed to more commodious premises in Pitt-street. The shop being large, and having two spacious windows, one side was appropriated to drugs and chemicals, and the other was fitted up as a grocery store. Here Tawell rapidly grew rich. He embarked in the shipping trade; engaged in oil speculations; and was successful in all. The report of his prosperity had reached England. His wife, with her children, had received no aid from him. Notwithstanding his changed circumstances, she had been living in obscurity and want; and at length obtained a place of domestic servitude in the family of a gentleman residing in King's Arms yard, Coleman-street, London. A subscription was raised to provide her and her sons with necessaries for the voyage, and a free passage was obtained for her and them. They embarked, and arrived at Sydney in 1824—no very welcome visitants to Tawell, who had formed another female acquaintance. Tawell made the best of the matter. Mrs. Tawell was installed mistress of the house; the sons were furnished with employment; and, to do Tawell justice, he provided them with the necessary instructors, and thus gave them the means of preparing for a respectable station in society. During his early residence in the colony Tawell's father died; and when his circumstances improved, and he was acquainted with the fact that his mother required aid, he regularly remitted money to England for the relief of her necessities, until her death.

Having accumulated a large amount of wealth—at least between £30,000 and £40,000—Tawell determined on returning to his native country, from which he had been absent more than sixteen years. Upon his arrival in London in 1831, he, with his family, first resided in a house in Great Prescot-street, Whitechapel. Thence he removed to Trinity-square, Southwark, where he domiciled his wife and sons; but some affairs in Sydney requiring his personal attention, and having an opportunity of embarking, with a prospect of profit, a sum in the purchase of goods which he knew would meet with a ready sale in the Sydney markets, he set sale thither with a valuable cargo. By this speculation Tawell is said to have realized between £4000 and £5000. He returned home, having settled the business for which he undertook his voyage. Success in this undertaking induced Tawell to engage in another of a yet more extensive kind, and to embark once more for the scene of his success. On this occasion he took with him his wife and sons; the elder of whom, having completed his medical studies, he established in business in Sydney as a surgeon and apothecary, where, having first married, and after three or four years residence, he subsequently died. The death of this son deeply affected Tawell. He again determined on returning to England; and on his arrival took the house in Bridge-street, Southwark, so frequently alluded to on his trial, as that in which Sarah Hart was engaged to nurse Mrs. Tawell in her last illness, and where that acquaintance took place between the young nurse and her master which ultimately issued in her murder by her betrayer. Here Tawell assumed yet more strictly his characteristic preference for Quaker society; and employed his increased wealth in works of benevolence. Tawell was constant in his attendance on public worship at the Friends' meeting-house, and subscribed liberally to schools and other benevolent objects. We have heard from a credible source, that to one school connected with a Dissenting chapel in the Borough-road, he subscribed not less than £30 annually. He at length left the house in Bridge-street, and lived in retirement in the neighbourhood of Croydon, visiting Sarah Hart at different places where he had placed her in seclusion; at the same time paying his court most assiduously to the excellent but ill-fated lady who, unfortunately for herself, at length consented to become his wife.

Before Tawell left Sydney a dinner was given to him upon the occasion of his departure. The following is an extract from the Sydney Gazette, of Tuesday, Nov. 1, 1831:—

"Farewell Dinner.—On the evening of Saturday last, about 20 respectable colonists gave a farewell dinner, at Hart's tavern, to Mr. Tawell, an old and esteemed resident in Sydney, who is about to return to England by the first vessel. Mr. Samuel Terry presided on the occasion, and was well supported by Mr. Simon Lord as vice-president. After the cloth was removed, and the usual loyal toasts were drunk, the president, after some appropriate remarks, proposed the health of Mr. Tawell, who returned thanks for the honour conferred upon him by so many respectable gentlemen, assuring the company that whether he should return to the colony, or remain in England, the recollection of their kindness would ever be to him one of the greatest pleasures of his life. The health of Mrs. Tawell and family was also drunk, and acknowledged in suitable terms by Mr. Tawell. Several songs were sung in the course of the evening, and the company broke up about eleven o'clock, after enjoying one of the most convivial parties ever witnessed in the colony. The object of the entertainment, that of paying a well-deserved tribute of respect to an old colonist, now about to bid, perhaps, a final adieu to our shores, was not more creditable to the guest than to those by whom so high a compliment was paid to him."

On Wednesday morning the culprit's wife and her daughter, Miss Cutforth, together with the brother, Mr. W. Tawell, arrived to take their final farewell. The prisoner had prepared several memoranda for his wife. His wishes were committed to paper with great method and accuracy. Minute commissions were set down, and various small and outstanding accounts were mentioned. There is a chapel at Sydney upon which he has laid out £700 or £800, and to this he had given much attention. He at one time resolved upon making this property a present to the Society of Friends; but he has now determined that they shall only use it rent free for a certain period, and upon condition of their keeping it in repair. This and other matters were all adjusted, and, having mentioned a trifling debt or two, he congratulated himself upon not owing a penny, and remarked that if anything further should come across his mind he would commit it to paper. Upon this, as upon all former occasions, he never alluded to his crimes, nor in any of the numerous and long epistles which he has addressed to his wife, and to others of his family, has he mentioned the circumstances of the murder. The subject is one which he has always avoided. When pressed to reveal all that he knew concerning it, he always answered, "I am not prepared—I am not prepared." Mr. Wilcox, of Berkhampstead, urged him to confess so earnestly, that after his departure he expressed a disinclination to see his reverend friend again.

The latter part of the visit of Mrs. Tawell was spent in devotion. Her husband prayed earnestly and eloquently. Miss Cutforth was deeply affected, and wept nearly all the time. The convict, on Wednesday, passed a restless night, a circumstance which he attributes to having taken final leave of his wife. He did not retire to rest till a late hour. He took his breakfast next morning, however, with his wonted air of tranquillity, observing that he should require but little else throughout the day. Upon his being asked whether he was acquainted with what would soon occur, he said, "Yes, I suppose to-morrow is the day; I thought as much. Well, I have no complaint to make." He did not appear to be unusually cast down. His brother visited him again on Thursday.

The Bury Herald says, "It is not generally known that John Tawell lived in the early part of his life at Yarmouth, and served behind a grocer's counter either as an apprentice or assistant, or in both capacities. We have seen an inscription in his handwriting on a piece of card-paper, which evidently at one time formed one of the covers of a book. The inscription consists of the murderer's name, and adds that it was written in remembrance of a lady (who had probably given him the book), and who died during his residence at her father's shop. It bears the date of year 1799. This fact disproves the general assertion that Tawell is now about fifty; he must be at least sixty, and probably sixty five. The mistake in the orthography, and the imperfect style of the penmanship generally, is quite consistent with the amount and quality of education which it is probable Tawell ever received. His mother was left a widow, with four or five children, and lived at Whitacre, near Hadisco, Suffolk. She kept a chandlery shop in the village, but by industry and good character, and assisted by the support of those who were "Friends" in other senses of the word than a nominal one, she succeeded in getting her children out. We hear that there is a married daughter now living at Whitacre. The scrap of paper has been preserved, because its present possessor placed a value upon it, inasmuch as it recorded the death and age of one to whom she was indebted.

"Tawell is said by those who recollect him when here to have been a very shrewd, clever lad, and was much liked for the amiability of his conduct. He has been through life one of the most consummate hypocrites on record."

The following facts and corrections of some few errors which have gained currency, relating to the past life of John Tawell, our informant has obtained from a gentleman who was on the medical staff at Sydney, and who resided there at the period to which they refer:—

It has been stated, as "a perfect truth," that for some time previous to Tawell leaving the colony, to return to England, he was not only in the habit of associating with the highest society, but that he was received as a guest at the Governor's table, and was on visiting terms with the Executive Council, and other authorities of that colony. The statement is in every particular incorrect.

At the time to which we refer, when it was stated that Tawell was in the habit of mixing with the members of the Executive Council, and also dining at the Governor's table, Major-General Richard Bourke was the Governor of New South Wales, in residence at Sydney.

We have to remark that not a single free settler attended the farewell dinner given to him at Sydney; those who were present, we have the highest authority for stating, consisted entirely of what are termed "the expirees," "the emancipated," and "the ticket-of-leave mob." The Mr. Samuel Terry, who was in the chair, and who was mainly instrumental in getting up the dinner, had been transported for life some years previously for a highway robbery. He was never enabled to procure a free pardon, and at that time was merely "at large" on a ticket of leave. He was then carrying on a very large business, and in some way, in his mercantile pursuits, connected with Tawell. When he died at Sydney, some few years after the dinner given to Tawell, his property was considered to amount to nearly one million sterling. He had two sons, to whom the great bulk of his immense wealth was bequeathed.

There is no doubt that Tawell became a wealthy man in the colony. Both Tawell and his friend Samuel Terry realised immense profits upon the sums they advanced to needy persons on the security of their houses and lands, and upon other property. Both had got hold of a rascally lawyer, and through his aid they were enabled to cheat and plunder their unfortunate victims to an unknown extent.

Great stress has been laid (in order to show the sincerity of Tawell as a teetotaller) on his having, in the year 1836, caused the contents of seven hogsheads of rum and gin to be emptied into Sydney Cove, amounting to 608 gallons, and worth £100. Our informant, who was at Sydney at the time, and witnessed this "tremendous sacrifice of property," states that the contents of only two small barrels, said to be rum or gin, were thrown away, and that the quantity, at the utmost, did not exceed fifty or sixty gallons. This affair was spoken of afterwards at the table of the Governor, and the prevailing opinion at the time, both there and throughout the colony, was, that it was merely done for the sake of notoriety, and to endeavour to gain the favour of certain influential persons in the colony. The ruse, however, was seen through, and the Quaker took nothing by his motion. At this time Tawell had returned to Sydney from England (long after he had received his free pardon, of course) on a trading visit.

A report has lately been circulated in England that Tawell, shortly after he arrived the first time at Sydney (to undergo his sentence of transportation), had been whipped through the town for stealing a watch of one of the convicts. This is not true; had it been, this circumstance would have prevented his ever obtaining a ticket of leave, much less a free pardon.

The house and shop in which Tawell carried on the business of a druggist at Sydney were at No. 18, Pitt-street. The shop was remarked as being very low and dirty, and the house only one story in height. The rent was £35 a year. In the year 1827 or 1828, the business was purchased by Mr. Ambrose Foss, who pulled down the premises and rebuilt them.

At the period of Tawell's commencing business there were not more than two or three Quakers in the colony. His Quaker's dress, and his generally sedate, quiet, respectable demeanour, disarmed suspicion of his real character and insidious designs, and enabled him to practise his knavery with greater success. He was always looked upon, by the respectable portion of society at Sydney, to be a great knave, and to be anything but a religious man, notwithstanding the great efforts he made to be thought one.

In early life Tawell's hair, which is now described as light, was of so burning a red, that he has said the boys called after him in the street, "Mind you don't set a haystack on fire." He was very gentlemanly in his manners, and exceedingly kind to his present wife and her daughter.

MUSIC.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

A selection of anthems, and other church music, from the works of Tallis, Tye, Purcell, Gibbons, Creyghton, Blow, Clark, Croft, Green, Boyce, Battishill, Lord Mornington, and Dr. Cooke, was performed by this truly spirited and national society yesterday evening. It was a delicious enjoyment to listen to the sublime strains and venerable harmonies of those old masters, contrasted with the flimsy and thoughtless compositions of the moderns.

THE THEATRES.

As we predicted at Christmas, burlesques have proved the chief novelties at the different theatres, no less than five having been produced on Easter Monday; the majority of which have been as successful as authors, actors, and managers, could desire. It is curious, having seen them all, to observe how sharp a look-out the writers have kept upon the current topics of the day: for, in every one, we have jokes and allusions either upon the budget, income-tax, galvanic rings, Cellarius waltz, civic defalcations, mesmerism, or loan societies, cum multis aliis. The burlesques are a great improvement both upon pantomimes and the old Easter spectacles; and whilst they amuse by their verbal pleasantries and scenic effects, are found to be the best vehicles for castigating the follies of the day now that comedies, properly so called, appear to have left the stage.

HER MAJESTY'S

On Thursday was performed, for the first time in this country, the late Felicien David's Ode Symphonique, called "The Desert." It abounds with many beauties, but we may also say faults—we hear the choruses over and over again, and the instrumentation is terribly monotonous. It seems to us that wherever the composer could lay hold of a pedale he worked upon it usque ad nauseam—moreover, he has the habit of giving more last notes to his terminal symphonies, so that one fears they will never come to an end.

In the selection which preceded "The Desert" Moriani sang a charming ballad, entitled "L'Hirondella," which was encored. In part second of the Ode he also sang two ballads, and obtained another encore. The instrumental opening of the third part, descriptive of the rising of the sun, was also honoured with an universal call for repetition. Moriani was quite ready to sing another ballad—but the people rose, and the orchestra rose, and the house was soon cleared, without any decided indications that the new production will effect a similar furore here as it has done in Paris.

DRURY LANE.

The Easter novelty at this house was a comic ballet of action, called "Robert and Bertrand," closely adapted from the French piece "L'Auberge des Adrets," which we had occasion to notice a few weeks back in connection with M. Frederic Lemaitre's admirable performance of Robert Macaire. The previous history of the swindler and his ally is shown by an introductory tableau, exhibited in the middle of the overture, wherein Robert (Mr. W. H. Payne) and Bertrand (Mr. T. Mathews) are shown escaping from prison, on a wet night. The curtain then falls again, and the real action of the piece commences at the end of the overture, with the arrival of this hopeful pair at the inn of M. Dumont (Mr. Priorson) on the wedding-day of his son Charles (Mr. Delferier) with Clementine (Miss Hunt). Here they form a plan for stealing the wedding portion of the bride, brought by her father, Mons. Germeuil (Mr. Burt), in which they ultimately succeed, after running a great risk of being taken into custody by some gensd'armes, who make various unpleasant investigations connected with their passports. The alarm in which everybody is thrown by reason of the robbery concludes the first act. In the second, some months are supposed to have elapsed, and Robert and Bertrand, by means of their ill-gotten booty, have started an Assurance Office against thieves. Robert is also looked upon as a respectable citizen, and is on the eve of marrying Mademoiselle Eloi (Miss Curson), the daughter of a rich Marquis (Mr. Howell). He is, however, unfortunately recognised by Pierre, who had been formerly a waiter at M. Dumont's hotel; and upon his information preparations are made to arrest the pair of scamps at a splendid ball given by the Marquis in honour of the approaching nuptials. Robert, however, contrives to turn out all the gas just as Bertrand and himself are arrested, and in the darkness and confusion they make their escape, coming down a chimney into a kitchen where two soldiers are regaling with their sweethearts. A fresh pursuit again commences, and the scamps are at last hunted into a guinguette, or public garden, where a balloon is about to ascend. They hide themselves for a time amidst the crowd, until being, hard pressed by their pursuers, they jump into the car of the balloon, cut the cords, and go up out of sight, to the intense bewilderment of every body. With this novel situation the piece concludes.

We must confess that we have seen ballets with which we have been more pleased. To rob Robert Macaire of his inflated speeches and impudent assurance, is to take away all his fun: and even the talent of Mr. W. H. Payne could not render this dumb version of the unequalled chevalier d'industrie more than ordinarily amusing. We must not pass over, however, some very astonishing dancing by two new artistes—Mdlle. Polin and M. Gasperino—who performed some of the most extraordinary evolutions we ever witnessed, and were eminently successful. Mdlles. Adele and Louise, from the Lyceum, also came in for their share of applause: and the pantomimists, generally, exerted themselves to the utmost. The feats of a juggler might have been omitted with great advantage, and so some of the audience appeared to think. They were of that kind which we see every day in the streets for nothing. The reception of the ballet was, upon the whole, satisfactory. The house was moderately attended—as well, however, as could have been expected with the powerful attractions in all quarters.

LYCEUM.

Having been painted, papered, and re-decorated, this theatre opened on Monday with Farquhar's comedy of "The Recruiting Officer," compressed into three acts; but its reception was not such as to justify its continuance, and it was withdrawn from the bills on Thursday, so that we need say no more about it, except, that as it was stated to be "the first time it had been played for fifteen years," we hope twice that time will elapse before it is again represented. After the comedy a new farce was produced, called "The Lowther Arcade," and was nearly condemned, this first night, from the terribly inefficient manner in which it was played. In fact, the performance was little more than an incomplete rehearsal, but it has since worked up capitally, and goes off with roars of laughter. Mr. Keeley performs the part of Bonus, the most amiable clerk ever connected with an attorney's office, who has formerly been a teacher at an infant school, and was dismissed for making his pupils ill with presents of confectionary. He will not serve writs when the debtors plead poverty, and wishes to prevent people from assuring in his master's office, "The Fireside and Circumnavigating Life Assurance Society," because they will be paying premiums all their lives. To acquire authority over everybody whose interests he wishes to serve, he assumes the dress of the beadle of the Lowther Arcade; and it may be conceived how very droll Keeley looked in this costume. There is, of course, a love plot between Captain Mornington (Mr. Bellingham) and Miss Barnacle (Miss Dawson) a lady-like actress from the Bristol theatre. Premium (Mr. Meadows) is a clerk, all vinegar and malice, who is punished by finding that, by mistake, he has promoted the happiness of everybody. The author has aimed at the development of a character rather than the complication of a plot, and has succeeded in his intention. It is to be regretted that a little more pains were not taken with it on Monday, for which, however, Mr. Keeley apologised.

The entertainments concluded with the new extravaganza of "Whittington and his Cat," written by Messrs. Albert Smith and Taylor, which promises to rival "Aladdin" and "Valentine." Whittington and his Cat is a graceful legend—we have few prettier pertaining to English history; and it has the advantage of being a thorough home subject. A little departure is made from the original story, inasmuch as Whittington accompanies Puss to Morocco; but the leading features remain the same. We have the arrival of little Dick (Mrs. Keeley) in London, by the Chertsey waggon; his engagement by Master Fitzwarren (Mr. F. Mathews), and ill-treatment by Ursula, the cook (Mrs. Usher). Then we have his day dream upon Holloway Hill (which our illustration shows), with the song of the old bells; his love for Alice Fitzwarren (Miss Villars); his return, and final venture of his cat, on board the merchant's argosy. In Act II. we arrive at Mogadore, where Muley Moloch, the "Lion-tamer of the Desert" (Mr. Keeley), is sadly bullied by his French protector, Alcide Belle-Poule (Mr. A. Wigan). All who remember the portrait of the Prince de Joinville in the ILLUSTRATED NEWS will be struck with the resemblance. Alice, disguised as a sailor, and Dick, with Puss, are wrecked upon the island, and being found in the harem, are sentenced to death, when Dick offers to free the state from the rats. A grand battue takes place; the Cat is victorious, and Dick and Alice return to England in the aerial ship of their friends, the fairies, laden with wealth, and leaving Alcide to marry the Princess Zaide (Miss Farebrother).

From the hits and allusions, which the audience seized upon most readily, we take the following. The fairies are complaining of the desecration of the country by enclosures, and the allotment system:—

Goodfellow. So they complain,
At Covent-Garden, and at Drury-Lane

Whittington inquires of Dottrell (Mr. Kinloch), Mr. Fitzwarren's shopman, who he is:—

Dot. Sir, I'm a gentleman.
Dot. Well, what's the difference—that's what I meant.
Dick. No, though your "gent." swears, swaggers, wears fine clothes,
A Moses doublet and a Doudney hose,
Drinks, gambles, looks as "spicy" as he can,
Your "gent." can never be a gentleman.

The clerks are making their different ventures on board Fitzwarren's ship. They bring various articles.

Fitz. Ah, here's refinement for the native hovels,
A half-price batch of fashionable novels.
Dick. With those on board, we're certain not to drown,
Do what you will, those novels wont go down.
Fitz. What are those paltry, shabby-looking things?
Dot. Fashionable circles, or galvanic rings.
They will cure anything, or I'm mistaken,
From gout and rheumatiz to hams and bacon.
Dick. Perhaps they cured the Pennsylvanians, too;
Theirs was a case of real tic doloureux.

A hint at frauds in the customs:—

Fitz. You'll come the contraband.
Shipman. Of course my beauty,
England expects each man to do the duty.

A fairy's mission:—

Puck. Verjuice! amongst the authors take your station,
And tip their pens with "virtuous indignation."
'Gainst game-laws, unions, cheap shirts, raise their gall,
The line which now-a-days pays best of all;
Railing at wealth, they win wherewith to dine,
By high-spiced horror, at so much per line.

A hint to politicians:—

Alcide. The rats have gone.
Dick. Oh no, that ne'er the case is:
Rats may change sides, but always keep their places.

The scenery is exceedingly beautiful: we may particularize "Holloway Hill, with old London, by sunset;" "Baynard's Wharf, with the river, and London-bridge, and the argosy, the Alice, clearing out with cargo," and the concluding scene of "The Harem." The piece was admirably performed. Mrs. Keeley's Dick Whittington was inimitable, and Miss Villars, a new actress from the provinces, will prove a valuable member of the company. She was encored in a hornpipe. Mr. Keeley produced roars of laughter by a burlesque of Van Amburgh's brute-taming with the Cat, excellently acted by Mr. Collyer; and Mr. Frank Matthews was an effective Master Fitzwarren. At the fall of the curtain the applause was most enthusiastic, and the principal performers were called for. We should not omit a "Pas Styrien" by Miss Farebrother and Mr. Wigan, which was encored.

ADELPHI.

The ready pens of Messrs. Mark Lemon and Gilbert à Beckett, have furnished a very admirable burlesque to this theatre, "founded," as they assure us, "on a polite request from Madame Celeste," but taken from the old English chivalric legend of "St. George and the Dragon." Putting aside the clever notion worked out with great tact in the plot—that of making the dragon the impersonation of humbug—as well as the sparkling dialogue, which is crammed with jokes, puns, and allusions, the piece has been produced in the most gorgeous style: all the appliances are of first-rate excellence, and the extravaganza, good as it is in itself, has certainly received every adventitious aid from the spirited management.

St. George is performed by Miss Woolgar, a valuable actress in burlesque, where intelligence and perception of humour are required. Mr. Wright is Almidor, a black monarch, paying court to the Princess Sabra (Miss Ellen Chaplin); Mr. Paul Bedford is "great" in all senses as the Dragon, and wears a dress which is an ingenious compromise between a scaly monster's and a Newmarket "cut-away;" and Mr. Selby is a magnificent Ptolemy.

St. George undertakes the crusade against the Dragon, to win the hand of Sabra, and finally vanquishes him by the Press, which changes to the Spirit of Truth, ingeniously working out the notion ebove alluded to.

There are so many good things in this burlesque that it is very difficult to select some. Possibly those which follow are amongst the best.

Cuimoth is dressing the hair of Kabyla, the enchantress:—

Cui. (brushing KABYLA'S hair)
Your hair, my lady's, getting rather dry,
Some of the Russian balsam shall I try?
Kab. Well, p'rhaps you may—yet no—upon the whole,
Anything Russian's hurtful to the Pole;
The very thought my nervous system shocks,
O! would that mine were like Chubb's—safety locks!
Should I turn Grey, I'd bid the world good bye,
Zon. If you turn grey, it would be time to dye.

A marriage contract:—

Kab. Yon living charger I design for thee
If you'll consent at once to marry me.
St. Geo. I do consent so that you don't object
To grant what modern husbands now expect.
Kab. Of course, my love! What may your wishes be?
St. Geo. Oh! a cigar in-doors, and a latch key!
Kab. The former is a secondary matter,
But there's a deal of mischief in the latter.
Latch keys cause men without restraint to roam;
For there's no knowing when they do get home.

MR. PAUL BEDFORD, AS THE "DRAGON."

The miseries of royalty:—

Pto. Silence! What! can't my majesty walk out
But after me you raise this horrid rout!
Upon my daughter's nerves I'm sure it jars:
The soldiers all seem bravos or hussars.
Sab. You're right, papa; I dread the cannon's roar:
'Tis the old dose, "the powder, as before,"
A princess now, no matter if it suits her,
Can't move, but some artillery man salutes her.

An insurance-office:—

St. Geo. Is this the office? yes, I'm pretty sure it is—[Seeing Dragon
Oh! I beg pardon; do you buy securities?
Dra. Why that depends on what they are, young man,
I'm willing to do business if I can;
For anything I'll give a price that's fair,
From an old coat up to a Railway share!
St. Geo. I've coal shares, sir, in the Talacre concern,
Such coals you'll find, there regular bricks to burn.

The Portland Vase affair:—

Pto. Off with the Dragon's head, its proper place
Is the Museum, under a glass case.
St. Geo. If as a curiosity they take it
To the Museum, somebody may break it.

The piece was entirely successful, and reflects great credit upon all parties concerned in its production. The applause, when the curtain fell, was genuine and continuous; and Miss Woolgar, Mr. Wright, and Mr. Paul Bedford, were called for, and loudly welcomed by the audience.

Our illustration will be best accompanied by a quotation from the libretto:—

St. Geo. The lady's hand sure prize enough will be—
(about to take Sabra's hand)
Alm. (interferes)
Hollo! young man, you'll take that after me.

DUET.—ST. GEORGE AND ALMIDOR.

St. Geo. I'll thank you to mention, if it's your intention,
In that lady's affection my rival to be?
For if it is sir, I'll only say this, sir,
Consider you're horsewhipp'd this moment by me.
Alm. The lady has taste, sir, she'll ne'er be disgraced, sir,
By wedding with one who's so horribly vain.
So pray, sir, take warning, or else, some fine morning,
'Twill be pistols for two, so don't do it again.
Both. Don't, &c.

SCENE FROM THE BURLESQUE OF "WHITTINGTON AND HIS CAT," AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

PRINCESS'

A five-act tragic drama, attributed to Dr. Bird, which has been some time underlined in the bills of this house, was produced on Wednesday evening, under the title of "Metamora, the Last of the Wampanoags," and was completely successful. But this success must be attributed entirely to the very effective performance of Mr. Forrest in the character of Metamora, the last of a tribe of Red Men, driven from their hunting grounds, and humbled, by the incursions of the "pale faces." As a literary production, the drama itself was most contemptible. Crammed with melodramatic fustian to a degree which would be laughed at, if brought out at the Surrey or Victoria; and abounding in sudden entries, fights, unexplained catastrophes, and improbable situations—of that very hackneied kind which have long furnished our burlesque authors with some of their most palpable hits: we were certainly astonished at the patience of the audience. The acting of Mr. Forrest, however, overcame all these unfavourable adjuncts. We presume it to be the most perfect impersonation of the Indian ever represented. And in this we speak advisedly: indeed, there was a spirit in the whole performance which looked like truth. It is certainly the best character in which we have yet seen him; and we imagine this to be his proper line. Mrs. Stirling, as his wife Nahmeeohee, is entitled to a share of our praise; her acting was touching and natural. Miss Stanley and Mr. Granby were also effective in two comparatively small parts, but here our commendation must end; the greater portion of what the others had to say, being conveyed to the audience by the prompter, who must have been fully occupied. Mr. Forrest was loudly called for and cheered at the end of the drama: and Mr. H. Wallack announced it for repetition three times a week, without a dissentient voice. In spite of its dramatic absurdities it may be considered as a hit; but we would recommend the substitution of another performer for the unfortunate supernumerary, whose delivery of a few lines tended to increase the subdued merriment which the underplot called forth in relief to Mr Forrest's really impassioned and startling performance.

The performance of a Mr. Sands, and his infant brother, Maurice, followed. They are a very clever pair, and, in some of their tours de force, certainly go beyond those accomplished by Mr. Risley and his little boy. And then came a "new grand Oriental melo-dramatic burlesque extravaganza," called "Timour, the Cream of all the Tartars," founded on G. M. Lewis's celebrated spectacle of the same name, which, in spite of some costly dresses and very picturesque scenery by Mr. Beverley, was a heavy affair, and, in our opinion, not so funny as the original piece. The great fault consisted in going too much upon technical jokes, which had reference to the coulisses rather than the audience. We mention the following as specimens of what we mean :—

The Princess' trumpet :—
Tim. Well, I know it;
I saw young Keatley, at the side wing, blow it.
Sel. Where are the horses, who is the groom ?
Lis. Phil Stone has got them ready, in his room.
Superbly form'd, their necks are taper—
Sel. Their breed is—
Lis. Bradwell out of Paper.

Now this may create a laugh behind the scenes, but as the general audience, for whose diversion a burlesque may be popularly supposed to be written, have but indefinite ideas respecting Mr. Keatley, jun., and Phil Stone—no doubt highly respectable and talented individuals in their way—we do not see that much is gained by bringing them before the public. The effect of this style of esoteric joking was palpable in the last burlesque produced here, where not even Mr. aBeckett's tact could make the audience laugh at allusions about which they had very hazy notions.

Au reste, there are plenty of hits at the prevalent things of the day; and a little more attention to the manner of putting them, and uniform number of feet in the metre, would have enhanced their effect. However, we are bound to record the piece as successful, and have no doubt but that it will, for a time, attract the holiday makers, if not quite up to the standard of what such a species of entertainment ought to be.

The pressure of theatrical notices this week has been so heavy, that we are compelled to postpone several until our next number. We may briefly state, that another burlesque on the "Seven Champions," by Mr. Stocqueler, was received with acclamations at the Olympic, of which we shall speak more fully in our next, together with the performances at Astley's, Sadler's Wells, the Surrey, &c., &c.

THE MYSTERIOUS LADY.

Doctor Johnson as good as avowed his belief in the second sight of the Scotch, and hundreds of scientinc men, both here and on the Continent, have given their testimony to the reality of clairvoyance. Now and then, collusions between parties have been detected, which have cast suspicion and contempt on the system or art, or whatever it may be called, but a new vindicator of its claims to respectful notice has come forward in the person of The Mysterious Lady, who certainly throws all her predecessors into the shade, by the unerring performance of her truly wonderful feats. On Monday last, in Piccadilly, her marvellous powers were shown to a numerous assemblage of closely-watching qui vive persons, whose eyes and ears were wide awake to detect deception, but who ultimately confessed to one another that their incredulity was somewhat shaken, and that though they could not for a moment imagine the laws of Nature to be laid aside, yet they were lost in perplexed wonder and unsatisfactory guessings, at seeing them so obviously violated. The lady sits with her back to the company, and proves that she has a perfect knowledge of every circumstance which takes place behind her, without a possibility of its being reflected, or communicated to her by any collusion, at least hitherto not detected. She can name the spots upon dice, cards, &c., held at a considerable distance from her, where she could have no possible chance of seeing them in the ordinary way. Whisper in the lowest breath imaginable, and she will repeat your words with unerring accuracy. It is a truly wonderful performance. Various have been the opinions and suggestions which we have heard given as to the probable modus operandi of this strange and interesting illusion, for "unreal mockery" it must be, although so marvellously plausible and truth-like. We shall revert to the subject again, for we think it one that is interesting to science in the highest degree. The juggling tricks of the gentleman, though clever in themselves, we think rather injure the performances of the lady.

THE MYSTERIOUS LADY.

THE NEW CURRICLE TRIBUS.

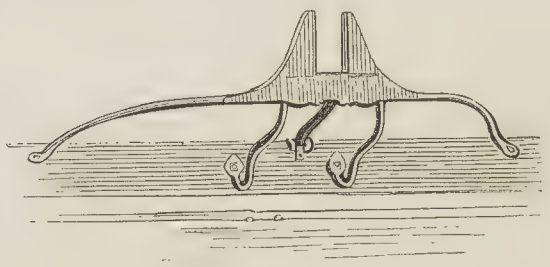
THE CURRICLE TRIBUS.

This elegant street carriage has just been patented by Mr. Harvey, of Westminster Bridge-road. As its name indicates, it is drawn by two horses, and will accommodate three persons. It may be made an open or close carriage, at pleasure; it is so light in draught, that even a slight horse will work well in it. The shafts are made to shift with ease to give place to a pole, when it becomes a curricle for a pair of horses. The body hangs low, particularly safe, and the coachman's seat is so placed as to give him command of the reins, and enable him, at the same time, to open and shut the door.

THE COMING SPRING.

Solvitur acris hyems gratâ vice veris et Favoni.—Horat.

The cowslip bells will open soon,
The sweet birds' song be all in tune—
The hedge-banks with primroses gay,
Although 'tis yet a month to May !



But April is a handmaid kind,
And if she can, no wintry wind
Shall blight her buds, or e'en delay
The garland she prepares for May !

With smiles and tears she'll tend her brood,
In garden, meadow, and in wood ;
And rear them up, all smiling, gay,
To welcome the return of May !

Oh ! could we thus each year impart
New blossom to the wither'd heart,
Who'd ever wish to flee away
If ev'ry winter brought its May ? W.

NEW BOAT.

Messrs. Searle, boatbuilders, at Stangate, have just constructed a boat of a very peculiar description. She is an eight-oared cutter, of the extraordinary length of 60 feet, that being 7 feet more than usual; and 2 feet 10 inches across in the widest part. She is an outrigger, built on the same principle as the boat brought from Newcastle by the Claspers, and used at the Thames Regatta. The mould of Messrs. Searle's boat is very peculiar; her extraordinary length gives her more speed, and enables her to hold her way better, which has been already proved in a trial trip to Putney, where she passed several steamers.

PROJECTING ROWLOCK.

NEW LIFE BUOY.

Mr. T. D. Armitage, of Louth, has just patented an improved life-preserver, designated the "Yarborough Life Buoy," from the Earl of Yarborough, R.Y.S., having recommended its use by merchantmen, &c. This preserver has also been tested and approved by her Majesty's Navy. Its materials consist of pieces of cork, curled hair, and a peculiarly-formed air-chamber; and, its outer circumference tapering off and being much narrower than the inner one, it is stated to make greater way through the water than other life-preservers on a similar plan. It is also simple, will stow easily on a ship's quarter, inside or outside, and will float and support more men than other inventions of its class. The mode of its use is shown in our Illustration.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

A winter of unexampled length and by no means wanting in severity broke up at the very moment that genial weather was most acceptable, to the dwellers in the great metropolis—on the eve of the great popular festival of Easter. Had the holiday people bespoke a week, they could not have been better accommodated: if only fate was as propitious as the element, the opening of their season in 1845, will long be marked with a white stone. In consequence of Easter falling so early, the Craven Meeting, which generally begins on Easter Monday, does not take place till the 14th of April—and as the first week at Newmarket is in fact the drawing up of the curtain for legitimate racing, the turf season is still in abeyence. In the meanwhile its winter edition, the steeple chase, has been running a very general career, in some instances with extremely deplorable results. At Worcester, two horses were killed in different races, and on different days, on the same spot. There is hardly a steeple-chase meeting at which some fatal casualty does not occur—indeed the term casualty, is scarce applicable to the destruction of horses in these races across country. From the pace at which the leaps are taken, it is always odds against their getting safe over, and should they catch or strike any bank or other substance which will not give way, the speed ensures serious consequences from the concussion. We are none of the squeamish school, either as regards the rough business or the hardy sports of life, but we hold the steeple-chase to be a pastime in which the noblest of all animals is engaged in an issue with cruel and unfair odds against him, and the sooner it joins the obsolete list of our recreations the better. It is not a degree above bull baiting and prize fighting—and they are unfathomably below the civilisation of the day. During the week the Northampton and Pytchley hunt races came off—with more eclat than they have enjoyed of late years. Some first class horses showed for the various stakes, and in more advanced form than might have been calculated on from the bad training season we had almost up to the hour of their coming to the post. They proved the formidable strength of the Goodwood stable, and seem to indicate a turn of luck for that spirited patron of the turf Lord George Bentinck.

Next to racing, as a summer sport, is yachting, and its twin-sister rowing. Already the aquatics for the current season have began in earnest—witness the Oxford and Cambridge match, and the yachts of the R. T. Y. C., have tested their trim by a social trip down the river. The prospects of that club are fast approaching the palmy position such a society should hold in the metropolis of the aquatic world. During the last twelvemonths it has enrolled among its members many of the most distinguished names connected with the pleasure-marine of the country, and at every meeting at which members are balloted for, new applicants are announced as candidates for the honour of admission. Active demonstrations have been given of a determination to support the character of the Thames Regatta. Large subscriptions have been received and men of the right sort elected to superintend it. A sum not much short of a thousand pounds will be applicable to its uses. As yet no cricket matches have been made for the approaching season ; here and there a provincial set-to has come off "for love," but serious business will soon begin. Such is a brief epitome of the positions and promise of our manly sports at this equivocal period when they hang partially suspended between their seasonable order. The days of the chase are all but numbered—as soon as its "whoo-whoop," shall have been given, Diana and her train will be found disporting in fresh fields and pastures new. Very little metropolitan business is ever done in the betting market during Easter week. Some slight changes may be attributed to the Northampton Meeting—such as an advance of Sorella for the Chester Cup of fifty per cent.—but the extent of its influence will not be felt before Monday next at Tattersall's.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The omission of several of the leading favourites for the two great events, renders it unnecessary to dwell upon the almost unparalleled dulness of business this afternoon. Suffice it that no particular feeling was shown, either in avour of, or against any of the horses mentioned below, and that the investments were as paltry in amount as they were small in number ; betting, in short, was nominal.

WEDNESDAY.

The meeting wa brought to a close in a style that must have fully satisfied all those who have l en instrumental to its restoration. The weather was delightful, the sport excellent, and the attendance quite as numerous as on the first day. We may venture to predict that under so zealous and competent a management, with such staunch, liberal, and influential supporters as Lords Spencer, Chesterfield, Southampton, G. Bentinck, and Cardigan; Sir C. Knightley, Col. Anson, Messrs. Paynes and Bouverie (we make but a selection from a long list of patrons), with a most complete stand, and one of the best of race courses, Northampton must become the best spring provincial meeting in the kingdom. The ollowing are the results of Wednesday's races :—

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The returns for the present week show full average arrivals of English wheat for our market; yet the number of samples of that grain on offer this morning was by no means extensive. The attendance of buyers being small, only the finest qualities were inquired for; such commanded full prices; but all other kinds were a mere drug, and a clearance was not effected. In fine foreign wheat, as well as grain under lock, next to nothing was doing, at late rates. Barley and malt were in moderate supply, and sluggish request, at about Monday's quotations. The arrivals of Irish oats having been very extensive, the oat trade was dull, at a decline of 6d per quarter. Other grain as last advised.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 11380; barley, 4860; oats, 4050 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 55300 quarters. Foreign; wheat, —; barley, 1020; oats, — quarters, Flour, 7930 sacks; malt, 6020 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s to 43s; ditto, white, 40s to 47s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s to 23s, potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 22s; ditto, white, 21s to 25s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 35s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 48s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to—, per barrel

Seed Market.—Notwithstanding the present advanced period of the year, we have scarcely any transactions to report in any kind of seeds, the prices of which are with difficulty supported.

The following are the present rates :—Linseed English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa —s to —s. Hempseed, 35s to 38s, per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s, per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 14s; white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 6s to 7s 6d, per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £24 to £26, per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £13 to £13 5s. per 1000: Rapeseed cakes £6 15s to £7, per ton. Canary, 42s to 48s, per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d ; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 45s 5d; barley, 32s 4d ; oats, 21s 8d; rye, 30s 5d; beans, 34s 6d; peas, 35s 8d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 45s 2d; barley, 32s 3d; oats, 21s 7d; rye, 30s 8d ; beans, 34s 9d; peas, 35s 5d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 6s; oats, 6s ; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 8s 6d; peas, 7s 6d.

Tea.—For fine new teas, a steady demand has prevailed since our last, and prices are freely supported; but old prices are heavy. Fine congous are selling at 2s 5d to 2s 7d; common sound, 10d to 10½d, and low yellow leaf twankay, 1s 3d to 1s 3½d per lb each.

Sugar.—West India has been in good request, at fully previous rates. The total purchases for the week have amounted to nearly 1900 hhds. and tierces. White qualities of Bengal have sold at full quotations, but, in other kinds of raw sugars only a moderate business has been doing. Refined goods are heavy; 68s is the value of standard lumps. Bonded crushed, dull at 31s 3d per cwt.

Coffee.—Ceylon has sold steadily, at 47s to 47s 6d for good ordinary; in all other kinds of coffee, only a moderate business has been doing, yet prices have ruled about stationary.

Rice.—Bengal is wanted, and must be quoted 3d per cwt. higher; middling white is held firmly, at 11s 6d. per cwt. The stocks of all descriptions are trifling for the time of year.

Provisions.—A moderate business has been transacted in Irish butter, since our last, at full prices. Clonmel, landed, has sold at 90s to 100s; and Carlow, 90s to 102s per cwt. Dutch butter has moved off steadily, at 106s to 112s, for fine Friesland; 100 to 110, for fine Holland; and 100s to 108s per cwt, for Kiel. The bacon market is steady, and some few sales have been made at 1s per cwt more money. Prime sizeable Waterford, landed, has sold at 41s to 45s; heavy, 40s to 43s per cwt. Several large sales have been concluded for forward shipment. The best Irish hams, as well as lard, move off freely; but, in other kinds of provisions, the transactions have been limited

Tallow.—This market, though a fair business is doing, is heavy as to price. P.Y.C., on the spot, is selling at 38s 6d to 39s. Town tallow, 39s to 40s, net cash.

Coals.—Best Wall's-end, 20s 6d to 21s 3d ; other sorts, 14s to 19s 6d per ton.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 14s; useful ditto, £4 15s to £5 4s ; fine upland ditto, £5 5s to £5 10s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6; oat straw, £1 18s to £2 0s; wheat straw, £2 0s to £2 2s per load.

Potatoes—The best kinds of potatoes move off steadily, at 65s to 80s per ton. Most other qualities are heavy.

Hops (Friday).—For the best hops in pockets, of last year's growth, as well as old olds, a fair demand has existed since our last report, at full prices. In all other kinds of hops next to nothing is doing. The present rates are as follow:—Sussex Pockets, £7 2s to £8 4s; Wealds, £7 5s to £8 0s; Mid Kent, £8 0s to £11 10s; East Kent, £7 10s to £9 5s; Choice ditto, £10 0s to £12 12s; Mid Kent bags, £7 15s to £8 12s; East Kent ditto, £10 10s to £11 17s.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts in to-day's market being considerably more than adequate to meet the wants of the buyers, we have to report an unusually heavy demand for beef, at prices barely equal to those obtained on Monday. There were on offer 60 oxen and cows from Holland, and 100 Scots from Scotland, all in excellent condition. The numbers of sheep seasonably extensive. Prime Downs sold heavily at Monday's currencies; but other kinds were 2d per 8lbs. lower. In lambs next to nothing was doing, and the rates declined 2d per 8lbs. The veal trade was excessively dull, at a depression of 4d per 8lbs. In pigs next to nothing was doing Milch cows were held at from £17 to £19 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; second quality ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large oxen, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 3s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 6d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime Southdown ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d ; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; prime small ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 8d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 8d; neat small porkers, 3s 10d to 4s 2d; lambs, 4s 8d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s 0d to 29s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 19s 0d each. Beasts 690; cows, 140; sheep and lambs, 5730; calves, 133; pigs, 320.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had rather an extensive supply of meat on sale here to-day, owing to which the general demand was heavy, at drooping currencies :—Inferior beef, 2s 2d to 2s 4d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; prime small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d ; large pork, 2s 8d to 3s 4d ; inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; small pork, 3s 6d to 4s 2d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 10d—per 8lbs, by the carcass. ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The South Sea Company have declared a bonus of six per cent., and intend to continue the Company's affairs.

Business was very dull in the English house at the commencement of the week, and prices nearly inactive. The news, on Wednesday, of the resolution passed in the United States Senate for the Annexation of Texas, had, however, an immediate effect upon the market. The speculators commenced selling, and Consols receded to 99½, a fall of one per cent. A slight re-action on Thursday improved prices during the morning, but at closing they had again receded, and have not since shown an indication of increasing firmness. Consols last quote 99½ to ⅝ for money, and 99⅝ ¾ for time. Exchequer Bills continue to fluctuate between 58s and 61s, closing about the latter price. Reduced quotes 100¾, and new Three-and-a-quarter per Cents., 104⅛.

Prices, in the Foreign Market, remained at the previous week's quotations until Tuesday, when a sudden rise in Columbian gave a slight impulse to speculation. The cause of the advance could not be ascertained, but was attributed by one party to some favourable advices received by the Committee on the arrival of the last West India Mail, and by others, to the increasing favour of a project, for improving the communication across the Isthmus of Panama. In the first case no reason can be assigned for keeping the information secret if it was received, and the latter appears to be so distant a contingency as to almost place it out of the bounds of even speculators' reasonings. The price, however, rose at one period to 15¼, but receded a point before the close of business. Mexican, upon the arrival of the American news, on Wednesday, receded one per cent., and have not recovered, closing finally at 36⅜. Spanish Actives have quoted, and continue to quote, 30¼; the Three Per Cents 40⅝ to ¾. Portuguese is rather flat, closing at 66½, having gradually receded since Monday from 67 to 68. Dutch Two-and-a Half per-Cents. are 62⅞; Four per Cent. Certificates, 99¼; and Belgian, 101 to 102.

The Railway Market has been unusually quiet during the week, many of the principal dealers being absent from town. Prices towards the close of the week have consequently shown some symptoms of heaviness, which is usually the result of absence of business. The decision of the Board of Trade in favour of the Harwich line caused a little animation on Wednesday—the closing price is 2½. The French lines are all flat from the effect of the American news, and the unsatisfactory position of the Ministry in France. Considerable speculation continues in the Shrewsbury and Birmingham line—the last quotation is 4¾ to 5. HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

THE LEADING SPORTING PERIODICAL.—UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT.

THE SPORTING REVIEW, a Monthly Journal of the Turf, the Chase, and Rural Sports in all their varieties.—Seven years ago this work was started for the purpose of giving to the National Sports of this country an organ worthy their national importance and popularity. It took the field with a corps of contributors—veterans of experience and skill in the departments to which they attached themselves. For the first time the details of the chase were treated of by masters of hounds; members of the Jockey Club wrote about the Turf; the most eminent of our amateur sailors discussed yachting; the leash—the trigger—all our rural pastimes were dealt with by men of acknowledged authority. Under such a spices its apprenticeship was passed; and the public voice has bestowed on it the character of a "good and faithful servant." In that capacity it discharges the grateful duty of offering its acknowledgments for favours heretofore awarded; and ventures to hope for a continuance of that success which it will be its earnest effort to endeavour to deserve. No periodical in any branch of literature is more characteristically represented by those who contribute to its pages; no journal is more beautifully embellished—none more carefully constituted with reference to the treatment of popular and seasonable subjects. In the course it has so long run, its race will be continued. It will keep a steady pace—ever make play when fitting opportunity occurs. On the first of every month it will be found at the post, as its trainer brought it out from the commencement of its career, sightly to look at, with plenty of good stuff about it—sound wind and limb—and eager to strain every sinew for the prize of public approbation.—N.B. Vol. XIII., with 13 Steel Engravings, is just out, price 16s. 6d., handsomely bound in cloth.—Published monthly, price Half-a-Crown, at the "Sporting Review" Office, 24, Norfolk-street, Strand, London; where all communications for the Editor, and works for review should be addressed.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF KENT.
THE NEW
MONTHLY BELLE ASSEMBLEE. Beautifully Embellished with highly-finished Steel Engravings, PORTRAITS OF THE NOBILITY, &c.

Both the Metropolitan and Provincial press have declared this the most deservedly popular of the Ladies' Magazines; and a reference to any recent number would be sufficient to establish its claims to the patronage it receives. It is the aim of the Editress to render it a decidedly literary publication, considerable space being devoted to notices of, and extracts from, new works. Neither is music nor the world of art neglected; while, in her selection of original articles, a distinct purpose is maintained—that of combining information with amusement; and, while eschewing the old wordy school of by-gone romance, to preserve a tone of refinement without effeminacy. Perhaps, however, the names of a few of the contributors whose talent enriches the pages of the "New Monthly Belle Assemblee" with stories illustrative of history or of life, sketches of society, essays, poetry, &c., will best establish the quality of its contents. These are—

Mrs. Abdy
Miss Acton
Grace Aguilar
Captain Bellew, Author of "Memoirs of a Griffin"
W. G. J. Barker, Esq.
Mrs. V. Bartholomew
Calder Campbell
W. H. Fisk
The late Mrs. James Gray
C. H. Hitchings, Esq.
Miss Leslie
Dr. R. Shelton Mackenzie
N. Michell
Miss Power
Mrs. Ponsonby
Captain D. L. Richardson
J. J. Reynolds
Anna Savage
Mrs. F. B. Scott
Charles Swain
Percy B. St. John
Mrs. Edward Thomas
Camilla Toulmin
Mrs. White
Eliza Walker
Elizabeth Youatt
E. A. H. O., &c. &c.

When we consider the quantity of matter a number contains, the exquisite engravings which are included, and the elaborate plates and descriptions of the fashions, there can be no doubt that this Magazine, published at eighteenpence, is the cheapest as well as the best of its class.

FELTED CARPETS, MANUFACTURED WITHOUT SPINNING AND WEAVING.
CAUTION TO THE TRADE.—THE PATENT WOOLLEN CLOTH COMPANY think it right to inform the trade and the public that an action was brought against Mr. Henry Rawson of Leeds, for manufacturing Felted Cloth and Carpets upon the principle of the Invention under which the Company's Goods are manufactured, and for which a Patent was granted. This Action was tried on Saturday and Monday, the 22nd and 24th of February last, when a Verdict was returned in favour of the plaintiffs, thus establishing the validity of the Patent and its infringement by Mr. Rawson. The Judge having certified that the validity of the Patent came in question, any person now infringing by manufacturing or selling goods so made, will be liable to public Costs in the event of an action being brought against him, and it is the determination of the Patentees to proceed against all parties who may infringe, either by manufacturing or selling these Goods after this caution.
8, Love-lane, Aldermanbury. 8th March, 1845.

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—THE ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA FELT CARPETING, made without spinning and weaving, having successfully overcome the prejudice created by competitors in other descriptions of Carpeting, and being now honoured with the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty for its use in the Royal Palaces, the Patent Woollen Cloth Company, who are the sole manufacturers, inform the Trade that their new and beautiful Patterns in Carpetings for the present season are now ready for inspection at the Company's Warehouses, 8, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside, where the Company have also a large assortment of elegantly-printed and embossed Table Covers, Window Curtains, Cloths for Coach-linings, Waistcoatings, Thick Felt for Polishing and Gum Waddings, D'Oyleys, &c. &c., manufactured by the same process. The public, in patronising the Felt Carpeting, will obtain, and for one half the price, an article superior in strength and durability to either Kidderminster or Brussels.—Manufactories—Elmwood Mills, Leeds; and Borough-road, London.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—The extraordinary success of this Medicine is the wonder of the age; it has been tried by hundreds of thousands as an aperient, and has in every instance done good: it has never, in the slightest degree., impaired the most delicate constitution. Tens of thousands have testified that perseverance in the use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS will completely cure any disease, and are living witnesses of the benefit received from this invaluable medicine.—Sheets of testimonials, and the "Life and Times of Old Parr," may be had, gratis, of every respectable Medicine Vendor throughout the Kingdom.
Beware of spurious imitations of the above Medicine. None are genuine unless the words "PARR'S LIFE PILLS" are in WHITE LETTERS ON A RED GROUND, engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted round each box; also, the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, "T. ROBERTS and Co." London, on the directions.
Sold in boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and family packets, at 11s., by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Sutton and Co., Bow Churchyard, London; Mottershead and Co., Manchester: and J. and R. Raimes and Co., Edinburgh; and by all respectable druggists and patent Medicine retailers throughout the Kingdom.—Directions are given with each box

IMPORTANT TO INVALIDS.—By Her Majesty's Letters Patent.—G. MINTER'S PATENT SELF-ACTING RECLINING and ELEVATING CHAIRS are manufactured with every attention to the use and comforts of a sick chamber, and he particularly recommends them to invalids or to those who may have lost the use of their hands or legs, as they are by it enabled to alter their position without requiring the use of either to obtain that change, from its endless variety so necessary for the relief and comfort of the afflicted. The Prices vary from Six to Twelve Guineas.—An assortment of Superior Bath and Brighton Out-door Chairs, Spinal Carriages and Couches, Merlin Wheel Chairs for the Room, &c., for Sale or Hire, and many useful inventions for invalids Dr. Arnott's Water Beds, &c.—Manufactory, 33, Gerrard-street, Soho, London.

TO THE LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLAND'S KALYDOR continues to maintain, as an active, yet mild and soothing extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the present period, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally celebrated for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in removing all impurities and discolorations; and imparting a healthy freshness and transparency to the Skin and Complexion. Its universally great demand excites the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who give the title of "Genuine" Kalydor to compounds of their own manufacture, of the most deleterious character, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the Complexion, and, by their repellent action, endangering health. It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "Rowland's Kalydor" are on the wrapper. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. Sold by the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.  All others are Fraudulent Imitations!!!

ROWLAND'S UNIQUE PREPARATIONS (under the patronage of the several Sovereigns and Courts of Europe, and universally preferred).—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth, Preservation, and for Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle. ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for improving and beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for the Teeth and Gums. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.
IMPORTANT INFORMATION.—Unprincipled individuals, for the sake of gaining a trifle more profit, vend the most spurious compounds under the same names (some under the implied sanction of Royalty); they copy the labels, bills, advertisements, and testimonials (substituting fictitious for the real names and addresses) of the original preparations, and use either

WELLINGTON MONUMENT.

Among the lions in the vicinity of Woodhall Spa (six miles distant from Horncastle, Lincolnshire), and which is likely to be brought into greater notice by the projected railway on the banks of the Witham, the following may be enumerated:—The noble Castle and splendid MONUMENT TO THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, NEAR HORNCASTLE.

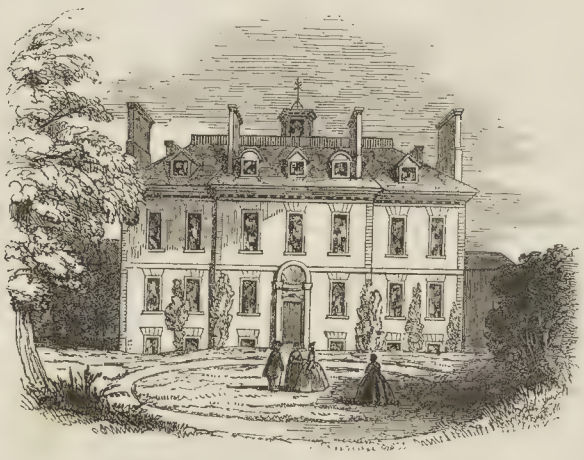
Tudor Church of Tattershall; the exquisite little Chapel, in the early English style, with the interesting, although not extensive, ruins of the Abbey at Kirkstead; and the ancient solitary Tower upon the romantic heath. But to these may now be added a stone monument, surmounted by a bust of the Duke of Wellington, and bearing an inscription upon black marble, which will best explain the object of its erection:—



Waterloo wood, raised from acorns sown immediately after the memorable battle of Waterloo, where victory was achieved by that great Captain of the age, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, commanding the British forces, against the French arms, commanded by Napoleon Buonaparte, the 18th of June, 1815; which momentous victory gave general peace to Europe.—This Monument erected by Rd. E., 1844.

Admiration of the hero has induced Colonel Elmhurst, of Stainton Hall, to raise this tribute of respect upon his property at his sole expense. Perhaps, the oaks of Waterloo wood may hereafter compose our wooden walls, and bear a future Nelson to another Trafalgar.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

ABNEY HOUSE, STOKE NEWINGTON.

In this unostentatious mansion resided the pious Dr. Watts: it was then tenanted by Sir Thomas Abney, who was knighted by King William the Third; and who served the office of Lord Mayor of London in 1700. The mansion and grounds were purchased by the "Abney Park Cemetery Company," who have converted the park into a picturesque burial-ground. The mansion was taken down a short time since, just previous to which it was sketched by Mr. Isaac Ball, of Clapton, who has obligingly suggested the subject as a fitting "Nook and Corner" for our journal. The house was long regarded with peculiar interest in association with the memory of Watts, who has been aptly named a classic of the people. A poet he can scarcely be called, yet his verse is generally smooth, sometimes nervous; and the matter is always judicious, sometimes touching, and sometimes approaching to eloquence. His hymns for children have exercised an influence on the minds of the young far beyond the limits of the dissenting body. His "Logic" was once a text book in various places of education. He was, in his day, one of the most zealous advocates of the principles which placed the House of Hanover on the throne. In his pamphlet in defence of the dissenting charity-schools, he was the efficient precursor of those friends of popular instruction who gave, at a later time, their countenance and support to Joseph Lancaster; and his theological writings are prized by almost the whole of the religious public of Great Britain. Wherever the English language is spoken, Isaac Watts will be found to have exercised no slender influence in the formation of public opinion. His writings have contributed much to keep alive the spirit of freedom, toleration, and piety.

POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—This admirable gallery of "science made easy," was apparently by far the most attractive of Monday's "sights," for shoals of people went in as shoals of people came out, and there was scarcely any relaxation of the human tide as it shifted from room to room, now listening to a lecture by Professor Bachhoffner, then hurrying to a remote corner to hear one by Dr. Ryan, filling up the stray intervals of time by curious examinations of the hosts of inexplicable models which stared them in the face at every turn. A curious invention, the result of the ingenuity of Sir George Cayley, a Yorkshire baronet, excited much curiosity. It is a mechanical hand, to be used as a substitute when the natural limb has been lost by accident. The main principle of the contrivance is simple—the action of the stump in a fixed frame work below the elbow being the spring which gives an expanding or collapsing motion to the mimic fingers. A tenant of Sir George's is present, who, having suffered amputation, now uses the substitute of his benevolent landlord. He can grasp a bottle by the neck and pour out a glass of wine; he can shake hands with you and grip you like a vice; and he can even write with facility and freedom. The outward appearance is that of a gloved hand Perhaps no place in the metropolis is to be named in which so much is to be learned at so small a sacrifice of time and attention as at this place.

LINES UPON "THE PASSAGE OF THE DESERT."

(Occasioned upon hearing David's descriptive composition.)

Arabian solitude—or peopled but
By myriad sands, whose hot breath brings
Death to the traveller that knows not how
To mark it from afar, and lay him down
Prostrate in safety from its withering blight—
Thou wilderness, which e'en no desert bird
Will dare to venture, say hast ever been
A verdant spot? With pestilential dust
To-day thou 'rt filled; did Beauty ever dwell
Where poison'd ashes, like the charnel vault's,
Now roll their dismal waves, as the Simoom
Like the dread rush of the Destroyer's wing,
The Angel's, who swept Eden from the earth,
Puts them in whirlwind war? Hath Paradise
Been once where now such desolation reigns?
Mysterious monster of the mighty earth,
Thou art a fearful thing, and yet man dares
And overcomes thy danger! 'TWAS DECREED! W.

VIDOCQ.

London is at this moment honoured by the presence of an illustrious visitor, whose name, once a terror to criminals of every grade in France, is not unknown in England, where his strange and eventful "autobiography" once created no small sensation. Vidocq, the celebrated French policeman, is dwelling for a time among us, and as one of the remarkables of a time that produced a Napoleon, a Talleyrand, and a Wellington, we here give his portrait, though his abilities developed themselves in a low but by no means an obscure position. The Chef of the French Police de Sureté was no ordinary man.

Eugene François Vidocq was born at Arras, on the 23rd July, 1775, in the house adjoining that in which Robespierre saw the light sixteen years previously. The father of Vidocq was a baker. From early associations his son fell into courses of excess, which led to the necessity of his flying from the paternal roof. After various, rapid, and unexampled events in the romance of real life, in which he was every thing by turns and nothing long, he was liberated from prison, and became the principal and most active agent of police. He was made Chief of the Police de Sureté under Messrs. Delavau and Franchet, and continued in that capacity from the year 1810 till 1827, during which period he extirpated the most formidable of those ruffians and villains to whom the excesses of the revolution and subsequent events had given full scope for the perpetration of the most daring robberies and iniquitous excesses. Removed from employment, in which he had accumulated a handsome independence, he could not determine on leading a life of ease, for which his career of perpetual vigilance and adventure had unfitted him, and he built a paper-manufactory at St. Mandé, about two leagues from Paris.

VIDOCQ.

Here he employed from forty to fifty persons, principally, it is asserted, liberated convicts, who were thus afforded an opportunity of earning an honest living. After his resignation, at the end of M. Villele's Ministry, Vidocq was succeeded in his situation by Coco-Lacour, who had been one of his band, and who has been stamped by Vidocq himself with the character of one of the most expert of thieves. At a subsequent period of his life, Vidocq had to give up his paper manufactory, and was confined in St. Pelagie, for debt. His embarrassments are stated to have arisen from a love of gambling, the temptation to which vice, Vidocq—who could assume all shapes, like a second Proteus—who underwent bitter hardships, and at any time risked his life fearlessly—could not resist. How he has passed the latter few years of his life, there is no public record, but in 1844 he gave to the world four more volumes of his ample experience, under the title of "The True Mysteries of Paris."

GREENWICH FAIR.—The weather was beautiful on Easter Monday, and immense numbers went to Greenwich. The fair itself was of the usual description, that is to say that there were all kinds of shows, from Richardson's grand shilling one, playing three pieces in the space of half an hour, to wit, "The Tyrant Doge" (a tragic drama in one act), a farce, and a pantomime, down to the humblest penny exhibition, with the pig-faced lady, the shaved bear, the pig with two heads, and that "wonderful curiosity" (as the showman termed it) "the fine Durham hox, with seven legs hand two eads;"—all kinds of booths;—all kinds of swings, ups-and downs, merry go-rounds, aerial ships, and wooden horses;—all kinds of eatables, ham sandwiches, pigs' trotters, fried sausages, roast turkey, cold boiled mutton, mock turtle, and pea-soup; all kinds of drinkables, including even tea, ginger beer, and such sober beverages for the teetotallers;—there were besides, gingerbread and toys, nuts, and oranges, apples, toffey and hardbrake, funs of the fair, galvanic rings and kissing rings and wedding rings;—all were to be met with in abundance. The park was scarcely so crowded as is usual on a fine holiday; yet there were great numbers of both sexes, gaily disporting themselves upon the green, and numerous were the races that took place down the far-famed One tree hill.

STEPNEY FAIR.—This place of amusement, which was formerly considered to be in the suburbs, but now forms part of the metropolis, was renewed on Monday, after its revival two years since, with, if we may judge by the crowds which attended, still increasing attractions. The exhibitions, from the highest to the lowest, were well conducted, and some of them were equal to representations in minor theatres. Not the least attractive feature was an immense dancing booth. Means and appliances for more juvenile enjoyments were abundantly furnished. The number of persons who visited the fair during the day was not less than 200,000, and at nine o'clock there were at least 40,000 in and about the fair. The gambling tables were broken up in the morniug by the police, and the owners dispersed. Two of them then retreated to a street near the London Hospital with their tables. They were again routed, taken before Mr. Broderip, and committed to the House of Correction.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—The number of visitors to this national institution on Monday was 15,316, being a decrease in the number, as compared with Easter Monday last year, of 6023—when the number was 21,339.

SNOW STORM IN STIRLING,—Stirling was visited, on Friday week, with the severest snow storm that has been experienced for some years. The snow continued to fall heavily and almost incessantly till about seven o'clock in the evening; the consequence was, that the roads were in every direction covered, in some places many feet deep, with drifted snow. For several days before and after the storm the weather had been piercingly cold, with the wind easterly.

A WINDFALL FOR A NOTTINGHAM BUTCHER.—A butcher, at Nottingham, has succeeded to a fortune, variously estimated at £8000 to £16,000, by the death of his mother, who was transported for uttering base coin about thirty years ago, but afterwards reformed, married again, and amassed considerable wealth.

A MAN CONVICTED OF POISONING HIS WIFE AND SIX SERVANTS IN BELGIUM.—A man named Van Temsche has been tried at Ghent for poisoning his wife, and then attempting to poison six of his servants. The evidence proved that Van Temsche left his farm on Thursday, the 28th of November, between seven and eight o'clock in the morning, to carry butter to the market at Audenarde. All day his wife was gay and well; at six o'clock she supped heartily with the servants. Van Temsche returned at nine in the evening, bringing with him a packet of liquorice powder, to be given to one of the cows, and also a horse he had purchased. About ten the husband and wife retired to rest, and at three in the morning the latter called her servant, who found her mistress very ill and sick, and who learned that she had been so from eleven o'clock. In this state she continued, and on the Saturday the servants, after dinner of soup, potatoes, and sauce, in making which Van Temsche assisted, contrary to his custom, but of which he did not partake, were all seized with griping pains and vomitings. At six o'clock that evening the wife died, her husband being at the time in the stable, where he had passed most of the day. The body of the wife being opened, the contents of the stomach were carefully analyzed, and proved to contain arsenic. The same was the case with the food that was, fortunately for them, brought off the stomachs of the six servants. It was further proved that the husband (the only person in the house not affected by the poison) had purchased the arsenic the night before at Audenarde. The accused, in answer to questions from the President, said that the arsenic had been purchased to kill rats, and that it had by accident got on to some cakes in the same pocket of his coat, which cakes his wife had eaten. The jury, after fifteen minutes' absence, returned with a verdict of Guilty of poisoning his wife and six servants. The Court deliberated upon their decision, the accused meanwhile giving himself up to the deepest despair, exclaiming, "O God, helpt my toch" (O God, help me!) The President pronounced judgment upon him, condemning him to death, and ordering that he should be executed in one of the public parts of the city of Ghent.

THE GOLD OF ENGLAND.

THE wealth of England has always had an immense importance assigned to it by foreign nations; the operation of "English gold" is the secret influence to which they ascribe all the circumstances—they will not take the trouble to examine sufficiently to detect the true causes from which arise their perplexities. It would be difficult exactly to fix the period when "English gold" began to be the bugbear of the Continent: it was certainly very early, commencing, probably, with the rise of our commercial power, when our merchants had agents in every city and ships on every sea. During periods of national, or rather royal, embarrassment, when our Kings wanted money, and their "Faithful Commons" were disposed to do anything but grant it, we were ourselves seized with a similar panic, and ascribed most of the political disasters of the time to support or bribes afforded by the gold of France. Thus Charles the First was said to derive assistance in his struggle against his own subjects from foreign courts; and, as Charles the Second was extravagant, and improvident, and in money matters had not very docile parliaments to deal with, but still contrived to maintain a luxurious court and a lavish personal expenditure, it was a settled belief of the day that he was a mere pensioner of the French King, that more than one of his mistresses was in the same pay, and that it was a fact beyond doubt he sold Dunkirk to the great rival of his own empire. But times changed again; the long reign of Louis the Fourteenth, the dissolute Regency that followed it, and the profligacy of the reign of Louis the Fifteenth, completely broke down the financial system of France; the nobles and the privileged classes defeated all attempts to establish a better one; the people, crushed to the earth with want and suffering, rose, revenged their wrongs by sweeping away Church, King, and Aristocracy, in a torrent of fire and blood, but found themselves as poor with their wild and lawless freedom as they had been under the yoke of feudality, and the nobles, and all the privileges, the exclusiveness, the insolence, and pompous incapacity of the old régime. Commerce is not created by guillotining and massacres, and capital flies from a country where everything is convulsed; this the French found to their cost, through many a year of public distress almost unexampled in the history of civilised nations: and when their public credit was totally destroyed—overwhelmed by the avalanche of assignats, light and worthless, but fatal in effect—then the financial power of England assumed in their eyes that formidable appearance, which it has never entirely lost. Throughout this period scarcely any public calamity occurred in France that was not ascribed by the people, and the belief was encouraged by their rulers, to the "Gold of Pitt;" the "arms of Coburg," though they were invading their territory, were quite a secondary and inferior cause of apprehension. To an army they could oppose a courage, energy and enthusiasm, never exceeded even in the subsequent triumphs of Napoleon; it was something open, apparent, and tangible. But the "Gold of Pitt!" it was like the arrow flying by night, that no one saw, and none could resist. It accounted for all difficulties; if harvests were bad and bread dear, the "gold of Pitt" brought up and forestalled provisions, that the people of the republic, one and indivisible, might perish of famine; whereupon, bakers and contractors, suspected of having touched the accursed thing, were forthwith hanged to the lamp-posts as examples to unpatriotic dealers in edibles. The men had but followed the instinct of traders, which gives the desire of making as large a profit as circumstances allow,—but so simple a solution did not satisfy an enlightened people; it was the "Gold of Pitt."

If an orator, or leader, seeing things going frightfully fast towards anarchy, grew somewhat moderate in his tone, like Mirabeau before his death, he was suspected of having been bought by English gold. That was the great primum mobile of all things evil. It urged forward the armies that threatened the frontiers, it organised the plots of the Emigrés, it bought over their patriots, it created famine, and, what made it more valuable to many, it bore the blame that ought to have been thrown on the blunders of those on whom in that wild time, the business of governing devolved. English gold at a later period was believed by all to be the feeder of the war in Vendée, and the main-spring of the plots against the life of Napoleon; in his last days, when that great commander found his authority melting from him, when he had exhausted both his means and his instruments, and was no longer served with the fiery zeal that of old worked such military marvels for him, it was English gold that corrupted the integrity of his marshals; not the last, but perhaps the greatest, achievement ascribed to our money power is the gaining the battle of Waterloo!

The same belief of the omnipresence of our gold, and its universal influence, still prevails among our neighbours. They think of us, as a nation, as most continental innkeepers do of individual specimens of our roving countrymen—their firm conviction being, that every travelling Englishman is a locomotive money-bag, and, to do them justice, they act on the belief very efficiently, putting him in the best walking condition by lightening him as much as possible.

The fear, or rather the jealousy of the influence of "English gold," is by no means confined to France. The Americans, in the late contest for the Presidency, asserted that our money was fomenting party differences there for the purpose of gaining commercial advantages. The advocates of slavery declare that the efforts of the Abolitionists of the North are backed up and continued by the support of money from the Abolitionists of England, in the shape of subsidies from Exeter Hall we presume; at home we are told just the contrary. We have heard Lord Brougham declare that the slave trade to Brazil and Cuba, is principally carried on by English capital. As the trade gives a profit, and the above "secret service" money would be a dead loss, we are ashamed to say we think Lord Brougham's assertion the more probable of the two!

It cannot be denied that the wealth of England has an important influence in the affairs of the world; but it is commercially, not politically. Capital has no opinions, no preferences, no aversions; it seeks only employment at a profit, and demands only security. Its holders will not spend it to assist the loftiest principle of absolutism, or to carry out the most perfect scheme of liberty. It looks to the bond, and if it "likes not the security," the Bourbon Prince may die in exile on a bed of straw, though the blood of Charlemagne flows in his veins, before "capital" will advance him a penny on the faith of his right divine. And for similar reasons, a liberating patriot may ask its aid in vain. But let either have a security to offer with a prospect of a fair per centage, and capital comes forth with delightful impartiality. It would place itself at the disposal of the infidel Sultan, when it would lock its coffers to the prayers of the Pope. It would raise a loan for the Negro State of St. Domingo, when it would button its pocket firmly against the Quakers of Pennsylvania. The wealth of England is a mighty power, and, like the great forces of nature, it acts from fixed laws that are unchangeable, certain, and passionless. It digs in Mexican mines, or builds French railroads, or cuts an American canal; it is thus present everywhere; but seeing it do so much, foreigners attribute to it more than it attempts; they do not see that all this wealth is not under the controul of the Government, and that individuals and companies would as soon think of flinging their money into the Straits of Dover as to waste it in the intrigues of foreign politics. And yet, even from recent articles in the French—and still stranger, the American—Press, the last would seem the chief purpose to which the "Gold of England" is applied.

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

GRAVESEND TERRACE PIER.

This handsome specimen of improved construction has been erected under the immediate direction of Mr. J. B. Redman, civil engineer. From its locality, and the admirable approach to it from Harmer-street, this pier will, no doubt, prove an attraction to the eastern quarter of the town of Gravesend: it forms a conspicuous and handsome object from the river, and when it is stated that between 300,000 and 400,000 persons were landed and embarked at the two piers, at Gravesend, during the month of June, nearly as large a number in August, and almost 400,000 in July, of which enormous numbers there was a balance in favour of the present temporary erection at the west end of the Terrace Gardens, and which is only ten feet in width, and from wear and tear becoming rather disabled, the necessity for such a work will be obvious.

The Terrace Pier was thrown open to the public on Easter Monday.—All steam boats plying from the Blackwall Railway embark and disembark their passengers at this pier, and the traffic will no doubt be increased upon the completion of the line of railway now nearly finished along the banks of the Medway Canal, connecting Gravesend with Rochester, and which is near the new pier.

There are several interesting points of construction in this pier. The material is mostly cast iron. The foundations of the main columns, considering the locality, have been got down in a novel manner. The columns weigh each, on an average, 9½ tons, and are 28 feet long, 4 feet in diameter at the base, and 3 feet at the top of the shaft; and were, as well as the cylinders, and the rest of the heavy castings, placed in position by means of travelling machinery. The bases of the columns are level with low water of spring tides, standing upon a brick and stone foundation, which was got in the following manner:—Cast-iron cylinders, 6 feet in diameter, and ⅝ of an inch thick, each ring being formed of four segmental plates, those of each ring breaking joint over another, were sunk down through the bed of the river to the chalk substratum, excavating the ground from within as they sunk, additional lengths being added as required: they thus formed caissons, or, more properly, miniature coffer-dams, the top being always kept above the level of high water.

The cylinders being sunk to the required depth upon the solid substratum, and the bottom levelled, a floor was formed of brickwork, Roman cement, and plain tiles; this precaution being taken to keep out the land springs.

The principal novelty in these foundations is, applying cast iron cylinders in such a way as to exclude the flow of a rapid tideway, thus enabling the men to work at nearly all times of tide, and when the bottom is once got in, at any time; thus dispensing with a large amount of pumping, which is proved by the fact that these foundations, at so great a depth and with so large a head of water, were kept clear of water by hand-pumps, and a steam-engine dispensed with. And, we believe this to be the first instance of cylinders being applied so as to exclude the tidal flow of a rapid river, making them effect the same object as a coffer-dam; nor, is it believed that cylinders have before been applied for the purposes of foundations for a structure of this kind on so large a scale. There are three columns in the width of the pier at each point of support, and they are 15 feet apart from centre to centre, leaving a space of 10 feet between the caps, which is occupied by a cross brace bolted to the caps; the iron girders supporting the platform and entablature are bolted to the caps of the columns, the bolt-holes being slotted and spaces left between the ends of the girders to allow of expansion and contraction of the metal; the large girders, 6 of which are 55 feet and 3 56 feet in length, weigh 8 tons each, they are parallel, 3 feet in depth, and are cambered 1¼ inches to allow for deflexion; to diminish their weight the sectional area is reduced to a minimum at the ends in the thickness of the top and bottom flanches and connecting web; the seats were carefully fitted to the plane surfaces of the capitals by means of wrought fillet pieces rivetted to the seats; projections are cast on the upper side of the girders to receive the joists, which are fastened to them by clip-bolts, taking hold of the girder underneath the top flanch, thus obviating the weakening of the metal by bolt holes. All the large girders were proved up to a weight of 45 tons in the middle, with which they deflected on an average 1¼ inches, coming back to their original curve; and the smaller girders up to 20 tons. The cast iron pilaster standards, have a bearing upon the top of the girder, by means of a bracketed projection with a clip embracing it, and the bottom of it abuts against the face of the girder on the outside; at the centres of the girders, where the bottom web is thickest, it also obtains a bearing, and is secured to the girder at the centre by one inch wrought-iron bolt; by this arrangement bolt-holes are almost dispensed with; the standards being hollow form the pipes to carry the water off from the roof, the projecting foot resting on the girder forming the shoot to deliver the same. The entablature, which is seven feet in height, and of cast iron, forms also the parapet to the platform, and is formed of three tiers of castings, bolted together and strengthened by feathers and brackets; this entablature when fitted, has a bearing upon the capitals, and is kept in position laterally by bolts fixed to lugs cast upon the standards, with pipe washers to keep them in position; the bolt-holes are slotted so that the entablature may be affected by expansion or contraction without reference to the girders, or standards, provision being made for it at either end, at the south end next the abutment by a recess in the stone work; the entablature, while fitting, obtains a bearing upon the lower web of the girder, but when fixed will be unaffected by any deflection in the girders, supporting itself, and forming a horizontal line.

The parapet inside will be formed by a lining of corrugated iron; corrugated iron panels will also be formed between each pair of standards, and the intermediate openings will be closed at will by rolling corrugated iron shutters sliding behind the panels when open, rails being provided on the top of the entablature cornice for the rollers to run upon, and guide rails attached to the underside of the gutters. The gutters are formed in two pieces, the water-table being in one casting, and the moulded cornice attached to it by internal brackets bolted to each, the wrought iron principals of the roof are secured to the water-table of the gutter and trussed with wrought-iron; the whole is to be covered with 1¼ inch boarding grooved and tongued, and Welsh slating over all. The panels of the lighthouse and of the lodge turrets are formed of corrugated iron; the lodge roofs and turrets are covered with lead, surmounted with copper balls, vanes and spires. The whole length of the pier is 250 ft., breadth 30 ft., T head 90 ft. by 30 ft., projection into the river beyond high water mark is 200 ft.

From the lighthouse, which has been approved of by the Trinity Board, will be exhibited a powerful plain light for the benefit of shipping, probably a Bude light; and copper octagonal gas lamps will be suspended from the apex of the roof to light the pier.

These constructive details have been derived from the "Civil Engineer and Architect's Journal."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Wednesday.

The people here seem literally to have started from the catacombs—the departed have returned, and faces that had vanished, and peculiarities that had departed, meet the eye in every direction. The brilliant spring has brought forth all that is beautiful and gay, the grubs have assumed the chrysolis state, and the party-coloured wings of our Parisian butterflies are shooting out lustrously and skimming the public walks in all directions. The Boulevards with its flaneurs, and Longchamps with its lions and lionnes, positively lend an added splendour to the bright atmosphere, and if Madame Nature in this country was not so ultra French, she would admit the compliment, that, all beautiful as she is, she is vastly indebted to Palmire the modiste, and the costumier To be sure, the aviary of the Italians is dispersing, and about to take their flight to your selfish Opera-house, which, like the insatiable ocean, swallows up the lyrical and saltatorical riches of every clime. But we have still our myriad theatres, rejoicing in Cayenne dramas and gorgeous fairy tales, and a host of delicious tracasserie, which is no where so well understood, and so greatly enjoyed, as in our delightful Paris. For us the merest change is a source of congregation, and this feeling was strongly exemplified on the re-opening of the garden of the Tuileries, which had been for a few days closed on account of the sudden thaw. Well, no sooner was it ascertained that it was to be opened on the "Jour de Pâques," than the crowd rushed in as though another deluge had been threatened, and the gardens were the ark of promise. You are aware that the huge chesnut tree is upon this occasion the single object of attraction—the "Tree of the 20th March"—the honours of the Dryads were bestowed to its sprouts, however the lengthened frost had retarded its blossoms. It is generally supposed that this tree borrows its distinguishing title from the circumstance of its having served as a rallying point to the veterans of the Imperial army upon the return of Napoleon; but the real motive is from its exhibiting at this date its first leaves. The precocious verdure is owing solely to its roots being planted in a portion of the garden which for years had been strongly fertilised by a bed of tulips; but this philosophy would be heresy to the Badauds.

The principal intellectual réunion of the past week has been the opening of the artistic portals of the Louvre. The superiority this year is decidedly in favour of the sculpture, notwithstanding the exposition of some superb canvasses by Horace Vernet, Gleyre, Decamp, Eugene Delacroix, Robert Fleury, and other minor brushes; but the statuary is of a more elevated cast. The purest specimen, and therefore the best, is a Phryne, by Pradier, This is the best effort of his chisel, and commands universal admiration; it breathes of the days when Greece was young. There are a larger number of specimens than usual, but they are severally marked by ambitious effort, and poetical feeling, and not—like your Royal Academy—crowded by busts of illustrious unknowns, and half-finished bassi relievi.

Perhaps there is no city in the world, where the varieties—the lights and shadows—of its population may be so easily signalised as at Paris, during the Holy Week. In the churches of St. Medard, and of St. Nicholas of Chardonnet, the women resemble, by their costume, the resuscitated saints in the pictures of Ribera—clad in tatters; the wretched crowd covered with misery is a sight to inspire disgust, were it not that there, at least to all Christian men, they must be deeply interesting; and their apparent faith renders them of far higher interest than the habitués of the fashionable churches of the Chaussée d'Antin. The boudoir of Notre-Dame de-Lorette exhibits little beyond faces marked by the dissipation of society, to whom devotion is an affair of fashion. The quarter of St. Germain has conserved this aristocratic piety, and St. Germain des-Pres, and St. Thomas d'Aquin, received its last rays. The commonalty and the mercantile body are represented at St. Méry, at St. Nicholas-des-Champs, and at St. Laurent. The recent custom of guarding the churches by the soldiers of the Municipality and the police, I do not think a felicitous thought. Muskets are no ornament to the portals of churches; sedition can find no home in the holy precincts, and prayer is not strengthened by the appearance of bayonets. Religion and politics should be dissevered, and nothing earthly should be mixed with the aspirations for a better world.

General Tom Thumb has been presented to the King and the Royal Family: it was quite a fête for the little Duc de Chartres and the Count de Paris. The small general made his entrance like a triumphant hero; he was attended by his suite, consisting of his magister, his valet de chambre, his piano, and his dragoman. He was costumed, in the first instance, as a private gentleman, and evinced great amiability, save a slight degree of temper evinced on the occasion of his valet's deranging a portion of his costume; for the general is a strict disciplinarian in the affair of dress. He showed the King the card case presented to him by Queen Victoria, and distributed his lilliputian cards to the Royal Family with great affability. He commenced with his Majesty, the Queen, the Duchess of Orleans, and finished with the Duke de Chartres. When he left the presence he retired backwards, according to the strict laws of regal etiquette. Previous to his departure, he donned his various costumes, went through his "Grecian Statues," and received a brilliant brooch from the hands of Royalty—he immediately attached it to his cravat, removing the pin given to him by Fanny Elssler—an infidelity only to be pardoned where a King's gift is in question. Tom Thumb is, I assure you, the Magnus Apollo of the minute, and will, assuredly, largely increase his revenue and the amount of his income tax by his visit to our good city. To judge of the florescent state of poetry in France, no better instance could be adduced than the fact that at the meeting of the Academy at Toulouse no less a number than two hundred and thirty-seven pieces were sent in for judgment. Independently of the flood of verse, eight prose discourses on the subject of Dante were read. I have seen four of the former and two of the latter—and a greater waste of good paper and valuable ink I certainly never witnessed—the poetry is sensual and material—the prose without elevation or eloquence.

A most benevolent institution has been established, consisting of musicians of natives of every part of the globe. The object is to establish a fund for mutual succour, and a fund for pensions to ameliorate and insure their latter days from want and the many innumerable "ills that flesh is heir to." The association already numbers 1450 members. The society has received £4600. Several worthy objects have received relief. This is the true harmony of the soul—the chords of the heart never vibrate more gloriously than when touched by the fingers of charity.

FRANCE.

Some interesting discussions have taken place during the week in the Chamber of Peers upon a bill introduced by Count Daru, the provisions of which were calculated to repress speculations in railways. Some parts of the bill were agreed to, but when the question was finally put, the measure was rejected, the numbers being—

For the bill	51
Against it	86
Majority against the bill	—35

The weather continued to be beautiful in Paris. The temperature was as high as 63 of Fahrenheit on Monday, with a north-west wind. On Tuesday it was nearly at the same figure, with the wind from the oppposite point (south-east).

The most exciting topic at present under discussion in Paris, is the vote of 17,500,000 francs proposed by Marshal Soult, to defray the expence of arming the fortifications of Paris. This proposal has led to considerable irritation.

The treaty fixing the limits of the frontiers between Algeria and Morocco has been signed by both parties.

The general meeting of the shareholders of the Paris and Orleans Railroad was held at Paris on Saturday. The Council of Administration presented to the assembly a report on the situation of the company in 1844, from which it appears that the receipts amounted to 6,901,786f. and the expenses to 3,286,662 or 9.03 per cent. on the capital. More than 1,500,000 passengers and 127,000 tons of goods were conveyed in that year by the railroad.

The surplus was accordingly .. .. 3,615,124f.

The dividend was fixed at 39f. 25c. per share (exclusive of the reserve for the sinking fund), being at the rate of 7.85 per cent. on the original capital of 500f.

M. Pierre Laureau, historiographer to the Count d'Artois (Charles X.), and Deputy in the Legislative Assembly, has just died at St. André, in the 97th year of his age.

A dreadful murder was committed last week in the commune of Montrouge, near Paris. A widow lady named Sauval, nearly ninety years of age, the owner of considerable property in the commune, resided on the first floor of a house in the Grand Rue, No. 68. On Friday the porter of the house did not see Madame Sauval go out to market, according to her custom, but the circumstance created no uneasiness, as he supposed she might have provided herself on the Thursday with sufficient for the two days, but, not seeing her on Saturday, he apprised the commissary of police, who went to the house, and, opening the bedroom door of Madame Sauval, found her dead, with four wounds upon the head, apparently inflicted with a hammer. The murderer, or murderers, are supposed to have effected an entrance on Thursday night, by scaling the garden wall. It is supposed that they carried off a considerable sum of money, for Madame Sauval was, according to report, in the habit of keeping a large amount about her, or in her bedroom.

The Commerce reports that the Prince de Joinville is to take the command, in the month of June, of a small squadron for evolutions in the Mediterranean.

The Chamber of Deputies has been engaged in discussing the Sardinian treaty. An amendment was proposed, to continue the high duty on cattle imported from Sardinia, and resisted by the Government, on the ground that it was necessary to protect the consumer as well as the agriculturist. The former duty on cattle was far too high, and the consequence was, that the price of butcher's meat had greatly increased throughout the whole of France. The Chamber rejected the amendment, and adhered to the lower scale of duty. In resisting the amendment, M. Guizot said it was the resolution of the Government to make the carrying of the treaty a Cabinet question.

The message of the new President of America has, of course, occasioned great delight to that portion of the Paris press which is ever on the watch for matters of supposed embarrassment for England, and the Débats is almost the only paper which is honest and fearless enough to deprecate the re-annexation of Texas to the United States as a measure calculated to give encouragement and fresh vigour to slavery.

NEW ZEALAND.

New Zealand papers to the 28th of September have arrived, from which it appears that this colony has imitated the mother country by obtaining the advantages of an income-tax. It has even gone beyond England in regard to the tariff, having actually abolished all Customs' duties of whatever description.

The legislative body, consisting of six individuals, the Governor included, met, after the recess, on September 19, 1844; and his Excellency opened the session with an address, setting forth that they were assembled under extraordinary circumstances, and they must adopt strong measures and most sweeping alterations. These turn out to be no less than the total abolition of the Customs, and the imposition of a property and income-tax.

After the speech had been delivered, and a few despatches, &c., communicated, Governor Fitzroy then laid on the table his bill for abolishing the Customs, and for laying a tax upon property and income. The reasons for giving up the Customs were, the impossibility of preventing smuggling, owing to the vast number of harbours which indented the coast, the objection the natives had to Customs, and the expense of collection. The bill was read a first time.

This was on the Thursday; on the Tuesday following the bill was read a second time, after some discussion and some alteration.

It appears that Capt. Fitzroy is at issue with Lord Stanley about the Militia Bill. The Governor had been directed by the noble lord to introduce it to his council, and he had done so, but it was opposed by the Attorney-General and the Colonial Secretary; and the Governor frankly said that his opinion was so decided as to the extreme impolicy and imprudence of the measure, that if the council had passed it, he should have withheld his assent. It was his duty, however, to propose it.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The monthly overland mail has arrived. It left Bombay on the 1st of March. The news received by it is unimportant, with the exception of the alleged preparations for war which has been so long expected with the Punjaub, and the complete pacification of the disturbances in the states of Sawunt Warree and Kolapore. Martial law had been proclaimed in those districts, and several unimportant affairs had come off in the course of the month, which had led to the capture of some six or seven hundred of the insurgents, the most active of whom were about to be tried by military law for the part they had taken in the insurrection. Colonel Outram had been appointed political agent or resident at Sattara. The Punjaub continued in a feverish state, but with that exception the most profound quiet reigns throughout India. Sir Henry Hardinge was at Calcutta. The only news from China, of the slightest interest, is of a commercial character.

Dr. Wolff had arrived in Malta on his return to England, and proceeded by the steamer on the 28th ult.

The ship Thomas Lowry, from Sydney to London, arrived off Dartmouth on the 27th ult., landed her letters, and received a supply of provisions, and shipped at the same time one of the most experienced pilots out of that port. By some unforeseen circumstances the ship struck on some sunken rocks, became waterlogged, and was run ashore near the harbour, where she filled. The pilot the day after put an end to his existence by hanging himself in his own house.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The Navy Estimates.—The House of Commons re-assembled to-day, when Mr. Corry moved the Navy Estimates in Committee of Supply. He stated the reason which induced the Government to propose an increase of 4000 men, which was not on account of any apprehension of war, or with any view to aggression, but simply because it was considered politic that, in addition to the vessels required for the protection of her commerce, this country should have at command a disposable squadron of ships of war, which, independently of other considerations, were essential for the purpose of exercising our officers in naval tactics, and affording means for carrying on experiments with reference to the comparative qualities of our ships of war. Mr. Corry noticed the increasing demands for ships on distant stations, and explained the details of the additional expenses that would be incurred. In reference to the increase of £531 for addition to salaries and allowances, he said, the increase was not required for the purpose of making good any deficiency, but chiefly for the augmentation of the steam navy, the principal cause of increase under this and other heads. After going through the items on which augmentations were required, Mr. Corry said, that nearly the whole of the increase of the estimates which provided for purely naval services, except the first two votes, and the fourth, for the registry of seamen, had been occasioned by the necessity, to which attention had been directed by her Majesty in the speech from the throne, of augmenting our steam navy. The whole increase in the estimates was £686,072, of which the three excepted votes amounted to £193,280. Of the remainder, £383,000 was for steam; £35,000 under Nos. 6 and 8; £47,000 for timber at Deptford; £121,000 for machinery and iron steamers; and £180,000 for factories, &c., making a total of £383,000; showing an increase for the naval service of the year, large indeed, but not greater than was demanded by the exigencies of the case. (Hear.) The whole increase was undoubtedly large, but still the estimates had been prepared with a rigid regard to economy. Mr. Corry now moved the first vote—that there be employed in the service of her Majesty, for the year ending March 31, 1846, 40,000 seamen and marines, including 2,000 boys.—Sir C. Napier took the opportunity of renewing his former objections to our present system of naval architecture and Admiralty management.—Sir G. Cockburn defended the management of the navy by the present Government, and spoke of the difficulty of practically applying scientific discoveries to naval architecture.—Captain Berkeley gave his opinion that Great Britain was far superior to other nations in respect to steam-vessels, even more so than in respect to sailing vessels. The gallant captain, referring to the pamphlet of the Prince de Joinville, said that work had caused much sensation, but he did not attribute to that Prince that enmity towards England which had been by some ascribed to him. With respect to the steam navy, the Prince de Joinville had pointed out his tactics for putting his country on an equality with Great Britain; and, since the author had been kind enough to furnish the English with his opinion, the latter must be dull indeed if they should not be prepared to counteract his tactics.—After speeches from Capt. Rous, Admiral Bowles, Capt. Carnegie, Mr. Hume, Mr. S. Herbert, Lord Ingestre, and Mr. W. Williams, Lord Palmerston urged that, from the state of our foreign relations, it was expedient to turn attention to the state of the naval defence of the country, with a view to placing it in a condition of efficiency as perfect as it ought to be during a state of peace. Lord Palmerston argued that the policy of excessive conciliation to the Powers had not led to the results that had been anticipated. He noticed, as an illustration, the recent message of President Polk, and, after arguing that the Government should call science to the aid of practice in the construction of vessels, accused the Government of inconsistency in regard to the sugar duties. He said, the present Government turned out their predecessors and came into power upon a pretence of a desire to extinguish the slave trade. On the question of sugar they said, "Don't admit this Brazilian sugar; it is impossible you should give this encouragement to the slave-trade." What happened? Why, the very first thing that they did after they came into power was to acquiesce in the refusal of the French Government to ratify a treaty for the suppression of the slave-trade; the next thing they did was to let the United States out of a treaty to co-operate with them for this object; and the third thing they did was to concede the mutual right of search for the suppression of the slave-trade. Now, when they were called on to encourage the commerce and to give scope to the industry of the country, by permitting the importation of foreign sugar, they are full of apprehension lest we should encourage the slave-trade. But when the question is about retaining our late powers, which are absolutely necessary for the suppression of the slave-trade, then, for motives either of their own convenience, or for the convenience of other Governments, they at once throw to the winds everything which had been gained by their predecessors for accomplishing that. He argued at some length, with a view to prove the subserviency of the Conservatives to the Cabinet of M. Guizot, and concluded thus:—"It appears to me, therefore, that her Majesty's Government, in order to retain a foreign Minister in power six months longer, and to catch for him the fleeting and uncertain popularity of his countrymen, has consented to sacrifice a principle which for years has been consecrated by both houses of Parliament, and likewise to take away that protection from the helpless Africans which this country has so long thrown over them. (Hear, hear.) I, for my own part, sir, can only say that, if the Ministers do pursue this course, it will be difficult for them to clear themselves from the charge of having fallen into a miserable weakness, or of having been guilty of a most detestable hypocrisy."—Sir R. Peel concurred with Lord Palmerston that experience ought to be aided by science, and vindicated the course taken by the Government in respect to the right of search. He denied that there had been undue concessions. The noble lord talks of concessions that we have made, and of conciliatory language that we have used. No doubt we have not thought it discreditable to British Ministers to avow a desire to maintain peace so long as we could do so consistently with the honour and integrity of this country. (Cheers.) No doubt we did hold that language, and I contend that such language does not incapacitate us from vindicating the honour of this country whenever it shall be assailed. (Cheers.) I speak now, of course, without reference to any other nation; but I would have much more confidence in a temperate and effectual vindication of the honour and interests of a country, when the Government does maintain a moderate, calm, and temperate tone, that when it blusters and storms in a useless and unbecoming manner. (Hear, hear.) Sir R. Peel then argued upon the folly of going to war from trifling motives. Were France and England, for instance, to go to war for the sake of an island, as Tahiti, some eight or ten thousand miles distant? He admitted that the right of search, if mutually conceded, was the most efficacious instrument for the suppression of the slave trade. But the estrangement between France and England originated in the transactions accompanying and following the Syrian war, and at that period Lord Palmerston was the Minister for Foreign Affairs. There was, however, little doubt that two such eminent men as the Duke de Broglie and Dr. Lushington, associated as their past lives were with the suppression of the slave trade, would adopt anything less efficacious than that right of search which had now become practically useless. Having vindicated the foreign policy of the Government, Sir R. Peel said—I am sure the country does not disapprove of the efforts we have made to maintain peace. (Hear.) I do not believe the country is under the impression that our power to resist unjust demands, or to maintain the honour and the interests of the nation where the maintenance of them may be necessary, has been in the slightest degree impaired either by the holding of conciliatory language, by the direct avowal of our desire to maintain peace, or by our having consented to an arrangement in a case where compromise was possible, and where mutual concession would put an end to immediate danger: I do not believe the people of this country, or that this house, will think that by this moderation we are in the least incapacitated from acting with energy, with firmness, and with vigour, when necessary to do so, for the maintenance of the honour or the interests of the country. (Hear.)—Lord John Russell said he was sensitively alive to the value of the blessings of peace, but he did not think that peace was most effectually preserved by concession. As to the increased vote for the naval service, he was of opinion that it was justified by the altered circumstances in which we found ourselves placed by the progress made in steam navigation.—The vote was agreed to, and at a quarter past twelve o'clock the house adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The Post-office and Mr. Mazzini.—Mr. Sheil moved a resolution, "That this house has learned with regret that, with a view to the prevention of political movements in Italy, and more especially in the Papal States, letters addressed to foreigners, and having no reference to the internal tranquillity of this country, should have been opened upon the authority of a warrant which had been issued, bearing date the 1st of March, 1844, and cancelled upon the 3rd of June, in the same year." Mr. Sheil, in support of his proposition, went over all the well-known circumstances connected with the insurrections in Calabria, and deprecated very strongly the opening of Mr. Mazzini's letters. There was no palliation, he said, for the conduct of Sir James Graham, whom he accused of establishing a dangerous system of espionage.—Sir J. Graham resisted the motion, and, while defending his official conduct with respect to the opening of letters, repeated the facts he had before detailed in regard to the Foreign Office and the Bandieras. He then touched upon the conduct of Mr. Mazzini, who, he said, took up his residence at Marseilles. Here, as the head of a secret tribunal, he was announced in the Moniteur, as formally vindicating, by his signature, the fact of the assasination of certain of his countrymen; and, though Mazzini had threatened a prosecution against the official periodical, on account of the publication, he had never brought one. The French Government having refused to allow any further asylum to Mr. Mazzini, he repaired to Geneva, from whence he endeavoured to excite an insurrection in Savoy. Having joined in an invasion of that territory, which proved disastrous, he was readmitted to Geneva, on a solemn assurance that he would refrain from further disturbing the peace of that State; he was detected, a few days afterwards, in endeavouring to engage men for another invasion. It was under information of this nature respecting the character of Mr. Mazzini, that he had issued the warrant for opening his letters in the month of March, 1844—a warrant which was not issued at the instance of any foreign person or power whatever. Everything that was done was purely of a Ministerial character. The letters were opened, and copies forwarded unread to the Foreign Secretary, to be used at his discretion. Sir James Graham vindicated the power of opening letters, by citing the example of the Duke of Newcastle in 1744, and that of Mr. Fox in 1782, although, he said, he was not anxious to shelter himself at the expense of other persons.—Mr. T. Duncombe characterised the statement of Sir James Graham respecting Mr. Mazzini, as calumniatory of an absent man, unable to defend himself. The publication in the Moniteur was a forgery, and a paper which had copied it had been proceeded against by Mr. Mazzini for defamation, and had been convicted, the defence set up being that there was more than one Mazzini in the world, and consequently that he could not have been the party referred to. On the trial of the Italians for murder, a verdict had been returned of homicide without premeditation, it being clear that the transaction originated in a momentary quarrel.—On a division, the numbers were:—

For Mr. Sheil's motion	38
Against it	52
Majority against Mr. Sheil's motion ..	—14

The Repeal of the Glass Duties.—The house then went into committee on the Excise Acts, in order to pass resolutions with a view to the repeal of the glass duties. After some discussion on the subject of allowance for drawbacks, the resolutions were agreed to, and a bill was ordered to be brought in, having the above object in view.

The house adjourned at a quarter-past nine.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

Regulation of Calico Print Works.—Lord Ashley having moved the second reading of his bill, for the regulation of calico print works, Sir J. Graham stated the conditions under which the Government, after due consideration, would be disposed to support the measure. They could not agree to the extension of the operation of the bill to bleaching, dyeing, or calendering establishments, or to the limitation of the hours of labour of children in those works to twelve hours when employed on alternate days, or eight hours when employed daily. But supposing that the bill were restricted to print works, the Government were willing to assent to the prohibition of the employment of children under eight years—a prohibition which they believed to be humane, wise, politic, and right. To the prohibition of night work to children and females, though of more doubtful policy, the Government were likewise ready to assent, as the principle had already been adopted by the Legislature, but with the proviso that "night" should be defined and understood to mean from nine in the evening to five in the morning. Sir James Graham suggested, with regard to the education of children, that, instead of adopting a restriction of labour hours, which, during the whole season, would have the effect of preventing the employment of adults, it should be made imperative to have young persons employed in print works allowed school for three or four hours a day for, say one hundred days annually, exclusive of Sundays. He also suggested the expediency of making the bill independent of all other Acts, and containing the whole of the regulations applicable to calico print works. If these modifications and suggestions were accepted by Lord Ashley, he (Sir James Graham) was prepared to give his consent to the second reading.—Lord Ashley accepted the terms offered. He said he saw himself standing almost alone, when the Government was supported by the great mass of the master calico printers of the United Kingdom. The struggle on his part would be nearly hopeless, owing to the delay and opposition that would be offered to a measure intended to alleviate existing evils. But if he acceded to the proposition of Government, he did not think that he would be delaying the ultimate success of his principles.—After a protracted conversation, the bill was read a second time.

Illegal Committals for Poor-rates.—On going into Committee of Supply, Sir J. Easthope brought forward the case of a poor man named Thomas Lukin, and a poor woman named Ann Ward, who having been committed for non-payment of poor-rates, and the rate having been subsequently paid by some benevolent persons, were re-committed, with hard labour, for the non-payment of costs, by the magistrates of Leicester.—Sir James Graham stated that he had called upon the magistrates for an explanation, and that the explanation given by them was not satisfactory. He should, therefore, advise her Majesty to order the immediate liberation of these persons, and had he known the matter sooner, he would have given the same advice.

On the motion of Sir J. Graham, the Museums of Arts Bill was committed pro formâ, with a view of introducing provisions to extend its powers to all malicious injuries of works of art in every part of the United Kingdom.

Relief of the Poor in Scotland.—The Lord Advocate, in moving for leave to bring in a bill to provide for the better relief of the poor in Scotland, entered into a clear exposition of the state of the poor in that country, and explained the remedies which it was proposed to provide, in order to better their condition.—Lord Dalmeny congratulated the Government and the country on the fact that the Ministers had not only turned their attention to the question of the Scotch poor, but grappled with the difficulties that beset it.—Several hon. members expressed their approval of the principle of the bill, which was read a first time.

The house adjourned at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Their lordships resumed their sittings to-day.

The Ashburton Treaty.—Lord Ashburton complained of the personal tone adopted by Lord Palmerston on Monday night in commenting upon the treaty which he (Lord Ashburton) had negociated with the United States for the settlement of the Boundary Question, and contended that, combining all the circumstances, and considering the line decided upon by the King of the Netherlands, his (Lord Ashburton's) line was so much the best, that it was hardly fair to cast upon him any reproach whatever. He denied that he had unjustifiably ceded any territory whatever, and insisted that his decision on the subject was better than that of Lord Palmerston. The house adjourned shortly after this explanation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

The Board of Trade and the Croydon Railway.—Mr. Dodd moved, that the report of the Board of Trade against the Bill intended to be brought in by the Croydon Railway Company, to authorise the construction of a railway to Ashford, be referred back to the Board of Trade for re consideration. The motion gave rise to a long discussion, but it was rejected by 123 to 78.

The Grant to Maynooth.—After the presentation of an immense number of petitions against any increased grant to the College of Maynooth, the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole house, to consider the 40th of George III.—Sir Robert Peel then rose to submit the proposition of the Government on the subject. He declared that the Government came forward in a friendly spirit to improve the present system of Roman Catholic education—(Opposition cheers)—and to extend, to a liberal amount, parliamentary protection. (Cheers from the Opposition.) This it proposed to do, not by attempting any interference with the doctrines of the Roman Catholic creed, but by a more liberal grant to improve the system and elevate the tone of the Catholic people of Ireland. Sir R. Peel argued that it was the duty of the Government to give an improved system of academical education to Maynooth, with an increase of the public grant, and that the former grant was not sufficient for the purpose. Sir R. Peel concluded by moving for leave to bring in a bill to amend the acts relative to the College of Maynooth.—Sir R. Inglis followed, and spoke at great length against the plan.—Several members joined in the discussion; which was closed by Lord John Russell, who supported the motion, and Mr. Sheil, who defended the policy of the Ministry in a brilliant speech. On the division taken by Sir R. Inglis against the Government, the numbers were:—Against the motion, 114; for it, 216: majority only in favour of the Government, 102.

The house adjourned at two o'clock.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.

Enclosure of Commons.—The Earl of Lincoln has given notice that he shall, on the 15th of April, move for leave to bring in a bill for the enclosure of commons, and the drainage of waste lands.

The New Zealand Company.—Mr. Aglionby has given notice, on the part of Mr. C. Buller, that the latter hon. gentleman will, on the 15th of April, call the attention of the house to the state of the colony of New Zealand, and to the case of the New Zealand Company.

The Smoke-prohibiton Bill.—This bill has been read a second time, and referred to a select committee.

New Writ.—A new writ has been moved for Greenock, in the room of Mr. Wallace, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

Colonial Accounts.—On the motion of Dr. Bowring, a committee has been appointed to inquire into the state of the colonial accounts, and the best means of improving them.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS.

The Oregon Territory.—Lord J. Russell has given notice of his intention to call the attention of the Government to that part of the message of the President of the United States which related to the Oregon territory.

Sir Henry Pottinger.—Mr. Hume gave notice that he should, on the 17th, bring forward his motion relating to Sir H. Pottinger.

A discovery has recently been made in Birmingham of a manufactory of counterfeit foreign coins on an extensive scale, the principal party engaged in it being a foreigner, who is now in custody, having been remanded by the magistrates.

The latest excavation made at Pompeii has been exceedingly interesting. A house was laid open in the quarter of the people. Twenty workmen were employed at the task, and the entrance room furnished about twenty-five articles, vases, cups, altars, and bronze pateræ. Another room, from which a narrow passage led to the kitchen, contained some large earthen jars. In the kitchen, the tinning of the saucepans was still bright. A large boiler, two jars with handles, light and transparent, objects exceedingly rare in collections, were also found there. The next excavations were to be made in the workshops of sculpture of the town.

A letter from Vienna states that the breaking up of the ice on the Danube took place on March 21, without causing much damage. The pieces of ice carried away an arch of a bridge of the Northern railroad. The waters of the river, which had suddenly risen several feet, had again fallen, removing all fear of inundation.

Letters from Alexandria of the 20th ult., mention that the Pacha returned to Cairo, from Upper Egypt, on the 11th. Ibrahim Pacha had been seized with serious illness while travelling in the Delta. Mr. Galloway, of London, had submitted his plan for a railway from Cairo to Suez; capital £350,000; length of line 88 miles; the work to be completed in 18 months.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. April 2.

This being the first day of Easter Term, a congregation was holden for granting graces and conferring degrees, when the following were conferred:—

Bachelors in Divinity.—Rev. S. H. Russell, and Rev. A. J. Hessey, Fellows of St. John's College.

Masters of Arts.—Rev. C. F. Wyatte, and Rev. R. W. Eyton, Christ Church; G. J. Stone and G. Buckle, Oriel College; R. C. Dickerson, Worcester College; Rev. J. P. Scott, Rev. G. J. Watts, and Rev. G. H. Proctor, Balliol College; Rev. C. Cox, Rev. G. T. Ford, and Rev. J. Tunnard, Exeter College; Rev. H. Milne, and Rev F. W. Ryle, Fellows of Brazenose College; Rev. G. W. Paul, Fellow, H. G. J. Parsons, Fellow, and Rev. G. H. Fell, Demy, Magdalen College; Rev. J. Smith, Rev. J. Coventry, C. Moody, A. J. Ten Brocke, and H. Gardiner, Magdalen Hall.

Bachelors of Arts.—E. V. L. Houlton, and S. Leigh, St. John's College; T. Hullah, Brazenose College; R. H. Hooper, Lincoln College.

At two o'clock the new Proctors, attended by several members of their respective colleges, went in procession to the Convocation House, and were admitted into office by the Vice Chancellor with the usual formalities. On taking their chairs they nominated the following as Pro-Proctors, or Deputies:—Rev. T. H. Newman, Rev. G. A. Browne, Rev. F. M. Knollis, Magdalen College; and Rev. W. Andrews, Exeter College.

COUNTRY NEWS.

West Kent Election.—A requisition is in course of signature to Viscount Holmesdale, to allow himself to be put in nomination as a candidate for West Kent, to supply the vacancy caused by the elevation of Lord Marsham to the Peerage. A meeting of the Conservative electors is to take place on Monday at Maidstone.

The Weather in the North.—The weather is now completely changed in the North of England, and spring has at length made its appearance in earnest. In all directions the operations of the husbandman, in ploughing and sowing, are being conducted with unusual activity.

Earthquake at Huntingdon.—Shortly after nine o'clock on Wednesday evening week, a slight shock of an earthquake was felt in Huntingdon, occasioning much alarm to many of the inhabitants. In some of the houses the vibration was very perceptible, whilst various articles were moved on the shelves, and others thrown down. It was accompanied by a low, rumbling, underground noise. It lasted about half a minute, and the same sensation was experienced through the county about the same time. The following particulars are mentioned by the governor of the county gaol:—"Every part of the prison was affected by it; the floor and table of my office, on which I was then writing suddenly shook, and at the same time a great noise, resembling an explosion, was distinctly heard. I instantly proceeded with my officers to examine every cell and prisoner, expecting to discover some effects, but found none. Several prisoners said their iron bedsteads shook very much; my first impression was that the large iron boiler of our warming apparatus had burst, although it seemed impossible, as I had lately seen it filled with water; I was therefore left to infer that it must be the effects of earthquake." At Hitchinbrook, and other places standing away from the town, the shock and noise were more perceptible, and created a proportionately greater degree of alarm.

Case of Poisoning at Tooting.—On Saturday night, a circumstance that placed the lives of five individuals (four men and a woman) in the greatest jeopardy took place at Mr. Heath's calico-printing factory, in Garrat-lane, Tooting. In the course of the afternoon the party had purchased some fish with the intention of cooking them on the premises, and having them for supper. A man named Reynolds left off work before the others, and prepared to cook the fish, but wanting some flour to dress the fish with he applied to a person named Finch, who had charge of the colour room, for some. Finch told Reynolds he had not got any, but the latter not believing him, as he knew that flour was usual in thickening the colours, watched Finch out of the colour store, and perceiving something in one of the barrels, which he believed to be flour, he took some of it and used it in cooking the fish. The party had hardly commenced their repast, when they were all seized with violent retching, and it was then discovered that Reynolds, instead of using flour, had taken a composition of arsenic and starch. Mr. Heath sent for Dr. Bainbridge, of Tooting, immediately, and on that gentleman's arrival he instantly applied the stomach pump and strong emetics. The men were so far recovered as to be enabled to resume their work on Monday; but the young woman is in a state that almost precludes hope of recovery.

Burglary and Attempted Murder at Cardiff.—On Wednesday week, between the hours of two and three o'clock, the house of the Misses Vaughan, who conduct a ladies' boarding-school, in Crockherbtown, Cardiff, was broken into, and a silver sugar tongs stolen therefrom. A young lady, named Fowler, a governess in the establishment, hearing footsteps, and having repeatedly called out "who is there?" the noise still continuing, opened her bed-room door, and with great courage proceeded to the drawing-room, on entering which she was horrified at the appearance of the ruffian, who, on being questioned by Miss Fowler, discharged a pistol at her. She miraculously escaped, a slug having lodged in the door close to her. Still possessing her presence of mind, she rushed back to her room, locked the door, and commenced ringing the alarm bell, which, with the report of the pistol, awoke the inmates of the house, and the miscreant lost no time in making his escape, and taking with him only the article of plate mentioned.

Attempted Murder at Liverpool.—On Tuesday morning a man stabbed his wife at No. 11, Lower Milk-street, Liverpool. The parties had only removed on the evening before (Monday) from Cockspur-street to Milk-street, where they took lodgings on the first floor. After the lodgings were taken, the husband, who has given his name as John Morris Murphy, and who is an Irishman, and an oil and colour mixer, went out and remained at some public-house during the whole of the night. On his return home, he requested his wife, who was lying upon a wretched bed in the apartment, to get up and prepare him some breakfast. She refused, upon the ground that she had no victuals in the house, and no money to purchase any, whereupon he seized hold of an old table knife, and stabbed her with it behind the ear and on the right side of the neck. Her screams brought several of the neighbours to the spot, and there they beheld the blood flowing copiously from the wound, and Murphy in the act of holding, with one hand, a washhand basin to receive it, and endeavouring with the other to stop the bleeding by applying a cloth to the wound. The account he gave of the transaction was, that it was purely accidental; that she fell against a large pan that was lying on the floor, and that the broken edge of the vessel caused the injury. This story, however, was looked upon as very improbable, and was rendered still more so by the medical men being of opinion that the wound was caused by a sharp instrument. A rusty table knife was found in the room, and was taken possession of by one of the police officers. The prisoner was apprehended, and conveyed to Vauxhall Bridewell, where he remained during the day, and repeatedly made inquiries as to how his wife was getting on, and whether she was likely to survive. She was conveyed to the Northern Hospital, where everything was done for her that medical and surgical skill could accomplish. Her life on Tuesday afternoon was considered in imminent danger. It appears that he has not been in the habit of following his trade, and had no means of livelihood except selling newspapers. The parties have seven children, the youngest of whom is only two months old, and the eldest only ten years.

SCOTLAND.

Loss of Life from a Hurricane at Glasgow.—On Thursday week there was a violent storm of wind at Glasgow, and an accident of a very appalling kind took place in the town of Pollokshaws, about three miles from that city. About ten minutes past four o'clock, when the hurricane was at its height, the gable of a two story house situated in Pollock-street, the building of which was only finished on the previous day, and which, consequently, was not roofed in, was blown down, and the heavy stones of which it was composed descending on the roof of a little thatched tenement situated nearly close beside it, brought the whole fabric, with the exception of a small portion of the front wall, to the ground. Unfortunately, no less than seven individuals were in the house at the time, five of whom perished amongst the ruins. This ill-fated family consisted of John Mutters and his wife, two old people, Mrs. Ryan, a widowed daughter who resided with them, her three children, and a grandniece of the old woman, named Elizabeth Brown.

Professor of Music, Edinburgh.—On Saturday, the 29th ult., John Donaldson, Esq., was elected to the Professor's chair. There were fifteen candidates, two of whom, however, Sir Henry Bishop and Mr. Muller, retired before the election.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

The Manslaughter by Lord Rendlesham's Gamekeeper.—At the Ipswich Assizes, on Monday, William Tibbenham, aged 32, gamekeeper to Lord Rendlesham, Wantisden, was charged with the manslaughter of Mary Ann Tibbenham, his late wife, at Wantisden, on the 17th of February. Mr. Gurdon opened the case, stating that the prisoner, when sober, was a kind and attentive husband and father, but when drunk, he always exhibited the most irascible disposition. About two years since, his wife was compelled to leave the house, for fear of receiving personal violence at the hands of the prisoner. [He then narrated all the circumstances of the frightful transaction, which have already been so amply reported.] The prisoner had made several statements, but they did not agree. He had said that he was taking the pistol from a chest, and that the moment he touched it, it went off, and shot his wife. But this statement, he apprehended, would not be believed, for the evidence of the surgeon, would prove that such an injury could not be inflicted at the distance which the pistol must have then been from her face. The facts having been proved in evidence, the jury returned a verdict of "Guilty of Manslaughter."

The Late Forgery Case at Stockport.—At the Chester Assizes, on Tuesday, Mr. Justice Cresswell passed sentence on John Kenyon Winterbottom, the Stockport attorney, who was some time ago convicted of forging an endorsment to a bill of exchange for £5000, with intent to defraud the trustees of the Pelican Insurance office. The particulars of the case were given at the time, and it will be remembered that some objections were submitted to the judges. These objections were decided against the prisoner. Mr. Justice Cresswell characterised the case as a most aggravated one, and sentenced Winterbottom to be transported for life.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

The Watermen's Pier at Greenwich.—At the assizes at Kingston on Monday, an action was tried Dobson v. Blackmore, to recover compensation from the defendant for having, as was alleged, created an obstruction in the water-way to certain premises belonging to the plaintiff, and which abut upon the river at Greenwich, but the real question at issue was, the legality of the watermen's floating pier, erected at that place. A number of witnesses were called in support of the case. The alleged obstruction, it appeared, took place on Whit-Monday, 1842, when, of course, the watermen were very busy from the holiday people flocking to the fair, and were, therefore, not very willing to have their temporary pier disturbed. It was very evident from some of the testimony given that there was great jealousy between the owners of the two piers, and that the real object of the present action was to do away with the floating pier. It was stated that the action was not brought to obtain damages, but to establish a legal right. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 1s.

POLICE.

Burglary and Capture of the Burglars.—At Lambeth Police office on Monday, Edward Sullivan and John Murphy, two notorious characters, were charged with burglariously breaking into the Gun Tavern, in St. George's-fields. Mr. Charles Pitcher, the landlord of the Gun Tavern, in Lambeth-road, deposed, that on Saturday night, at twelve o'clock, he closed his house, and having secured all the doors as usual, retired to rest. At about three o'clock on the following morning he was awoke by a violent knocking at his front door by police constable 69 L. He hastened down stairs, when he found the bar door open and the things strewn about, and it was evident that the place had been regularly ransacked. He missed his great coat and a musical snuff-box from the bar, which were safe in the bar when he left it shortly after twelve o'clock, and observed that the cellar door, which had been closed, was open. He admitted the police by the front door, but by this time the thieves made their escape. In reply to the questions of Mr. Henry, Mr. Pitcher said that he had himself secured all the doors before going to bed, and had taken the till up stairs with him. He had, however, left his pocket-book in his great-coat pocket, and in it a bill of exchange, and various memorandums of no particular value. The coat, with the pocket-book in the pocket, had been found by the police in the cellar, and the musical snuff-box had subsequently been found in the dust-bin of one of his neighbours, a few doors off. Was certain the musical box produced was his property, and he had seen it safe on the mantel-piece at twelve o'clock on Saturday night.—Police-constable 69 L deposed that between the hours of three and four o'clock on Sunday morning he was on duty in the Lambeth-road, and on passing the Gun Tavern observed a light inside. This being unusual, he listened for some minutes in front, when he heard something hard drop on the floor, which he had no doubt was the lock of the bar door when forced off, and also hearing footsteps, he at once suspected that there were thieves in the house. Of this fact he was confirmed by observing a mark which he had placed on the cellar-flap removed, and he in consequence whistled, when police constable L 125 came to him. He was then returning to the house, when he saw the prisoner Sullivan with his head above the cellar flap, but the moment he observed them he drew it back, and so closed the flap that neither he nor his brother officer could move it. Sullivan at that time had no hat on, and he (witness) saw him sufficiently to be able to swear positively to his identity. Other constables came up at the time, and suspecting the thieves would make their escape by the back way, he desired them to go round to the rear, in the Westminster-road. At this time Mr. Pitcher opened the door and admitted him, when he went into the cellar and found, as he had suspected, that the prisoners had effected their escape by the back. Witness, with the assistance of a ladder, got over 18 walls, many of them over ten feet high, and which was the only way the prisoners could have made their escape, and was told that two men were in the custody of his brother officer, and on their way to the station-house.—Samuel Hackaday, 178 L, deposed that about half past three o'clock on Sunday morning, while on duty in Blackfriars-road, he heard the springing of a rattle in the Lambeth road, and suspecting some robbery had been committed there, and knowing the locality, he ran to a part of the Westminster-road where there were some cottages, and where he thought it likely the thieves would have effected their escape from the backs of the houses in Lambeth-road. He was not there many minutes when he saw Murphy on the lids of one of the cottages, and he (witness) jumped up and laid hold of him, and they both came to the ground together. Aware that a number of bad characters were in the neighbourhood, witness drew his staff, when Murphy said, "Don't ill-use me; there are four of us." Witness asked, "Where are they?" and before he had time to answer, he (witness) saw the prisoner Sullivan coming in the same direction that Murphy had come. He called to him while on the lids, and while holding Murphy, to come down. Sullivan replied that he would give himself up if he would not beat him with his staff. Sullivan was then coming down, but in doing so slipped, and dropped into a water-butt. Murphy at this time made a desperate effort to get off, by slipping through his coat and waistcoat, and did get from his hold, but he soon secured him a second time, and dragged him alongside the water-butt which Sullivan was in, and held them both until assistance came to him, and they were removed to the station-house. On searching Sullivan, he found upon him a box of silent matches, three cigars, one of which had been lit, and 6½d. in copper. Murphy had only a knife, and when at the station-house, requested witness to get him his shoes, which he would find in a yard close to where he had been taken, and there he found them. The hat of Sullivan had also been found, as also a handkerchief which he owned, and the musical-box belonging to the prosecutor. On searching the lodgings of Sullivan, he found a number of files, of a peculiar description, which he had very little doubt were used for preparing skeleton-keys, though the prisoner had described himself as a poulterer.—Mr. Henry thought the case quite clear against the prisoners, and he thought the police, particularly 178 and 69, had acted exceedingly well in the matter.—The prisoners were remanded.

Brutal Conduct of a Woman.—At the Thames Office, on Monday, Ellen Barrett was charged with committing a violent assault on Mary Holly, who has recently left the London Hospital, and appeared with her head and face bandaged and in a state of great suffering. The prosecutrix said, that on the night of Easter Monday between twelve and one o'clock, she was in a public-house in the middle of Stepney fair, when the prisoner rose from her seat, looked at her, and after clapping her hands said she would soon settle her, and soon afterwards "outripped" one of her eyes out of her head in a moment. This statement created a shudder in Court.—Mr. Broderip: No, your eye is not out; the certificate which I hold in my hand states that you received a lacerated wound in the cheek.—The prosecutrix: I was regularly gouged; my eye was out on my cheek, and the surgeon put it back in its place again. I've lost the sight of it.—Mr. Broderip: Did you not fight with her at all?—Witness: Yes, I struck her once, but she struck first.—The waiter at the public-house said the women fought in the tap room for a quarter of an hour, and he did all he could to prevent them. When the contest was at an end, the woman's eye was hanging down, and she said Barret had been gouging her. The prisoner, in defence, muttered that Holly struck her first.—Mr. Broderip told the prisoner that unless she found good bail, herself in £30, and two sureties of £15 each, to appear at the sessions, she would be committed for the assault.

Effect of Capital Punishments.—On Monday two boys, named Henry Eden and Francis Johnson, of the ages of twelve and fourteen years, were charged at the Town-hall, Windsor, with having broken open a tin box, containing monies belonging to the mother and brother of Eden, and stolen the whole of its contents, amounting to £1 18s. It appeared that the boys left Windsor as soon as they had effected the robbery, and returned, penniless, on Saturday, the day after the execution of Tawell, at Aylesbury. On being apprehended, the boy Eden admitted that he had broken open the box, by forcing the staple of the padlock, and taken the money, in order to enable him to go to Aylesbury, "to see the Quaker hung!" Aylesbury is upwards of thirty miles from Windsor. They were committed.

The Bill-discounting System.—At Marlborough-street, on Tuesday, Basil Cochrane Willis, a fashionably-dressed young man, about 25 years of age, was charged with obtaining fraudulent possession of a bill of exchange from Mr. Edmund Lyons Hearn, of 9, Pall Mall East, under the following circumstances:—The prosecutor stated that he was in possession of two promissory notes of Mr. J. Mytton, one of £600, and one for £500, both dated March 10, 1845, payable in four months, on which he had advanced the sum of £800 in money and checks. A gentleman of the name of Anderson called upon him on the evening of the 25th of March, and in consequence of information received from him, complainant was induced to call upon the defendant, who stated that Mr. Mytton was about to take up the bills, and upon that representation complainant was induced to give up the bills to the defendant. He had not since been able to recover the bills or their value.—Mr. Lane, solicitor, who appeared for the accused, contended that it was a mere scheme to get possession of property which had been fraudulently obtained, and was therefore justifiable; that Willis was but the agent of a Mr. Sutton, who was employed by Mytton to recover the bills, for which no value had been received. He called Mr. John Fox Fitzgifford Mytton, who stated that he had received a letter from Messrs. Smith and Co., of Great Marlborough-st., offering to discount bills for him; that he called and saw Mr. Smith, who stated that he was to see the person that evening who was to cash the bills, and appointed the following day to meet him. He called accordingly, and gave bills to Smith to the amount of £1,700, Mr. Smith saying that he should receive the money on the morrow, but he never got one farthing value for them. He then employed Mr. Sutton to recover them. Had not employed Mr. Willis, and never heard of Mr. Hearn's name in the transaction. Mr. Lane called Sutton and Goldsmith, the other two parties engaged in the affair, but they not answering to their names, Mr. Maltby held the defendant to bail in securities to the amount of £1,000 to appear that day week.

FROZEN FOUNTAIN AT NEW YORK.

Our illustration represents one of the most beautiful effects of the late severe weather at New York—the celebrated Fountain on the Bowling Green, whose limpid waters were for several days in "icy bonds," during the late frost. The Bowling Green is nearly the first spot on which the European lands in New York: there formerly stood here a statue of George III., which, in the fury of the revolution, was torn down, and presented to the British soldiers in the shape of bullets. There are several fountains in New York, but that on the Bowling Green is, to our artist's taste, the finest, though somewhat peculiar, it being an imitation of a heap of overhanging rocks: its height is about 25 feet, over which the water falls most picturesquely.

In taking leave of the American winter, we may observe that our own country has experienced a kindred severity. The meteorological observations made at the gardens of the Horticultural Society at Chiswick show the late winter to have been the most protracted and severe for many years past. From the 1st of December the mean temperature was 34 deg., being lower than that of any similar period in the present century, with the exception of that of 1813-14, when it was 1½ deg. lower. March exhibited a lower mean than any similar month since 1797; and the mean of February was lower than that of any in the present century, being 33 deg. 12 min., or 8 deg. below the average. The mean temperature of December was 33 deg. 4 min., or nearly 7 deg. below the average.

SWITZERLAND.

The news from Switzerland, given in the French papers, and received from other sources, is of a threatening character. It is even reported that one of the cantons was in movement, and about to make an attack.

The Journal des Débats says it is learned from Geneva that the free corps have made their first move. In the evening of the 29th, the Bâle country volunteers are said to have taken two cannon and a quantity of ammunition from the arsenal of Leichthal, and with them joined the free corps of Arau. It was generally reported that Lucerne was to be attacked on the 30th, on which day the volunteers of Soleure were also to march. The Government of Berne had, on its part, taken energetic measures for preventing the free corps of that canton from leaving it. It is certain that the Radical Committee at Arau has been in permanent sitting for the last fortnight, and has publicly enrolled the refugees from Lucerne, and volunteers from other cantons. In the cantons of Argau, Berne, Soleure, and Bâle-country, no obstacle has been thrown in the way of men moving to join the free corps, and who were easily recognised by the shape of their hats and their arms, which they conveyed in carts. On the other hand, the Government of Argau is restrained by the fear that during the excursion of its volunteers the Catholics may rise. The Vorort had also called out the whole of the federal contingent, and had taken measures to mobilise the Landsturm. The first battalion of the Austrian troops, intended to form a corps of observation on the Voralberg frontier of Switzerland, had arrived at Feldkirch. The Grand Council of Lucerne has been convoked to deliberate upon theamnesty.

Accounts from Zurich state, that on the 27th ult. the Executive Council and the cantonal authorities had assembled on receipt of despatches from the canton of Lucerne. Their contents, however, had not transpired, but it was understood that the Vorort had been requested to order the Government of Argau to dissolve the free corps encamped on the frontiers of Lucerne, evidently with the intention of invading this last canton. The most perfect tranquillity prevailed at Berne. General Sonnenberg, after the adjournment of the Federal Diet, had resigned his seat in the Executive Council of Lucerne, but on the 26th he came back on that resolution, which he regarded as incompatible with military honour at so critical a moment. Two battalions of the federal contingent were called out by the Government of Schwyz on the 26th.

SPAIN.

Letters from the North of Spain give some particulars of an attempt at a Carlist insurrection on the 24th ult., at Berga, a small town of Upper Catalonia, situated between Solsona, Puycerda, and Seu d'Urgel, which the Carlists, during the last civil war, surrounded with field-works, to save it from being taken by a coup de main. It was the seat of the Central Junta of Catalonia, and there expired the insurrection in 1840, when Espartero arrived in pursuit of Cabrera. A letter from Bayonne of the 28th ult. says:—

"A private letter, from a Carlist source it is true, confirms the announcement of the Pronunciamiento of Berga. This correspondent says, that the band of Tristany has considerably increased, and that the Captain-General Concha has gone out personally in pursuit of it. During the last six months more than 300 of the Carlist officers who followed Don Carlos into France have returned into Catalonia and Aragon, some availing themselves of the amnesty, and others entering clandestinely. Most of them are endeavouring to enlist followers. Pep del Oli, a celebrated Carlist partisan of Catalonia, has appeared at the head of a band of more than 100 men, on the heights, between Catalonia and Aragon. This Pep del Oli is a quondam captain of the Christina army, who deserted to the Carlists during the last war, and is represented to be both an intrepid and an enlightened officer.

"Balmaseda has been falsely stated to have entered Spain. One of his friends has received a letter from him, dated at St. Petersburgh, February 23. The whole of our police is on the alert. The Lieutenant of Gendarmerie went out yesterday with four mounted men, on the Behobia road, and has not yet returned. A fruitless search has been made during the whole of the last month, for the Carlist Major-General Zavala, who is believed to have passed several times lately secretly through Bayonne. It is affirmed that military clothing is being made surreptitiously."

It is stated from Madrid that 27 persons had been arrested, charged with participation in an "Esparterist" conspiracy.

BARBADOES.

The destruction by fire of the principal portion of Bridgetown, the capital of Barbadoes, was detailed in our journal of the 15th ult. By the courtesy of Mr. George Rutherford, H. M. Customs, Grenada, we are enabled to present our readers with the annexed view, from a sketch by our obliging Correspondent. It shows the island from Carlisle Bay, the principal, and, indeed, almost the only anchorage, where the merchant-vessels load and discharge their cargo, the sugar being brought from other parts of the island in small open vessels called droghers. Carlisle Bay is quite open to the westward, but sheltered by a projecting tongue of land, called Needham's Point, from the trades-wind of the Atlantic swell; and, except in the case of a hurricane, may be considered a secure port.

Bridgetown lies at the south-west end of the island; it is two miles in length, and half a mile wide. Though irregularly built, it contains many very handsome houses, and a large square adorned with a good statue of Lord Nelson, who is a great favourite in the West Indies. It contains a spacious cathedral, its towers scarcely rising above the roof, for fear of hurricanes, for which reason, also, the churches are without steeples. There are several chapels, schools for whites and blacks; also a college, literary and scientific societies, &c. Besides Bridgetown, there are three towns of smaller note, called Oistins, St. James's and Speights.

Barbadoes is the most eastern of the Caribbee Islands, and the most ancient of the British settlements in these seas; it is quite detached from the chain, being 80 miles eastward of St. Vincent, the nearest island. It lies N.W. and S.E., and is of an oval form—15 miles long, and 10 broad in the widest part. Nature has fortified its coasts with a coral reef, which runs off all the eastern and northern side of the island; the other parts of the coast have been fortified at great expense.

BARBADOES, FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.

TRAVELLING IN THE SOUTH AND WEST OF IRELAND IN 1845.—GETTING READY.

PRESENT LOCOMOTIVE COMMUNICATION IN IRELAND.

The progressive improvements of each succeeding age materially alter the systems which they find in existence. We give in our present number a couple of engravings, illustrative of the mode of travelling now generally pursued all over the Southern and Western, and part of the North-western districts of Ireland, by means of the public cars of Mr. Charles Bianconi. The original establishment of those peculiar vehicles, which emanated solely from that gentleman, completely revolutionized all the old customs with respect to journeying from one place to another in that country. They are, in turn, perhaps in less than a quarter of a century hence, fated to be superseded totally by railroads. Such is the fate of all sublunary things.—Tempora mutantur et nos mutamur in illis. Up to about the period of the Battle of Waterloo, the public accommodation for travelling in Ireland was of a very limited character. It was confined chiefly to a few mail and day coaches, running "few and far between," and that only on the great main lines of road, from some of the more important cities to Dublin. In those days a journey to the capital from the provinces, was an event in the life of ordinary people. Men about visiting England settled their affairs and made their wills, previously to starting on such a momentous expedition. The nobles and the opulent gentry of the land travelled in their own equipages; the rich posted it; the comfortable amongst the midling classes went in their inside jaunting-cars, a machine indigenous to the country; and the poor were almost always compulsorily pedestrian way-farers, except they got "a lift on the road," from a chance carrier going to the metropolis for, or returning from it with, "goods," as all kinds of merchandise were popularly termed. Occasionally, indeed, all ranks were sometimes, by fortuitous circumstances, made obligatory passengers by the coaches aforesaid; but to secure a seat, either "inside or out," required in these times no trifling precautions and pre-arrangement. There was to be an epistolary requisition to the agent at the nearest town through which the conveyance passed, often a very considerable distance off, to engage the necessary places some week or ten days previous. Then there was a reply to be waited for; the chances of "room" or "no room" to be calculated on; and finally, having gone through all these preliminary stages for the engagement of a berth in the stage, there was an additional drive of many miles across "out-of-the-way places," and at "out-of-the-way hours," to the most contiguous point by which the very difficultly-accessible machine took its way. Such was travelling in Ireland thirty years ago. Such was the state of things, for which the enterprise, intelligence, and acute observation of Mr. Bianconi prompted him to seek a remedy; and his present Car Establishment was the gradual result.

It would be perfectly supererogatory to dilate here upon the many extensive sound advantages accruing from that establishment. We shall only give a few statistical details, which will convey to our readers some notion of its extent. Its utility must be obvious to all, when we add that along almost all the lines, by which those cars pass, they travel three or four times a day, backwards and forwards, at stated hours, and are generally as filled with passengers, parcels, and luggage, as they can conveniently be. Our Illustrations will render any description of the vehicles themselves needless; and it will be sufficient here to add, merely that the size of the cars, and number of horses, vary proportionately to the exigencies of the different routes.

At the meeting of the British Association, which was held in Cork, in the August of the year 1843, Mr. Bianconi was called upon to furnish an explanatory account of the extent and details of his concern, as well as a short sketch of its commencement and progress. A short extract from what he delivered on that occasion will show at one view more clearly and succinctly to our readers, than any language we could use, the nature and magnitude of the establishment:—

"In July, 1815," observed Mr. Bianconi, "I started a car for the convenience of passengers from Clonmel to Cahir, which I subsequently extended to Tipperary and Limerick. At the end of the same year I started another car from Clonmel to Cashel and Thurles; and from Clonmel to Carrick-on-Suir, and Waterford (and subsequently, he might have also said, from Clonmel to Kilkenny); and I have since extended this establishment, including the most insulated localities—namely, from Longford to Ballina and Belmullet, which is 201 miles north-west of Dublin; from Athlone to Galway and Clifden, 183 miles due west of Dublin; from Limerick to Tralee and Cahirciveen, 233 miles south-west of Dublin, and numbering 110 vehicles, including mail coaches and different sized cars, capable of carrying from 4 to 20 passengers each, and travelling* 8 or 9 miles an hour, at an average fare of 1½d. per mile for each passenger, and performing daily 3800 miles, passing through over 140 stations for the change of horses, consuming 3000 to 4000 tons of hay, and from 30,000 to 40,000 barrels of oats annually, all of which are purchased in their respective localities."

He then went on to state, that with the exception of such portions of it as were in connection with the Post-office, or the Grand and Royal Canals, that establishment did not travel on Sabbath days. For this two reasons were assigned: the first was, "that the Irish, being a religious people, will not travel on business on Sundays;" and the second was, that his experience taught him he could work a horse eight miles a day for six days better than he could six miles for seven days in the week. In reply to a question from one of the members of the Association present, with regard to the number of men and horses in his employment, Mr. Bianconi further said, "that the number of horses was about 1200. There were about 110 drivers; and an estimate might be formed of the number of grooms engaged in his stables, from the fact that there were, as he before mentioned, about 140 stations for changing horses, in each of which there were from one or two to seven or eight men always occupied."

To these particulars, however, a few more might be appended, which we can ourselves supply from personal knowledge. It should be recollected that besides drivers, grooms, helpers, &c., there are, in over seventy of the principal cities, towns, villages, and hamlets through which these cars pass, regular agents appointed, all of whom, without exception, are men of great respectability and intelligence, and most of them even men of wealth. And it is a curious circumstance which has been remarked of the same establishment, that almost every individual in this latter capacity has invariably bettered his worldly condition very considerably, after his connection with it. Whether this be owing to an original judicious selection of persons who would have advanced their position in life by their prudence and integrity under any circumstances, or to a peculiar description of "luck" attached to the establishment (which is supposed in Ireland to be the case), or a mixture of both causes together, we do not take upon ourselves to assert; but we have heard the fact so stated, and there are many living instances of it.

Moreover, on the subject of the number of men employed about this concern, it may be further added, that there is, as we believe, in the town of Clonmel, which has always been the central point of the establishment, and in the neighbourhood of which the proprietor has for years resided, a factory for the manufacture and repair of vehicles and harness, and an hospital for sick or disabled horses. If, then, the number of coach and car builders, turners, carpenters, sawyers, painters, saddlers, wheelwrights, smiths, farriers, &c., who must be necessarily in constant employment in these last named departments, be added to those already enumerated, it must be seen that a very large number indeed is included within the range of this extensive and useful establishment.

One simple, but sage and unique principle, pervades the entire. Its efficacy is so obvious, in securing the proper discharge of all duties, that it is only astonishing it has not been more generally acted on in all large establishments. Its benefits are attested in many ways in this one. Its moral influence must at once be acknowledged. Its admirable effects in other points of view, in mere mundane matters of business, are strongly exemplified in the present instance. That principle is truth. Any man in the establishment ever convicted of a single deliberate falsehood, however trivial, is instantly dismissed, and never taken back. The mere enunciation of such a rule is sufficient. No dilation on it is needed. It conveys, at once, food for reflection, and a conviction of its wholesomeness.

In cases of accident, sickness, or old age, the men in this establishment, who had not forfeited their claims by any misbehaviour, receive their full wages during life; and after their death, their orphans are carefully looked after, and promoted to the service of the same in preference to others, if found fit and deserving. So popular too has been this establishment in the country, that its cars carrying the mails passed without the slightest molestation at all hours of the day and night, through the most disturbed districts at the worst of times.

The foregoing very brief history of this interesting establishment, may not be inopportune on the present occasion, and more especially when it is considered how, in the lapse of a few years, in case the projected system of railroads should be carried into full operation in Ireland, so extensive, and, in every sense so beneficial, an institution (for such it can justly be called) may be more or less materially affected by the introduction of that system. We shall treat of this important subject on a future occasion.

* Assuming that the speaker meant Irish miles, it may be right to observe that the proportion between these and English is as 4 to 5; the Irish mile being about one quarter longer than the English statute mile.

IRISH CAR TRAVELLING IN THE SOUTH AND WEST OF IRELAND, IN 1845.—GOING AT FULL SPEED.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

SIR THOMAS POTTER, FIRST MAYOR OF MANCHESTER.

This distinguished person, a true example of the giant industry and activity of the manufacturing North, may be regarded as having founded the corporation of Manchester, and as having been for a series of years the leading inhabitant of that town. Sir Thomas Potter was born at Tadcaster, in Yorkshire, on the 5th of April, 1774: he was the third son of Mr. John Potter, who rented an extensive farm near Tadcaster, called Wingate Hill, and was, we believe, for those days, a more than usually skilful and successful agriculturist. Sir Thomas, when about sixteen years of age, began to assist his father in the management of the farm; and the industry, energy, and perseverance which he afterwards displayed to such eminent degree in Manchester, were so successfully exerted at that time in his agricultural pursuits, that after a few years the farm was given up to his sole management, and it very soon became one of the most highly cultivated and productive in the county of York, Sir Thomas gaining the prizes for superior husbandmanship at two different agricultural meetings. Notwithstanding his succes in farming—an occupation most profitable during the first revolutionary war, and so congenial to his taste, that he never entirely relinquished it—Sir Thomas had sufficient sagacity to perceive that Manchester offered a better field than a Yorkshire farm for the employment of his capital and the exertion of his talents; he had enterprise enough to embark in a sphere of action totally different from the one in which he had been engaged. In or about the year 1803 he joined his two brothers, William and Richard, who had previously settled in Manchester, and the three carried on business in partnership, under the firm of William, Thomas, and Richard Potter, at the warehouse, No. 45, Cannon-street, Manchester, a place which they occupied for many years, and in which they became exceedingly well known to all buyers frequenting the Manchester market. For a long period after his arrival in Manchester, Sir Thomas took no prominent part in politics either local, or general; but he devoted his care and labour to the management of his extensive mercantile concern, in order that his brother Richard, then a more ardent politician than himself, might be enabled to spare a large portion of his time for public business. Though always entertaining decided Whig, or rather Radical opinions, Sir Thomas contented himself with private expressions of them, until 1828, when he took part in the then stirring public business of Manchester. During the Reform contest he was a prominent actor in the memorable Lancashire election, and in the efforts made by other constituencies for the return of Reform candidates. After the passing of the Reform Bill, in 1832, Mr. Richard Potter was returned for the borough of Wigan; his absence from Manchester led Sir Thomas to busily engage in the local and general politics of the town and district. In obtaining and defending the much and long disputed Charter of Incorporation for the borough of Manchester, Sir Thomas was indefatigable, and he stood forward the most conspicuous among the supporters of that measure. As an acknowledgment for what he had done, he was not only elected first Mayor of Manchester, but his term of office was extended to a second year, during which he was knighted, on the 1st July, 1840; he was also a magistrate for the County-palatine of Lancaster. Until the time of his demise, Sir Thomas continued to take a leading part in Manchester politics.

In private life Sir Thomas Potter was distinguished by many excellent qualities; he was benevolent and charitable; upwards of twenty-five years ago, he, at his own expense, established a day-school at Irlams-o'-th'-Height, which of late has afforded beneficial education to about seventy boys and girls: this charity has latterly been known as "Lady Potter's School." Sir Thomas's health declining, he went, during the last winter, to Hastings, in Sussex, but, deriving no benefit from the change, he returned a short time ago to Manchester, and expired at his seat, Buile-hill, near that town, on Thursday, the 20th ult., in his seventy-first year. His funeral, which took place on the following Thursday, was attended by most of the influential persons in the town and its neighbourhood, a long train of carriages escorting his remains to their place of rest in the cemetery, Hyde-road, Manchester.

Sir Thomas Potter married first, in 1808, the daughter of J. Palmer, Esq., of York; and secondly, in 1812, a daughter of Thomas Bayley, Esq., of Manchester, by whom he leaves issue.

ADMIRAL POULDEN.

This gallant officer was born in 1766, and early in life adopted the naval profession, in which his career has been highly distinguished. After some assiduous preliminary service, he was present in the actions of the 9th, 12th, and 19th of April with Lord Rodney, in the war ending in 1783: he was at that period a lieutenant. He next appears actively engaged at the storming of Corsica, in co-operation with Sir John Moore, the object being to secure an anchorage for Lord Hood. In Lord Bridport's action off Brest, on the memorable 23rd of June, 1795, the captain and master of the Irresistible were wounded; lieutenant Poulden took the direction, and captured the enemy's ship opposed to his own. This service made him commander. Being afterwards conspicuous in the taking of Minorca, he was appointed by Sir John Duckworth to be superior of the arsenal there. For his assistance in the capture of the French fleet, which had escaped from Brest into the Mediterranean, he was raised to the rank of post captain by Lord St. Vincent. After five years further service rendered to the British army at Lisbon, he returned to England, and was there gazetted Rear-Admiral of the Red. He died on the 16th of March, at his residence, Richmond-hill, Clifton, aged 79.

PHILIP JOHN MILES, ESQ., OF LEIGH COURT.

This gentleman, one of the "merchant princes of Great Britain," was at the head of a commercial establishment in Bristol, as large as any in the kingdom, and by far the largest in that part of the country where it flourished. The advantages to the city of Bristol, arising from the business of Mr. Miles alone, have been great. This business he inherited from his father, William Miles, Esq., also an eminent merchant and banker, and he maintained it, especially that portion relating to the West India trade, in all its prosperity, until the very period of his decease. He has died immensely rich.

In politics a Conservative, Mr. Miles, for many years, sat in Parliament for Corfe Castle, until the disfranchisement of that borough by the Reform Act. He was elected, in 1835, member for Bristol; and, in 1837, was succeeded in the representation of that city by his eldest son, the present member. Mr. Miles had much public spirit and liberality; he was a willing contributor to all the great local undertakings which of late years have sprung up in Bristol. He gave much in charity, without ostentation; and many a large sum, enclosed in a blank cover, found its way from him to the friendless and destitute, leaving the grateful recipient to guess whence it came. The habits of Mr. Miles were most regular: he devoted a certain number of days in each week to his business in Bristol, and the remainder to his grounds, gardens, and estates, many hundred acres of which, merely assisted by a bailiff, he farmed himself. His patronage of the fine arts is attested by Leigh Court, and its rare and beautiful collections—a living monument to his memory. Mr. Miles died on the 24th ultimo, in his 72nd year. He had married first, soon after coming of age, the sister of Col. Whitham, of Kirklington, Notts; and secondly, a daughter of S. Peach, Esq., of Tockington, and leaves, with other issue, Philip W. S. Miles, Esq., his heir, M.P. for Bristol, and William Miles, Esq., of King's Weston, M.P. for East Somersetshire, who has married a daughter of John Gordon, Esq., of Bristol.

THE EARL OF ROMNEY.

Charles Marsham, Earl of Romney, Viscount Marsham, Baron Romney, and a Baronet, was born on the 22nd November, 1777, and inherited, on the 1st March, 1811, the honours of the old and respectable house of Marsham, from his father, who was the first earl. In politics, Charles, second Earl of Romney, was a moderate Whig, meddling, however, at any time, but little in state affairs, and of late years never interfering at all. The last act which broke into this retirement from public life was a journey his lordship took to Oxford, to add his placet to that of the majority who voted for the degradation of Mr. Ward. The Earl was President of the Marine Society, and Vice-President of the Society of Arts. He passed most of his time at his seat, "The Mote," near Maidstone, encouraging the trading interests of that town, and giving abundant work to the poor. This he was enabled to do, from his taste for building, and making other improvements on his estate: the number of labourers and artisans he employed were considerable.

His lordship married first, the 9th September, 1806, Sophia, daughter of the late William Morton Pitt, Esq., cousin of the first Lord Rivers; this lady died the 9th September, 1812, and he married, secondly, the 9th February, 1832, Mary Elizabeth, second daughter of John, second Viscount Sydney, and widow of George James Cholmondely, Esq. By the first marriage he leaves, with four daughters, a son and successor, Charles, now Earl of Romney, who is married to Margaret, daughter of the fourth Duke of Buccleuch, and has issue. By his second marriage the late earl leaves also a son. His lordship's death, which was nearly sudden, being caused by a paralytic stroke, took place at the Mote, on Saturday the 29th ultimo, in the 68th year of his age.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 1845.

The world having seen the Rev. Sydney Smith quietly inurned—having paid a just tribute of admiration to his talents, and regretted that they could no longer, with a touch like that of the spear of Ithuriel, expose an imposture or an abuse to the contempt of mankind at large—scarcely expected to have another manifestation from that shrewd and witty spirit; the "Alas! poor Yorick!" so universally breathed above his grave, was supposed to have ended all, and to have closed the account of gratitude due to one who, by means of powers vouchsafed to few, had done much in his day and generation for the good of all. But it has not been so; a "Fragment" has just been published, containing the Reverend Gentleman's opinions on the condition of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland. It was the last work in which he was engaged; interrupted in its progress by disease, and altogether stayed by the hand of death, it is now given to the world imperfect and incomplete, the part which is published not having undergone that revision which would, doubtless, have pruned it of some sallies rather out of keeping with the subject, and which would have disappeared could his judgment have checked what the impulse of the moment produced. But still it is stamped with the impress of his mind, and full of the characteristics of his style. Acute, rife with odd and eccentric images and combinations of things and ideas—shrewd, but somewhat worldly, and not marked by any particular elevation of thought, either as to human motives or spiritual matters, or the spiritual office—it is a production that will be extensively read for its own merits, and still more extensively, perhaps, because it is certainly the last emanation from "the spirit that's gone," and can now have no successor.

It is a plea more suo in defence of an endowment of the Catholic Church in Ireland, founded throughout on temporal, political, and state reasons; it is expedient, and therefore it ought to be done; all questions of principle, all points of theological difference are quite put aside. His main positions are these—the Catholics of Ireland are seven or eight millions in number, and have in their hands a proportionate share of political power and social influence; over them the ministers of their religion have a decided, and not an unnatural controul; those ministers by the present state of things are made wholly dependent on the people, and are thus compelled to follow the popular tide of feeling, or lose their position and influence; and that popular feeling, it cannot be denied, has long been one inimical to the present, and indeed the past Governments of this country. Why, says Mr. Sydney Smith, should this be so? Take the Priests into the pay of the State, and you make them the instruments of the State, instead of its enemies; with an endowed Catholic Church, the Government in every parish in Ireland would have "a servant feed," instead of a hostile agitator. Such is the position he lays down, and in support of it he reasons sharply and acutely, but, as it seems to us, with too worldly an estimate both of the Protestant and Catholic Churches, and of the ministers in each of them. If it should turn out that the Catholic Priesthood prefer political power and social influence to a State competence, and refuse an endowment not yet, nor, from all we can see, likely to be offered—the whole of his scheme would prove inoperative. He would be quite right in all his reasoning, if all pastors of every church entered on a religious life as a means of securing an easy and comfortable maintenance; but we must believe there are among men of all professions higher and purer motives than this, and that the minds of all clergymen are not always dwelling among the "Fleshpots." It is the blemish of the writer's works that, having himself a not very spiritual or elevated idea of the clerical office, he produces the same idea in the mind of the reader, by employing his wit to place ministers (of all denominations without exception) in the light of mere worldlings, entering on the avocation for the sake of its "good things," its "prizes," as they are called; and none have suffered more from his satire, expressed or implied, in this respect, than the clergy of the Church of England, including the Bishops, whom he especially delighted to assail. That worldly motives do intrude even into the sanctuary, there can be no doubt, but we do not believe the spirit of Mammon to be so intense or so universal as it is represented to be in the works of the late Canon of St. Paul's. But, setting aside these demerits of writings which have had a powerful effect on society, we will give a few extracts from this last "Fragment," which, brilliant as it is, is darkened by the shadow cast upon it from the tomb of its gifted author; those extracts are specimens of a work only, and their selection must not be considered as a proof of our adopting the opinions contained in them. The following is a portion of a familiar lecture to Mr. O'Connell:—

And now, dear Daniel, sit down quietly at Darrynane, and tell me, when the bodily frame is refreshed with the wine of Bordeaux, whether all this is worth while. What is the object of all government? The object of all government is roast mutton, potatoes, claret, a stout constable, an honest justice, a clear highway, a free chapel. What trash to be bawling in the streets about the Green Isle, the Isle of the Ocean! the bold anthem of Erin go bragh! A far better anthem would be Erin go bread and cheese, Erin go cabins that will keep out the rain, Erin go pantaloons without holes in them! What folly to be making eternal declamations about governing yourselves! If laws are good and well-administered, is it worth while to rush into war and rebellion in order that no better laws may be made in another place? Are you an Eton boy, who has just come out, full of Plutarch's Lives, and considering in every case how Epaminondas or Philopœmen would have acted, or are you, our own dear Daniel, drilled in all the business and bustle of life? I am with you heart and soul in my detestation of all injustice done to Ireland. Your priests shall be fed and paid, the liberties of your church be scrupulously guarded, and in civil affairs the most even justice be preserved between Catholic and Protestant. Thus far I am a thorough rebel as well as yourself; but when you come to the perilous nonsense of repeal, in common with every honest man who has five grains of common sense, I take my leave.

Here is a very graphic, but not very dignified comparison of the sources of the revenue of the Protestant and Roman Churches in Ireland:—

The revenue of the Irish Roman Catholic church is made up of half-pence, potatoes, rags, bones, and fragments of old clothes—and those, Irish old clothes. They worship often in hovels, or in the open air, from the want of any place of worship. Their religion is the religion of three-fourths of the population! Not far off, in a well-windowed and well-roofed house, is a well-paid Protestant clergyman, preaching to stools and hassocks, and crying in the wilderness; near him the clerk, near him the sexton, near him the sexton's wife—furious against the errors of Popery, and willing to lay down their lives for the great truths established at the Diet of Augsburg.

The support the "Young England" party gives to the proposal of re-assuming diplomatic relations with the Court of Rome, and the recent discussion of the "Concordat," imparts an interest to the following:—

It turns out that there is no law to prevent entering into diplomatic engagements with the Pope. The sooner we become acquainted with a gentleman who has so much to say to eight millions of our subjects the better! Can anything be so childish and absurd as a horror of communicating with the Pope, and all the hobgoblins we have imagined of premunires and outlawries for this contraband trade in piety? Our ancestors (strange to say wiser than ourselves) have left us to do as we please, and the sooner Government do, what they can do legally, the better. A thousand opportunities of doing good in Irish affairs have been lost, from our having no avowed and dignified agent at the Court of Rome. If it depended upon me, I would send the Duke of Devonshire there to-morrow, with nine chaplains and several tons of Protestant theology. I have no love of Popery, but the Pope is at all events better than the idol of Juggernaut, whose chaplains, I believe, we pay, and whose chariot, I dare say, is made in Long Acre. We pay £10,000 a-year to our ambassador at Constantinople, and are startled with the idea of communicating diplomatically with Rome, deeming the Sultan a better Christian than the Pope.

Our last quotation gives the reasons for which he wrote, and there can be no doubt that in all his works he was actuated by a sincere regard for the good of his country and the well-being of society:—

For advancing these opinions, I have no doubt I shall be assailed by Sacerdos, Vindex, Latimer, Vates, Clericus, Aruspex, and be called atheist, deist, democrat, smuggler, poacher, highwayman, Unitarian, and Edinburgh Reviewer! Still, I am in the right—and what I say requires excuse for being trite and obvious, not for being mischievous and paradoxical. I write for three reasons: first, because I really wish to do good; secondly, because if I don't write, I know nobody else will; and thirdly, because it is the nature of the animal to write, and I cannot help it. Still, in looking back, I see no reason to repent. What I have said ought to be done, generally has been done, but always twenty or thirty years too late; done, not, of course, because I have said it, but because it was no longer possible to avoid doing it. Human beings cling to their delicious tyrannies, and to their exquisite nonsense, like a drunkard to his bottle, and go on till death stares them in the face. The monstrous state of the Catholic church in Ireland will probably remain till some monstrous ruin threatens the very existence of the empire, and Lambeth and Fulham are cursed by the affrighted people.

MONSIEUR VIDOCQ.

We have received the following letter from M. Vidocq:—

To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.

London, April 3, 1845.

Sir,—I only read to-day the flattering article which you were good enough to devote to me in the Number for the 29th March of your estimable Journal, and while I thank you for the eulogium you were so kind as to bestow on my character and my talents, I think it right to observe to you that your article contains the mention of some circumstances which, if true, would be calculated to deprive me of the esteem with which such of your countrymen as know me have been pleased to regard me.

I am convinced, Sir, that it is only because you have been misinformed that you accuse me of being a gambler and of having been confined in prison for debt, at St. Pelagie, in consequence of a derangement of my affairs, caused by losses at play, a passion which "I could not resist." I am also certain beforehand, that you will favourably receive the rectifications which form the object of this letter, to which I beg you to give a place in one of your early numbers.

I, like every other man, have my good qualities, and my defects are, perhaps, more numerous than my good qualities, but, thank God, I have never sacrificed myself to the demon of gambling. On the contrary, I have always been the most determined enemy of that fatal passion, and long before there was any idea at Paris of suppressing the dens of the Palais Royal, my reports to the Prefect of Police pointed out, almost daily, the evils to which those infamous establishments gave rise, and the necessity of suppressing them.

I was never confined for debt. My fortune, acquired by long and painful labour, is not, it is true, very considerable; but it is a competence. My property is, and always was, free from mortgage. In a word, such as it is, it is sufficient to enable me to satisfy immediately all well-founded demands which may be made upon me. Indeed, Sir, I have happily many debtors, and not a single creditor. I can do in London, what I have often had occasion to do in Paris, namely, defy any one in the world to assert that I am, or that I have been, his debtor.

My occupations, since I gave in my resignation of the office of "Chef de la Police de Sureté," have not been a mystery for anybody. After having been forced to abandon the useful establishment which I formed at St. Mandé, near Paris, in 1827 (an establishment in which, as you remark, men whose former conduct rendered them dangerous to society, found the means of procuring by their labour an honourable existence), because I was not able to continue it any longer without support from the Government, I established at Paris an office under the denomination of "Office of Universal Information;" an establishment which, at the present time, is in full activity, in spite of the numerous and unjust persecutions to which it has been subjected from my enemies.

This establishment has rendered to French and foreign commerce numerous and important services, by making known, at the appropriate moment, the industrious characters who have no other occupation than that of applying their industry. A tolerably large number of your countrymen, most distinguished for their fortune and their social position, with whom I have at different periods been connected, could, if necessary, attest the truth of what I here advance.

I have the honour to be, sir, with the most perfect consideration, your very obedient, and very humble servant,

Vidocq.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY'S SOJOURN IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT!

(From our own Correspondent.)

It having been announced that her Majesty had unexpectedly become the purchaser of the Osborne estate, and that her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, would pay the island a visit, in order to give directions as to the alterations and improvements required to the house—at first the information was discredited, so many reports had previously been circulated respecting Osborne House having become the property of her Majesty, that little credence could be placed on the report when the fact was actually the case. The truth, however, was, in the course of the day, confirmed by letters received from the late owner, "That her Majesty had unexpectedly resumed negotiations for Osborne, and had since become the purchaser." On Wednesday week an express reached Osborne House, from Buckingham Palace, that the Royal visitors would arrive on Saturday, and remain till Tuesday following. Accordingly, everything was got in readiness, and on Thursday and Friday the various steamers brought over luggage for (according to the address on the packages) "Her Majesty, Osborne House, I. W."

On Friday the Malmesbury steamer, Captain Bulmore, arrived in the harbour with eight of her Majesty's horses and ponies, and two travelling carriages, with part of the household.

At an early hour on Saturday, all was bustle among the shipping, making preparations to give her Majesty a warm reception; and during the day the harbour presented a very animated scene, there being upwards of thirty sail of foreign shipping in the port of Cowes, comprising Hamburgs, Danes, Swedes, Norwegians, Oldenburgh, Saxon, Dutch, and Hanoverian. The various colours, both of signals and national ensigns, with which the respective vessels were decorated, had a very imposing effect; to add to which, several of the commanders had resolved to welcome "England's Queen" with Royal salutes, and it is a singular fact, that with the exception of the collier Acorn, and the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam-ship Queen, and two or three smaller craft, there were no British vessels in the harbour to pay a similar respect. A fresh breeze from the northward and westward, and a brilliant sunshine throughout, gave the tout ensemble a regatta-like appearance—flags of every size and colour extended to the breeze.

At twenty minutes past two, the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert hove in sight, from Portsmouth, bearing the Royal standard at the main, which was immediately saluted by the Castle guns, also the Royal Yacht Squadron battery, with 21 guns from each. In about ten minutes afterwards, the Royal yacht rounded to, and came to an anchor in Cowes-roads, close to the harbour's mouth, and was saluted from the Hamburg ships Francisca, Captain Baur, and the Phœnix, Captain Sohst, each with 21 guns; at the same time these vessels were gaily dressed with signal flags, as were also the revenue cutters Rose, Stag, Adelaide, and Petrel, who, during the morning, had arrived, and taken up their positions. Shortly after the yacht came to anchor, the barge was manned, and the Royal party having entered the same, the barge put off, and was steered along the Medina, under escort of the Customs' boat, in which was Mr. Henley, the tide surveyor of the port; also several boats from the revenue cutters. The Royal party arrived at the landing place fronting the Medina Hotel, and they were received by Lieut. Coppinger, R.N., the chief officer of the Coast Guard station, who had the honour to assist her Majesty into the carriage waiting there, the Coast Guard men forming the guard of honour. At ten minutes to three her Majesty landed. In the first carriage were her Majesty, His Royal Highness Prince Albert, and the Princess Royal, who all appeared to be in excellent health, though apparently somewhat fatigued. Two other carriages afterwards drew up for the attendants, among whom were the Countess of Charlemont, Lady in Waiting; Major-General Bowater, Colonel Wemyss, Mr. Anson, the Prince's Secretary, and the French Governess to the Princess Royal.

On no previous occasion of her Majesty's visit to this port, were the people assembled more numerous, independent of the crowd of inhabitants which lined the wharf and quays adjoining; several carriages with élite, and ladies and gentlemen on horseback were drawn up on the parade, who joined with the cheerers, by waving their handkerchiefs and other demonstrations of respect; in fact, the whole population appeared to vie with each other in their attempts to honour the return of their beloved Sovereign and her Royal Consort to Osborne; and throughout, as the Royal cortège passed, they were most enthusiastically cheered.

In the evening, Sir Robert Peel, Bart, arrived at Osborne House, and remained throughout Sunday. Sir Robert finally took his leave by the quarter to nine steamer, having previously breakfasted at the Medina Hotel. On Sunday her Majesty chiefly confined her walks to the grounds and beach.

On Monday the Royal party were observed on the beach as early as half-past seven, and again at ten o'clock.

Lieut. Coppinger was daily in attendance at Osborne, and two of his men mounted guard on the beach to prevent intruders; but we are pleased to say her subjects in this quarter felt no desire to intrude on the Royal presence; in fact, were they disposed to do so, the conduct of some of her lieges at Brighton would be a sufficient warning to them. At noon, his Royal Highness and Col. Wemyss were observed walking in the neighbourhood. They visited East Cowes Park, and entered several of the newly constructed villas. His Royal Highness was accompanied by Mr. Moreing, the architect, and expressed himself much gratified with the gardens, and the undertaking altogether. In the afternoon the Royal party rode out on their ponies to King's Quay and Woodhouse Farm, which they inspected.

On Tuesday last, shortly after breakfast, his Royal Highness, accompanied by her Majesty, again visited several of the new buildings in East Cowes Park, and went over them, also the Botanical Gardens; they were unattended, with the exception of Mr. Moreing, the architect, who happened to be present, and who returned with the Royal party to Osborne House.

At noon, her Majesty's steamer Comet arrived in the harbour, also the Echo steam-tug from Portsmouth, to convey the luggage and carriages of her Majesty to Southampton; and shortly afterwards the Royal yacht arrived in the Roads, to receive her Majesty, and convey the Royal party to Portsmouth, on their return to Windsor. The hour of embarkation having been appointed to take place at half-past two o'clock—at which hour her Majesty, the Prince and Princess, and suite, arrived at the East Cowes Stairs, where the Admiral's barge, with the Admiral, was in waiting to convey them to the yacht; and having embarked, were rowed to the yacht, escorted by the boats from the revenue cutters, &c., in nearly the same order as occurred on the arrival of the Royal party. A great concourse of people were assembled on the quay, to witness their departure, who enthusiastically cheered the Royal pair after they had seated themselves in the barge. In about ten minutes afterwards the Royal party and suite were again on board the yacht, to which the standard was transferred from the barge, and was saluted by the Castle guns, followed by those from the R.Y.S. battery. At about three P.M., the Victoria and Albert got under way, and proceeded for Portsmouth. All the foreign shipping again displayed their colours, and the whole wore a gay appearance. The weather was throughout fine, and a fresh breeze prevailed from the S.E.

It is rumoured that Woodhouse Farm will become the property of her Majesty: it adjoins Osborne, and contains about 200 acres.

The alterations at present contemplated on the estate are: to inclose the same with a ring fence—to build two lodges at the present entrance—the kitchen to be altered—and the stables enlarged; the whole of which are to be completed by the 1st of May, about which period her Majesty is expected for a few days, with the Royal children, who, it is said, will remain for the benefit which the air of the Isle of Wight will afford them—her Majesty having, when a child, experienced great benefit therefrom.

RETURN OF THE ROYAL PARTY TO TOWN.

Her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Princess Royal arrived at Buckingham Palace at seven o'clock on Tuesday evening. They were received at the Palace by the Honourable Misses Stanley and Hamilton, the Earl of Hardwicke, the Vice-Chamberlain, Lord George Lennox, Captain Meynell, Sir Robert Otway, Captain Francis Seymour, and Colonel Arbuthnot.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent will take her departure from Frogmore House, for Clarence House, St. James's, to-morrow afternoon, at three o'clock. Her Royal Highness will be accompanied by the Countess Josephine Wratislaw, and attended by Lady Anna Maria Dawson and Colonel Sir George Cowper. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by the Royal Family, will arrive at the Castle about the latter end of next month, where the Court will remain during the Ascot race week.

The Queen's Drawing-room.—Her Majesty intends to hold a Drawing-room at St. James's Palace, next Thursday.

Return of the Queen Dowager.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, attended by her suite, arrived at Marlborough House, St. James's, at a few minutes before seven o'clock on Wednesday evening, from Witley Court, Worcestershire. Her Majesty's suite included Lady Frances Clinton, the Hon. Miss Eden, Lady Georgiana Curzon, Earl Howe, Sir David Davies, and the Rev. G. F. Hudson.

Marriage in High Life.—On Wednesday was solemnised at the church of All Souls', Regent-street, the marriage of Augusta Lavinia, Countess of Kerry, with the Hon. Charles Gore, brother of the present, and son of the late Earl of Arran. After the ceremony, the happy pair left town for East Hall, Wandsworth (one of the Earl of Bessborough's seats), to pass the honeymoon.

Death of another Son of the Earl of Harewood.—The Hon. Algernon Lascelles, the fourth son of this nobleman, died last week, at Harewood House, in his seventeenth year, after a severe attack of typhus fever. The decease of the Hon. Alfred Lascelles, brother of the above, took place only a few days previously.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Slave-trade Commission.—The commission on the subject of the slave trade sat on Wednesday at the official residence of Sir Robert Peel in Downing-street. The Duke de Broglie and the Right Hon. Stephen Lushington, D.C.L., attended.

Society of Arts.—At a numerous meeting on Wednesday, a new patent machine was exhibited for the manufacture of "artificial teeth, gums, and palates," the invention of Mr. Tomes, surgeon-dentist to the Middlesex Hospital. The object sought is to attain the greatest possible accuracy in the fitting the substance used for the artificial teeth upon the gums and palate; which accuracy, if secured, would at once obviate the inconvenience and pain so often now complained of, and the apprehension of which deters so many from availing themselves of a necessary substitute for the losses of nature. A reverse of the mouth is made by means of casts, in a peculiar composition of Mr. Tomes', over which a tracer is made to pass, guiding in its progress a cutting drill. The drill operating on the substance to be used for the teeth (the best being hippopotamus' tooth, or "dentine") produces an almost mathematically accurate copy. Indeed it was curious to see, in some specimens on the table, the fidelity with which the minutest irregularities were transferred from the model to the copy. The use of gold, rendered necessary from the more uncertain fitting (with existing means) of the far preferable "dentine," will probably soon be discontinued.—Polytechnic Review.

New Convent and Catholic Schools at Chelsea.—On Tuesday afternoon the new Catholic Schools and Convent of the order of St. Joseph, recently erected in Cadogan street, Chelsea, were opened for the purpose to which they were intended to be appropriated, with great ceremony.

Fall in the Price of Bread.—On Wednesday the bakers in the borough of Southwark and neighbourhood lowered the price of the 4lb. loaf to 4d. and 4½d., and in some places as low as 3¾d.; at two shops in Blackman-street the poor assembled in great numbers, and besieged the shops to purchase bread at the reduced price, and the bakers were compelled to close their shops as early as five o'clock, being unable to satisfy the demand, and to give notice that no more bread could be supplied till the morning. [If the Corn-laws were entirely repealed, it would be hardly possible to obtain good bread cheaper than this.]

The late Winter.—The meteorological observations made at the gardens of the Horticultural Society at Chiswick, show the late winter to have been the most protracted and severe for many years past. From the 1st of December the mean temperature was 34 deg., being lower than that of any similar period in the present century, with the exception of that of 1813-14, when it was 1½ deg. lower. March exhibited a lower mean than any similar month since 1797; and the mean of February was lower than that of any in the present century, being 33 deg. 12 min. or 8 deg. below the average. The mean temperature of December was 33 deg. 4 min., or nearly 7 deg. below the average.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The total number of deaths from all causes, within the bills of mortality, in the week ending on Saturday last, was 1188, being an excess above the weekly average of the last five winters of 149, and above that of the last five years of no less than 225. The increase is principally perceptible in the number of deaths attributed to epidemic diseases and those affecting the organs of respiration. Under the former of these heads 195 deaths are recorded, the average at this season being only 172, and under the other 396 persons are stated to have died, while the weekly average is not higher than 347. Diseases of the heart have also been unusually fatal, the number of deaths last week being 47, and the average only 25.

Death of Colonel Turner Grant.—The death of Colonel Turner Grant, late of the Grenadier Guards, took place at his house in Portman-square last week, in the 59th year of his age. He served in Sir John Moore's campaign in Spain in 1809, including the battle of Corunna. He was also engaged in the expedition to Walcheren, and the Peninsular campaigns of 1812, 1813, and 1814.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

FRIGHTFUL MURDER OF A WOMAN IN ST. GILES'S.

On Monday night a married woman, named Mary Brothers, but who had assumed the name of Tibb, was murdered at a house, No. 11, George-street, St. Giles's, under circumstances of peculiar atrocity. It appears that the poor woman, accompanied by a man, of course the perpetrator of the deed, went to the house in question, kept by —Hall, as the servant of a man named Grout, shortly after ten o'clock on Monday evening, and passing through an outer room or lobby entered a room on the ground-floor. Hall himself was not at home at the time, but the women who were in the house, one of whom is the servant, and another, the wife of the landlord, had sufficient opportunity to become acquainted with the appearance of the murderer, so as to be able to speak to his identity. The parties had not remained in the house much longer than ten minutes, when a noise was heard by the landlady, which induced her to leave her apartment for the purpose of making inquiries as to its cause. In the passage she met the man who had been in company with the woman, and attempted to stop his progress towards the door by catching hold of the skirt of his coat, exclaiming at the same time, "What is the matter? what have you been doing to the girl?" The man, however, burst away from her grasp, and succeeded in making good his exit. She then entered the lobby, and the sight which met her eyes, caused her to give utterance to shrieks of "murder," which soon brought two policemen of the E division, one of whom, No. 64, was on duty at the neighbouring station-house, to the spot. Mr. Fitzgerald, a respectable surgeon, of Bloomsbury, was speedily in attendance. He states that on his arrival he was shown into a small room on the ground floor, and in one corner of it he found the murdered woman completely doubled up. On examination he found that she was dead. On endeavouring to lift the body up, he found the blood still pouring from a wound, large enough for him to place his hand in, passing from the back of the neck completely through to the front, dividing all the principal arteries. The wound from which the constable had drawn out the carving-knife was deep, and the force of the blow had been so great that a large piece of the knife near the point had been broken by coming in contact with a bone. There were four other wounds about the neck and breast. The murdered woman was deluged with blood, and had evidently struggled violently with her cold blooded assassin, as on entering the bed-room adjoining Mr. Fitzgerald found blood on the bed, and also on the floor. The deceased's bonnet and shawl were lying on a chair; but in the room where the body was found there was nothing in the place but an old chest of drawers.

The hands of the unfortunate victim had also been much cut in her struggles to escape from her assassin.

The instrument of this foul murder was a sharp-pointed carving knife, which was found with its point jagged and broken in one of the wounds of the victim, and which had been purchased but a few minutes previous to the perpetration of the deed at the shop of Mr. Oldham, cutler, a few doors from the corner of George street. Mr. Oldham states that a man, whom both his daughter and himself will be able readily to recognise, came into his shop very shortly before ten o'clock on Monday evening, and asked to be shown some carving knives. Three were placed before him, and he selected one with a comparatively narrow blade and sharpened point. For this he paid 1s., and was hurriedly leaving the shop, when he was called back by Mr. Oldham, who asked him whether he would not have it wrapped up? On its being given by the man into his hands Mr. Oldham set the edge, folded it in paper, and returned it to the customer, who took his departure. No one was with him, or, as to his (Mr. Oldham's) belief, waiting for him outside. Mr. Oldham adds, that the thought glanced across his mind, as his customer was leaving the shop, that the knife had been purchased for some bad purpose. The strange thing is, that Mr. Oldham states that the man who purchased the knife wore a hat, whereas the supposed murderer is represented by others as having a cap on his head.

The name by which the deceased woman has passed for some time is Tibb, but her real appellation is Brothers, she having married a man so called, from whom she had been for some time separated, it is supposed, in consequence of her misconduct, and who lives at No. 8, George-court, Grosvenor-square. He has two daughters residing with him, and has been for many years in the employment of the Messrs. Tratt and Hatfield, upholsterers, in Brook street, Grosvenor-square. The mother of the murdered woman is named Prout, and resides at No. 19, East-street, Manchester-square.

A man named John Mellen, who was known to have lived with the deceased, was apprehended on Tuesday, but he was liberated, as both the women who were in the house where the murder was committed positively deny that he was the man who accompanied the deceased thither, and their testimony in the negative is confirmed by a policeman, who met the supposed murderer shortly after leaving the place, but who, being ignorant of the affair, of course permitted him to pass.

In addition to the above facts, we have learned that a man answering the description of the murderer had inquired for his victim on the same evening of some of her acquaintance, uttering threats which have been but too fearfully realized.

It seems that some months since the deceased woman caused her husband to be summoned before the magistrates at Marlborough street, on the ground of his having neglected to afford her the means of subsistence. The magistrates, however, decided that he was not bound to do so, in consequence of her misconduct. The following is an exact description of the supposed murderer; it is believed to have been gained from the woman who had stated that she had been addressed by a person whom she previously knew, and who made inquiries for the deceased, uttering threats, though rather in a jocular tone, against her:—He is said to be 21 years of age, 5 feet 5 inches in height, of a pale or sallow complexion; he has black eyes, and dresses sometimes in a fustian jacket and dark trousers. He wears a black hat or a cap with a peak. At other times he appears in a dark velveteen shooting-jacket, and dark check trousers. He has the appearance of a costermonger.

The street in which this atrocious and savage act has been committed runs parallel with that portion of Bloomsbury-street, which, previously to the improvements in that neighbourhood, was called Plumtree-street, and the house in which the ill-fated woman lost her life is almost close to the back of Charlotte-street chapel. George-street forms a portion of what is well-known as the "Rookery," and is thickly inhabited by persons of the poorest, lowest, most abandoned, profligate, and squalid description.

The house in which the murder was perpetrated is remarkable as having been that in which Mr. Justice Dyot resided and died.

According to one account of the transaction, the murderer and the murdered went to the house at about twenty minutes to eleven o'clock, and the latter asked an old woman, named Mary Palmer, locum tenens for the land lady, whether they could have a threepenny bed for the night. Palmer answered in the affirmative, and the murderer paid her threepence. Palmer then gave the woman a light, and she and the murderer entered the inner room already described. They had scarcely done so, when Palmer seated herself on the last step of the stairs to "have a smoke," she said, and was barely five minutes there when she heard the parties quarrelling, and perceived, she thought, the sound of blows. She called out, "what are you doing to the woman?" The murderer returned no answer. Palmer then pushed the outer door in (the door opening into the street passage), and advancing to the door of the inner room, saw the deceased sitting on the bed and the murderer with his right hand above his head in the act of striking her. The old woman, Palmer, exclaimed, "Do not beat the poor woman any more, you have beat her enough already!" The assassin then rushed out, pushed Palmer aside, and hurried into the street. His victim rose from the bed, staggered towards the room door, and fell back in the inner passage in the position above described. It was not until then that the aged Palmer, who is near-sighted, saw the extent of the mischief. She instantly raised an alarm, which brought police-constable Allen, 159 E, to the house, who found the murdered woman in the agonies of death.

An inquest was held on the body of the murdered woman on Thursday, at the Angel Tavern, near St. Giles's Church, before Mr. Wakley. Evidence was taken at considerable length, but as, for the most part, it went merely to confirm the details we have given above, it is not necessary to repeat it; we therefore confine ourselves to a notice of a few facts which make the account more complete.

James Brothers, the poor woman's husband, identified the body as that of his wife. The knife which was sticking in the neck of the deceased was produced. It is a common black handled carving knife, with a sharp point. The knife was handed round to the jury. It is half-way up the blade stained with blood.

Mary Palmer, the woman above alluded to, stated that she knew the deceased, who went by the name of Mary Tibb. She added, I did not see anything in the man's hand. He had on a dark fustian jacket, like a shooting-jacket, and dirty drab trousers. I should say the man was under thirty years of age; he was very dark, had black hair, and small whiskers. I did not notice his eyes, he certainly had a long nose. Neither the man nor the woman made any observation before they went into the room. After they had not been in above five minutes, I heard the woman cry out three times "Murder, murder!" I did not hear any other noise. I knocked at the door, but did not receive any answer. I then put my back to it and forced it open, and went into the room, where I saw the woman sitting on the bed. The man was standing over her with his hand up. I thought he was hitting her. His face was towards the woman. I said to him, "Don't beat the woman any more." I did not see anything in his hand at that time. I repeated, "What are you doing to the woman? Don't hit her any more." The woman did not speak after I had used these words: the man ran out of the house, I caught hold of his coat, but was obliged to let go, and he escaped out of the front door. I then attended to the woman, and saw the knife; the deceased was covered with blood, she staggered from the bed-room into the room where the body now lies, and almost immediately died; she did not speak; I saw the knife now produced taken out of the neck of the deceased; the policeman told me it was five inches deep in the throat. The woman was in the hospital two years ago. I had not seen her since until about three weeks ago. I am certain that I never saw the man before. He was of the middle size.

The husband was again called. He said, "I live at No. 8, George-street, Grosvenor-square. I am porter to an upholsterer named Trapp, in Lower Grosvenor-street. The deceased was my wife. I should say her age was about 46. She has been separated from me fifteen or sixteen years. I do not know where she lived of late. I have not seen her for two years past. My children have not seen her for seven years. The deceased used to annoy me if I met her in the street. Her sister just informed me of the murder. I never heard that any one had threatened to do her any injury. My daughters live with me. One is nineteen the other twenty one."

Mr. Oldham, who sold the knife produced, said the man who purchased it was not more than from nineteen to twenty-one. His voice was like that of a boy. It was intimated that there were persons in attendance who saw the suspected murderer on Monday night, but Mr. Wakley thought it would be better not to call them, as it would be only an advertisement to the murderer. The inquiry was adjourned sine die. Up to the time of our going to press the supposed murderer had not been apprehended.

The Murderer Tawell (Further Particulars).—According to the confession of Tawell, published by us and some of our contemporaries, it was presumed that Mrs. Tawell was supposed to be in utter ignorance of her husband's connection with his ill-fated victim, Sarah Hart, and that it was solely for the purpose of preventing a knowledge of this fact reaching the ears of his wife that he murdered the unfortunate woman, who, he knew, had never divulged his name at the various residences during the past five years he had selected for her. In reference to this subject, however, we have to state, on the authority of a gentleman residing at Berkhampstead, and who knew Tawell well, that, some few months before the murder, Mrs. Tawell found in the pocket of her husband's coat a letter addressed to him by Sarah Hart, applying for money, on the ground that it had not been sent to her at the time it had been promised, and that she was, therefore, greatly inconvenienced. Upon her husband's return home she showed him the letter, and expressed her surprise at its contents, saying to him, "Why, what claim, John Tawell, can any woman living have on thee?" Tawell made some evasive reply, which appeared to satisfy his wife for the time, but she was ever after convinced that there was more in the matter of the letter than her husband was disposed to explain to her. When the unfortunate lady had an interview with her husband, for the last time, at Aylesbury gaol, on Wednesday week, neither was then aware that the day of execution was fixed for the following Friday. Immediately, however, she had left to return to Berkhampstead, the miserable culprit was informed that it was his last interview with his wife, as the day for his public execution had been fixed for the 28th. It was considerately arranged, in order to spare as much as possible the feelings of the wretched wife, that she should not be made acquainted with the precise period of his untimely end, until after the execution; and this arrangement was carried into effect. A messenger was despatched to Berkhampstead shortly afterwards. When the dreadful tidings were communicated to her, she bore the painful intelligence with considerable fortitude; but when she was informed that her husband had admitted the justice of his sentence, and confessed having committed the murder, all her stoicism and fortitude forsook her, and she became as a woman almost bereft of reason, and inconsolable at the unexpected, and, to her, most startling announcement. A quarterly meeting of the Society of Friends (which was more than usually numerously attended), for the counties of Buckingham and Northampton, was held at Berkhampstead, on the day preceding Tawell's execution. At a lengthened prayer-meeting, which took place, after the routine of business had been gone through, with closed doors, it was understood prayers were offered for mercy for the culprit. A vast number of persons were "disappointed," and had lost journeys to Aylesbury in consequence of the early hour (many supposing that twelve o'clock would have been the time) at which the wretched man was turned off. Eighty-three passengers arrived at the Aylesbury station by the down train, at ten o'clock, just in time to see the gallows taken away, and no more. During the whole of the morning the low public-houses and beer shops in Aylesbury and neighbourhood were filled to overflowing by men and women, drinking and carousing, and long before dusk numerous fights had "come off" between drunken men. Even as early as one o'clock in the day a regular fight took place between a couple of drunken countrymen, nearly opposite the George Inn, in the very heart of the town. A large booth was erected close to the Chandos Arms, near the station, for dancing in the evening! A somewhat singular fact occurred in 1827; Captain Rous was in Sydney, New South Wales, and had a horse taken suddenly ill; he went to the shop of Tawell to procure some medicine. Tawell's horse and chaise were standing at the door at the moment, and he volunteered to drive the gallant captain back to his stable, and administer the remedy. Captain Rous consented, jumped into the gig, the medicine was given by Tawell, and the horse recovered. The following letter from John Tawell was received by an individual (a perfect stranger to him) residing in Ipswich, on Thursday week, who had addressed one to him, wherein he was most solemnly questioned—"If he could—appealing to the omniscient Jehovah, and that faithful monitor, conscience—declare—'I am innocent of the crime for which I am about to suffer?'" By his reply, it will be perceived that he studiously avoids making mention of that crime in particular:—

"Aylesbury, 25th, 3rd Mo., 1845.

"My dear Friend,—In reply to so excellent an address—to so earnest an entreaty—as that expressed on my behalf by thy letter received by me this morning, I am compelled, on every account, to be brief—seriously conclusive—on the awfully serious importance of those subjects which that address revives and impresses—and oh! that the language so earnestly there breathed may be that of MY SOUL unto TRUE REPENTANCE! 'Repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ'—'Who came to seek and to save that which was lost.' O may that great Sacrifice that was 'offered up once for all,' be the unspeakable, the inexpressible privilege of me to partake. So GREAT, SO UNWORTHY a sinner as I can truly and justly acknowledge myself to be: and I have nothing but the unmerited mercy of my Lord and Saviour to rely upon; unto whom I have nothing to bring or to offer but my nakedness and my numerous transgressions.

"Farewell! Solemnly Farewell!!

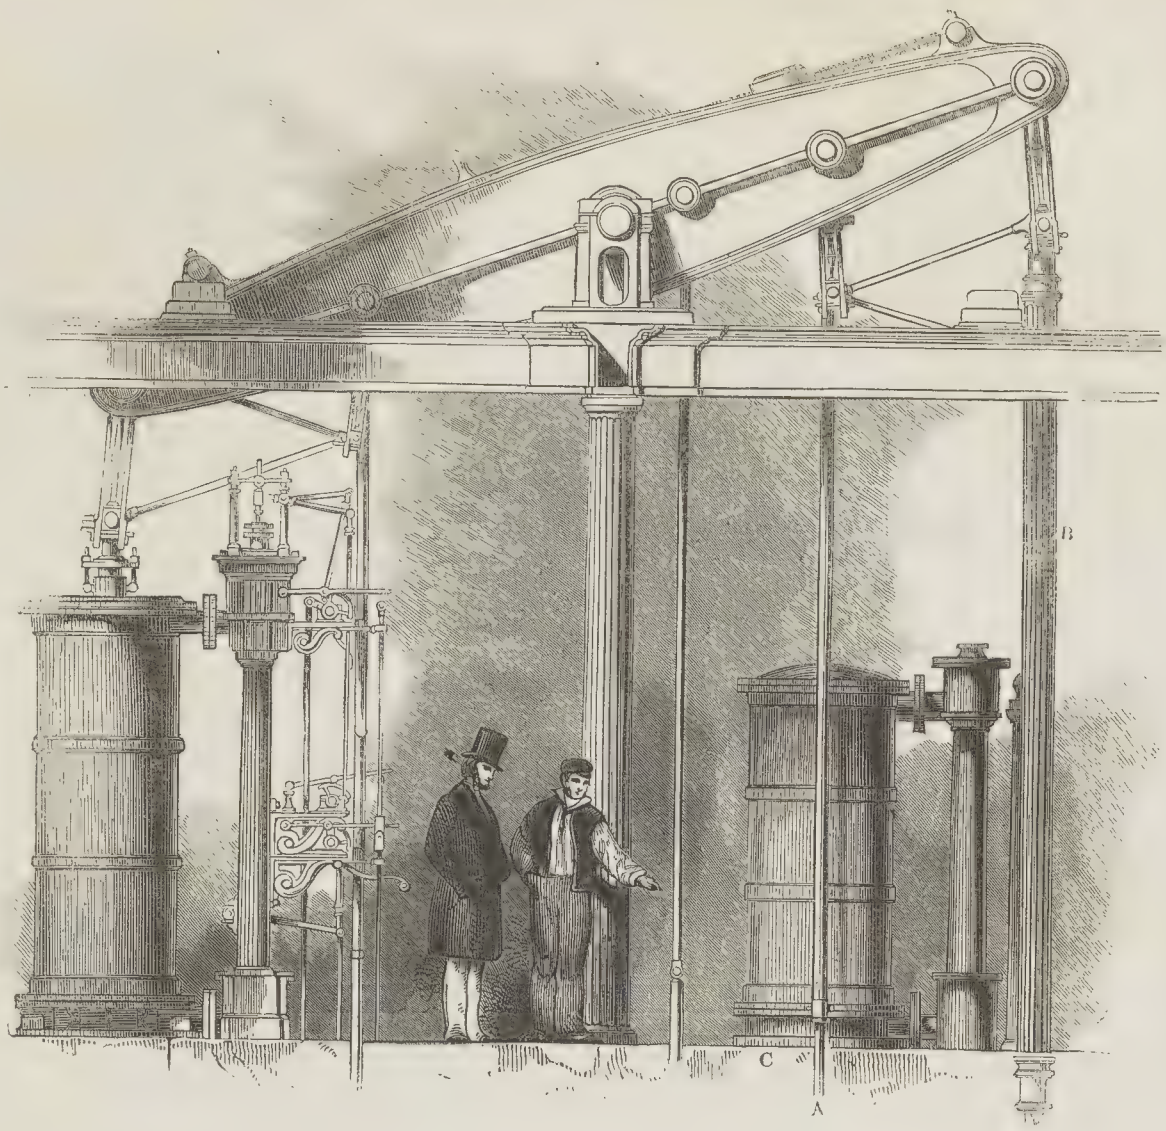
"Thy deeply afflicted Friend, "JOHN TAWELL.

"I desire most gratefully to offer up my thanks for the interest felt on my behalf."

Death of a Solicitor whilst Altering his Will.—On Saturday Mr. Baker held an inquest at the Ship and Dolphin, Shadwell, on the body of Mr. Joseph Sweet, a solicitor, aged 70 years. Mrs. Ruth Sweet, of No. 18, New Gravel-lane, widow of deceased, deposed that deceased, during his long life, had enjoyed a remarkably good state of health, until within the last few weeks. He was then taken poorly, but nothing of any consequence ailed him. Deceased had a great aversion to medical men, and would consult no one. On Wednesday afternoon he told witness that, as one of the legatees whom he had named in his will had died, he should make an alteration in it, and bequeath the legacy to witness which he had intended for the other. The necessary papers were brought to him, and deceased himself wrote the alterations to his will, to carry into effect his intentions. He signed it, and the document was regularly attested by three witnesses, with the usual formality. As soon as he had completed it, witness observed a sudden change to take place in his features. Fearing he was taken worse, she again wished him to have medical advice, but he replied, "No." He laid down on a sofa in the room, breathed faintly twice, and expired in a moment. The coroner remarked upon the singularity of the occurrence, and the jury returned a verdict of "Natural death."

Accident on the Great Western Railway.—On Monday evening, about seven o'clock, p.m., as the Bank engine was proceeding at a slow pace through the tunnel on its return from Box (having left about a quarter of an hour before a train at the Corsham station) the engine driver was alarmed by hearing the fall of a heavy mass of stone from the top of the tunnel directly in front of the engine; before he could take any steps to stop the engine, both it and the tender were driven violently off the rails. By the shock the engine driver was severely bruised. After the lapse of a short time, assistance was procured from the Corsham station, and the cause of the above accident was discovered to be a block of stone which had fallen from the side of the tunnel on the down rails. Intelligence of the accident was promptly sent to Bristol, Chippenham, &c., and several engines, &c., having been despatched to the spot, after six hours' incessant labour the mischief was in some degree repaired, and the traffic of the line resumed. During the time the workmen were employed on this service, they were alarmed by the falling of two other masses of stone within a short distance of the spot on which they were at work.

Death from a Splinter in the Thumb.—Mr. Payne held an inquest on Tuesday, at the Bell, Basinghall-street, on the body of Rebecca Barrett, aged sixty-two, housekeeper to Mr. Carrett, solicitor, of No. 10, in the above street. On Easter Sunday the deceased was splitting a piece of wood to light the fire, when a splinter ran into the fleshy part of her left thumb. She extracted a piece of it, and thought the next day that the remainder was drawn out by a linseed meal poultice, the pain was so much alleviated. The slight puncture caused by the splinter healed in a day or two, but the arm, up to the shoulder, became exceedingly painful. She would, however, have no medical advice, merely using a lotion of goulard water, until the whole of the arm mortified, and on Saturday last she died. Verdict, "Accidental death."



Collision on the York and North Midland Railway.—A collision took place on the York and North Midland Railway, on Thursday week. The mail train left York a few minutes later than its time (half past six o'clock) as a great number of passengers were waiting to proceed by it. It had two engines attached to it, and proceeded at a rapid rate. When it reached Burton Salmon, the Hull and Selby train was just moving forward, but had scarcely left the station. The driver of the York train whistled very loudly for a short time before coming upon the train, but as he could not stop his engine, it ran into the Hull and Selby train, completely crushing to atoms the coupé of the Hull train, which was the last carriage, and forcing the other part of the carriages upon the truck which immediately preceded it. In the concussion the engine of the Hull train was liberated, and proceeded without driver at a fearful rate up the line, the driver having jumped off. The first engine and coal tender of the York train appeared to be much damaged. A gentleman, said to be Mr. Hewitt, French Consul at Hull, left York in the unfortunate smashed coupé, but had got out of it, and entered another carriage at the Tadcaster station, and thus saved his life. The passengers in the second class carriage, which mounted the carriage truck, were considerably bruised, but no life was lost, and no bones appear to have been broken, which, indeed, seems almost miraculous. The runaway engine stopped only when the steam and water were exhausted.

THE FOUNTAINS IN TRAFALGAR-SQUARE.

Fountains in the desart playing
To the pilgrim, wildly straying
From his course, may welcome be :—
To hear their gush—to taste, to see
The sunbeams pouring down their light,
Making prisms, all beauty-bright.
All this may to the wand'rer seem,
Reality of some sweet dream !
But in this dreary solitude
Where man's alone 'mid multitude—
We might as well expect a mountain
As that sweet pastoral thing—a fountain
And yet behold ! Trafalgar-square
Already boasts a spouting pair !
But where are cowslips and blue bells,
Or any little flow'r that dwells
'Neath the nurture of the springlet—
Peeping through the woodbine's ringlet ?
Alas ! there's nought but senseless stone
To look upon those fountains lone ! W.

On Tuesday morning last at seven o'clock, Mr. Barry, the architect, attended by the engineers of the above works, and other scientific gentlemen, with a few members of the Government, met in Trafalgar-square, to witness the playing of the fountains, at various heights, and to inspect the engines connected therewith. The experiments were perfectly satisfactory; and it was then decided that the jets should commence playing at noon on Saturday (this day). The present is, therefore, the best opportunity for introducing to our readers the details of this truly scientific embellishment of our metropolis, which has so long exercised the curiosity of the public, as well as the good humour of those accustomed to cater for their gratification, literary and otherwise.

The disposition of the beautiful area of Trafalgar-square, unquestionably one of the finest sites in the metropolis, will be best understood by the large engraving below; and we proceed to the details requisite to the entire appreciation of the fidelity and minuteness of the accompanying illustrations, merely premising that a twofold object has been attained in this improvement—the embellishment of the Square and the more useful object of a better supply of water to certain of the Government establishments.

PUMPING ENGINES FOR SUPPLYING THE FOUNTAINS, TRAFALGAR-SQUARE AND GOVERNMENT OFFICES.

THE ARTESIAN WELLS.

The wells for supplying the water to the Fountains and Government offices, are sunk on the principle of those generally termed Artesian. These are perpendicular borings into the earth, through the impervious to the porous strata, through which the water has percolated, and accumulated in large quantities. The shaft being made, the imprisoned water, in its endeavour to find its own level, rises through the strata to the surface of the soil, producing a continuous flow or stream of pure water. This effect would have been produced in these we are describing, and in all others similarly formed, were it not from the number of other wells which have been sunk for the various breweries, manufactories, and general consumption of London, having so greatly reduced the quantity, that the remaining water is not capable, through its slowness of percolation, of rising higher than to about a hundred feet below the surface, thus rendering it necessary to use force to raise it to the required height.

The water for the Artesian Wells of the metropolis is derived from the rains which fall in the central valley of Holmsdale—a district of about ten miles extent, running to the east and west of Reigate, in Surrey. This valley is formed to the north by the great chalk range, and to the south, and along its whole width, by sand hills, which rise from beneath the chalk strata. These sands absorb the rain-water, but are prevented from parting with it by the stiff clays of the weald upon which they rest. The water thus obtained runs beneath the bed of the chalk, is partially absorbed by its lower surface, and forms, on reaching the site of London a grand reservoir, at a depth of upwards of 250 feet beneath the valley of the Thames.

At the back of Trafalgar-square there are two wells, one in Orange-street, and the other in front of the National Gallery. The bores of these wells, to the depth of 175 feet, are, the former 6 feet, and the latter, 4 feet 6 inches in diameter: these are connected together, at the depth of 170 feet, by a tunnel, 380 feet long and 6 feet in diameter, and capable of containing about 70,000 gallons of water. Below this bore, at the Orange-street well, is a smaller one, to the depth of about 300 feet, whilst that in front of the National Gallery is 395 feet deep. The strata through which the operation of boring has passed will be seen in the accompanying sections.

The wells and tunnel, when at rest, will hold about 122,000 gallons of water; and some idea may be formed of the supply of the liquid, from the fact that 300 gallons per minute raised for thirty hours in succession, lowered the water in the wells only 50 feet; thus leaving an amount of water still in reserve of upwards of 91,000 gallons. The water is of an excellent quality, soft and pure; the Reform Club and Club Chambers have been supplied by the same source, and its goodness and purity have been highly commended.

THE PUMPING ENGINES.

The machinery for working the wells, for throwing the jet, and for the supply of the various offices, consists of two engines—a large Cornish one, and a smaller inverted direct-action engine. The larger one is for all the general purposes of supply, as well for the fountains as consumption, and has attached to its beam three rods, working as many pumps. The rod A is attached to a pump, which raises the water from the wells for the supply of the public offices, &c. The connecting rod B is attached to a pump capable of lifting from 500 to 800 gallons of water per minute, into a large tank or reservoir for playing the fountains.

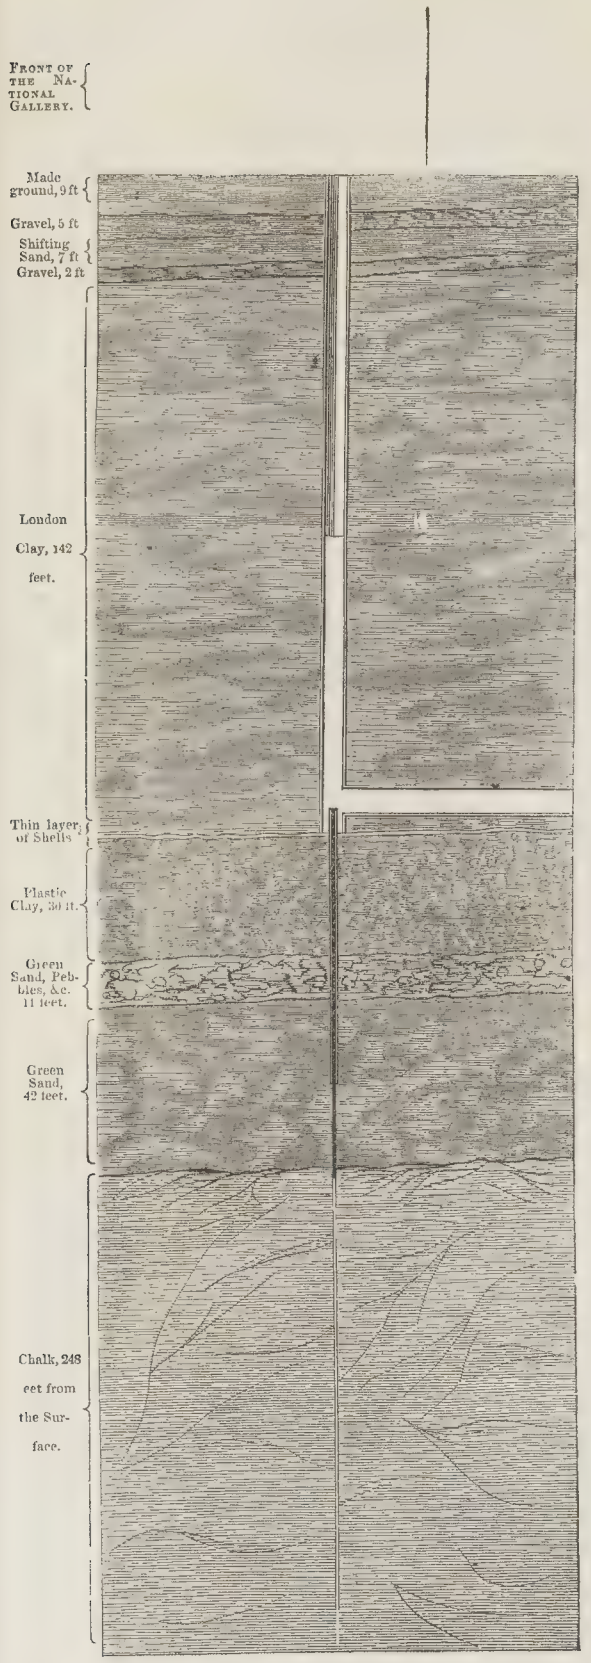
The smaller engine, C, is built on the direct-action principle, working with the cylinder inverted and leaving the piston rod immediately attached to the pump rods. It is extremely simple in its construction, but remarkably effective in its action. Its operations are confined to the changing of the water for the fountains, but its principal use is, as a reserve engine, for supplying the public buildings with the necessary quantity of water, in the event of the larger one being out of repair. The two engines are worked by two boilers, fitted with Juckes's patent smoke-consuming furnaces, by which means such works are enabled to be carried on in the centre of the metropolis without subjecting the inhabitants to the annoyance of smoke.

THE FOUNTAINS.

The fountains are from the designs of Mr. Barry, and are executed of Aberdeen or Peterhead granite, by Messrs. Macdonald and Leslie, of Aberdeen. The granite is peculiar for the redness of its colour, as well as from its hardness and durability, and is capable of receiving a very high polish. These qualities are owing to the almost total absence of mica in the composition of the granite—quartz and feltspar being its chief constituents, and the latter, in proportions which rival the rich flesh-coloured granites of Egypt.

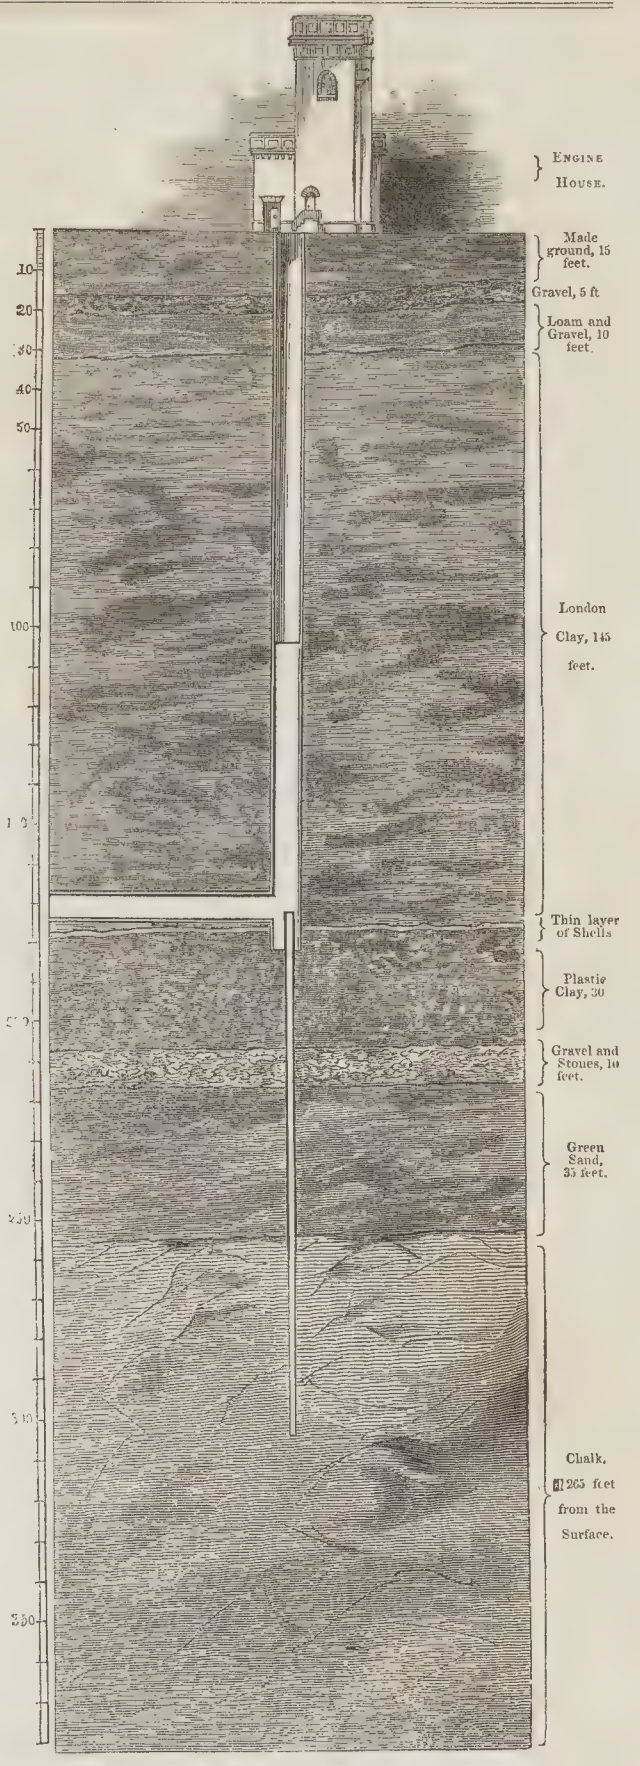
The design is simple, but chaste and elegant. A massive curved octagonal base, upon which are four dolphins' heads and fins, supports a magnificent flat vase, from the centre of which rises a pedestal, supporting a smaller, but similar vase, and in its centre is placed the granite mouth for the jet. From this mouth the water is thrown up in a close stream to the desired height, when it spreads out and descends into the upper vase, from thence to the lower one, and so falls into the basin; at the same time, a flat stream issues from the mouths of each of the dolphins. The quantity thrown up by the two fountains will be 500 gallons per minute; but, when requisite, 800 or 1000 gallons can be thrown up with equal ease, in the same space of time.

TRAFALGAR-SQUARE.



The basins at bottom add greatly to the beauty of the fountains; and it has been arranged that they shall at all times be kept brim full of transparent water.

The effect of the entire square is magnificent; but it is not such an one as woos the pedestrian to repose, or the idler to lounge. In summer, "the sun smites it by day, and the cold by night;" and in winter, the biting winds make it equally intolerable. On the Continent, were a Place Grand is constantly a Place Vert, these fearful inconveniences would have been remedied by groves of trees; and we may add, that not only would the public have been benefited, but the effect of the architecture itself would have been assisted by such an arrangement in the vast promenade of Trafalgar-square.



The contract for "spouting water" is ten hours a day on the average—that is, in the summer the fountains are to play thirteen hours per day, and in the winter seven hours. The height to which the water is to be thrown will vary, according to the weather, from 25 feet to 40 feet from the ground.

The mode of procuring the water, its quantity, distribution, &c., as well as the engines and all other apparatus connected with this undertaking, are the work of Messrs. Easton and Amos, of the Grove, Southwark, on whom the whole management reflects the highest credit. We understand that the entire cost of the sinking the wells, &c., the engines, pipes, and all attendant machinery and expenses, is somewhat under £10,000, exclusive of the granite fountains; and for this, the permanent means of supplying the whole of the Government offices from Charing-cross to the new Houses of Parliament, inclusive, is insured, as well as the necessary consumption for the watering of the streets, &c.

The saving which Government will effect by this mode forms no inconsiderable item in its advantages, for the present contract for furnishing the requisite quantity of water being £500 per annum, and the sum hitherto paid to the water companies double that amount.

LITERATURE.

History of the Consulate and the Empire of France Under Napoleon. By M. A. Thiers, late Prime Minister of France, &c. &c. Translated by D. Forbes Campbell, Esq. Vols. 1 and 2. Colburn.

This work is the continuation of the History of the French Revolution, and, along with it, will furnish, when completed, a full and comprehensive account of one of the most momentous changes that ever occurred in human affairs, and of the career of one of the greatest men who ever min led in them. A work by a Prime Minister is not, in France, an unusual phenomenon, though we probably owe these volumes to the exile from office which M. Thiers has for some years shared along with the leaders of the English Opposition, as much as to the desire he must naturally have felt to complete the task he had begun. The ex-Minister has many qualities which peculiarly fit him for the preparation of the History of the period here chronicled. With the decline and fall of Napoleon and the Empire he must have been a contemporary; of the Consulate he must have known many who were actors in its events, or sharers in its triumphs; and from his official position in days we can all remember, he derived many advantages of access to authentic documents which would have been difficult or impossible for any other person to obtain. He has, too, the gift of industry, amply proved by the manner in which he has dealt with the immense mass of materials from which he had to shape a connected narrative; he has, apparently, spared no pains to ensure correctness as to facts and figures, and as far as events are concerned, it is the best History yet written, and will render any other unnecessary. Whether his estimate of individuals is always the true one, may be questioned, perhaps, for he rates some of the men of the Revolution more highly than we have been accustomed to admit in England; but this is not unnatural in a Frenchman, who is, to some extent, an apologist of that revolution, though no one can condemn its excesses more sincerely. A greater objection to the work here, will be made to its continual defence of the aggressive and violent policy of Napoleon, who, we cannot believe, in spite of M. Thiers' assertions, was either a lover of peace, or capable of any personal sacrifice, however small, to secure it. He rose by war, he believed in no power but force, and, always confident in the strength of armies, he never comprehended that there was also a people; he forgot this fact as much in reference to France as the rest of Europe; he exhausted the strength of his own people to feed the waste of his campaigns and fields of slaughter, and he united those of every other nation against him by his arrogant attempt to subject them all to a military despotism. He wore out France, her people, her treasure, his armies, his generals, and himself, and fell at last as much from want of support from within as from the assault from without. But the animating principle of this history is admiration of Napoleon's system; it is the spirit of the War Party and the War Press of France thrown into the chapters of a history instead of leading articles. Its language is, indeed, more moderate; there are no offensive expressions, no outbreaks of narrow national jealousies. But the spirit is there nevertheless; M. Thiers is fired with a love of "the liberties and glories of France." Alas! the "glories" of France have been her curse, and brought her at last to a political condition with respect to which the mention of the word "liberty" is a mere mockery. The men who love the "liberties" of France will be those who estimate her "glories" at their true value. But at present this advocacy of aggression abroad as the source of greatness at home is a popular doctrine in France, and we must remember the work is written by a Frenchman and is addressed to his countrymen; we cannot read it in the same spirit, for there is very little in common between the two nations in their ideas of liberty or national greatness. But we must regret to see War held up in any manner as a thing to be sought or provoked for the sake of triumphs, which are in the truth the most vain, empty, and worthless of delusions. With this reservation, we can recommend the work as an admirable one; the language is clear and expressive, even in the translation, by which we must confess the original has somewhat suffered; there are passages in it of great descriptive power, the more remarkable as facts have never been departed from for the sake of effect. Much of its authenticity is derived from the access M. Thiers has had to the correspondence of Napoleon himself, which M. Merruan, in an article in the Constitutionnel, states extended to as many as forty thousand letters or notes:—

"Napoleon," says M. Merruan, "never deliberated; he always ordered, and always in writing. He dictated with prodigious rapidity, and was in the habit of reading over what he had dictated. There were days on which he dictated as many as a hundred letters. At Osterode, in 1807, in the heart of Poland, and amidst the snows of winter, he wrote, on the same day, to Fouché respecting individuals placed under his surveillance; to Cambacérès on all the affairs and documents connected with the Council of State, which had been sent to him to sign; to Joseph, King of Naples, to Louis, King of Holland, on the art of reigning in new countries; to Madame Campan, on female education; to Murat, on the organisation of the cavalry; to the generals of the engineering department, on the fortress of Alessandria; and to Berthollet, for whom he professed the greatest affection, sending him 150,000 francs to assist him in his difficulties."

Of this vast store of information M. Thiers has ably availed himself. As a specimen of the work, no passage could be better than the account of the crossing the Alps, at St. Bernard; the movements preceding the Battle of Marengo; and the description of the battle itself: but without maps and plans (the want of which is grievously felt throughout the work) these passages are not quite intelligible, and we therefore prefer extracting M. Thiers' estimate of the characters and services of Fouché, Talleyrand, and Cambacérès, which is admirably written: —

M. Fouché, half faithful to the revolutionary party, took pleasure in showing indulgence to his old friends, and dared, in reference to them, to contradict the First Consul. Well knowing their moral situation, appreciating, more especially, the villains of royalism, he was incessantly repeating that the danger, if there were any, was from the royalists much more than from the revolutionists, and that they should soon have occasion to perceive this. He had even the merit, but not for a long time, of insisting that it would be well not to forsake the Revolution and its ideas quite so much. Hearing already the flatterers of the day assert that it was necessary to proceed more rapidly in reaction, to disregard the prejudices of the Revolution, and to return to something that should resemble monarchy, minus the Bourbons, he dared to censure, if not the aim, at least the imprudence with which certain persons pursued that track. While admitting the justice of his opinions, given with good sense, but without frankness and without dignity, the First Consul was struck, but not pleased, with them. He acknowledged the services of this personage, but had no esteem for him.

M. de Talleyrand performed a totally contrary part; he had neither affection for M. Fouché nor resemblance to him. They had both been formerly priests, the one having belonged to the superior, the other to the inferior clergy, and yet they had nothing in common, but their having both taken advantage of the Revolution to cast aside, the former the prelate's robes, the latter the humble gown of the Oratorian professor. How strange, it must be confessed, and how characteristic of that deeply convulsed society, was the spectacle presented by this Government, composed of a soldier and two priests, who had adjured their profession, and, though thus composed, having none the less splendour, grandeur, and influence in the world.

M. de Talleyrand descended from a family of the noblest lineage, destined by his birth for the army, doomed to the priesthood by an accident, which deprived him of the use of one foot, having no liking for this imposed profession, successively bishop, courtier, revolutionist, and emigrant, then afterwards Minister for Foreign Affairs under the Directory, M. de Talleyrand had retained something of all these different states; there was to be found in him a touch of the bishop, of the man of quality, and of the revolutionist. Having no firmly fixed opinion, but only a natural moderation, which was opposed to every species of exaggeration; capable of entering at once into the feelings of those whom he wished to please, either from liking or from interest; speaking a unique language peculiar to that society which had Voltaire for instructor; full of smart, poignant repartees, which rendered him as formidable as he was attractive; by turns caressing or disdainful, demonstrative or impenetrable; careless, dignified, lame without loss of gracefulness, in short, one of the most extraordinary personages, and such a one as a revolution alone can produce, he was the most seducing of negociators, but at the same time incapable of directing, as head, the affairs of a great state; for every leader should possess a resolute will, settled views, and application, and he had none of these. His will was confined to pleasing, his views consisted in the opinions of the moment, his application was next to nothing. In a word, he was an accomplished ambassador, but not a directing minister: be it understood, however, that this expression is to be taken in its most elevated acceptation. For the rest, he held no other post under the Consular Government. The First Consul, who allowed no person the right to give an opinion on the affairs of war and of diplomacy, merely employed him to negotiate with the foreign Ministers, on bases previously prescribed, and this M. de Talleyrand did with an art that will never be surpassed. He possessed, however, a moral merit, that of being fond of peace under a master who was fond of war, and of showing that he was so. Endowed with exquisite taste, uniting with it unerring tact, and even a useful indolence, he was able to render real services, by simply opposing to the First Consul's exuberance of language, pen, and action, his sobriety, his perfect moderation, and his very propensity to do nothing. But he made little impression on that imperious master, from whom he extorted no respect either by genius or by conviction. Thus he had no more empire than M. Fouché, nay, even less, though quite as much employed, and more agreeable.

Then again, M. de Talleyrand said just the contrary to what M. Fouché said. Attached to the ancient régime, minus the persons and the ridiculous prejudices of other times, he recommended the re-establishment of the monarchy as soon as possible, or an equivalent for it, by availing of the glory of the First Consul in lieu of blood-royal, adding that, if we wished to have a speedy and a durable peace with Europe, we ought to make haste to resemble other states. And, while his colleague, Fouché, in the name of the Revolution advised that we should not go too fast, M. de Talleyrand, in the name of Europe, advised that we should not go so slow.

The First Consul prized the plain good sense of M. Fouché, relished the graces of M. de Talleyrand, but absolutely believed neither the one nor the other on any subject, and, as for his confidence, had given that, given it wholly and entirely, but not to either of those two men—to his colleague Cambacérès. The latter, with an understanding far from brilliant, had extraordinary good sense, and an unbounded attachment to the First Consul. Having trembled for ten years of his life under proscribers of all sorts, he loved with a kind of affection, the powerful master, who at length procured him the faculty of breathing at his ease. He loved his power, his genius, his person, from which he had not received, and hoped never to receive, anything but favours. Acquainted with the weaknesses of men, even of the greatest, he counselled the First Consul, as one ought to counsel when one wishes to be attended to, with perfect sincerity, with extreme discretion, never for the purpose of showing off his own wisdom, but always to be serviceable to a Government which he loved, as dearly as himself, always approving of all its acts in public, whatever they might be, and never disapproving of them but in private, in an absolute tête-à-tête with the First Consul; keeping silence when there was no good to be done, and when censure could be but a vain pleasure of finding fault; sure to speak his mind, and with a courage highly meritorious in a man so extremely timid, when he was in time to prevent a blunder, or influence the general conduct of affairs. And, as if a character which is incessantly under self-restraint must needs be betrayed into some weakness, the consul Cambacérès exhibited a puerile vanity with his inferiors, lived with some subaltern courtiers, who paid him fulsome homage, walked every day in the Palais Royal, in a ridiculously magnificent dress, and sought, in the gratification of a gourmandise that has become proverbial, pleasures which were suited to his vulgar but prudent soul. Of what consequence, however, are a few foibles, redeemed by superior reason.

The First Consul cheerfully forgave these foibles in his colleague, and made much of him. He appreciated that superior good sense, which never wished to shine but to be useful, and which threw a tempered and true light upon every thing. He appreciated, above all, the sincerity of his attachment, laughed at his weaknesses, but always with delicacy, and paid him the very high compliment of confiding every thing to him alone, of never being concerned but about his judgment. Hence, he was susceptible of no influence but his—an influence scarcely suspected, and on that account very great.

The consul Cambacérès was qualified more especially to temper his vehemence in regard to persons, and his precipitation in regard to things. Amidst this conflict of two opposite tendencies, one urging to a precipitate reaction, the other, on the contrary, combating that reaction, M. Cambacérès, inflexible when the maintenance of order was in question, was, in every thing else, always a decided advocate for not going too fast. He did not oppose the end to which things were visibly tending, for he kept incessantly repeating, "Let them in due time decree as much power as they please to the First Consul, well and good, but not too soon." He wished especially that reality should always be preferred to appearance, real power to that which was but ostentation. A First Consul, possessing the power to do all that he pleased for the welfare of the State, seemed to him far superior to a crowned prince cramped in his action. To act, and to keep out of sight above all, never to act too quickly, constituted the whole of his wisdom. This most certainly is not genius, but it is prudence; and, for founding a great State, both are requisite.

M. Cambacérès was useful to the First Consul in another way, besides advising him with superior judgment—that of governing the Senate. That body, as we have said, was of immense importance, owing to the patronage vested in it. In the first moments, it had been relinquished, in some measure, to M. Sieyès, as a compensation for the executive power, vested wholly in General Bonaparte. M. Sieyès was at first content to abdicate, but, living on his estate at Crosne, began to feel somewhat vexed at his nullity; for there never was abdication without regret. Had he possessed firmness and consistency, he might have wrested the Senate from the First Consul, who would then have had no resource left but a coup d'état. But M. Cambacérès, without noise, without ostentation, insinuating himself by degrees with that body, occupied the ground, which the peevish negligence of M. Sieyès abandoned to him. People knew that it was through him they could come at the First Consul, the source of all favour and to him they accordingly addressed themselves. Of this he availed himself with infinite and always concealed art, to repress or to regain opponents. But this was done with such discretion, that nobody thought to complain of it. At a time when repose had become true wisdom, when repose was even necessary for reviving one day a taste for liberty, we dare not censure, we dare not give the name of corrupter to the man who, on the one hand, tempered the master imposed by events, and, on the other, checked the imprudences of an opposition without aim, unseasonable, and politically unwise.

The two volumes published bring the History down to the Peace of 1801.

Burns's Fireside Library. Burns.

The present system of reprinting popular works at a reduced charge has already led to the formation of many a "family library" in houses which could not hitherto boast of a few shelves of books. The cheapest of these serial publications are, however, somewhat of too matter-of-fact and utilitarian a character to be so extensively read as their low price would otherwise lead to. Economy of cost is, certainly, very desirable in popular literature; but if the staple of the article supplied be unattractive, then the publication is not likely to prove beneficial either to purchaser or publisher; for the pride of possessing books is but a poor gratification in comparison with the pleasure of reading them. True it is that the libraries of the rich are so extensive, that their "very indices are not to be read over in an age," and their furniture of books reminds one of the coat in the "Tale of a Tub;" but in the case of collections of books for the middle and industrious classes, they are purchased for better motives than ostentation—to be read and appreciated.

The appearance of the "Fireside Library" has induced us to this comparison, since it promises to be a more inviting collection than either of its predecessors, if we except the series of novels. The "Fireside" re-issues are chiefly of a narrative and poetic character, having, at the same time, an instructive and recreative aim. Six of the volumes are before us:—1. "Evenings with the Old Story-Tellers," is a collection of tales, for which we are indebted to the imagination, knowledge, and literary labour of the monks of the middle ages; and "from which the most celebrated poets, of our own and other lands, have condescended to draw their plots." The "Gesta Romanorum" has supplied many of these tales; each being introduced by a conversational page or two, explaining the origin of the story, &c.: this is, altogether, a very pleasant volume of romantic fiction.—2. A collection of "Ballads and Metrical Tales," selected from Percy, Ritson, Evans, Jamieson, Scott, &c., and presenting some of the more popular specimens of our Ballad Poetry, as the Childe of Elle, Chevy-Chace, the Children in the Wood, Griselda, Valentine and Ursine, and thirty-six others: this volume is most picturesquely illustrated by Tenniel, Corbould, Franklin, and others: the scene from the Children in the Wood, by the former artist, is a beautiful composition.—3. "Frank's First Trip to the Continent," by the Rev. W. Gresley, M.A., narrates the facts and incidents of several visits to France, not in the traveller's dry descriptive manner, but in a lively, conversational, and anecdotic style.—4. "Undine," a pretty edition of Fouqué's celebrated romance, with an excellent preface on the genius of its highly gifted author.—5. "Fables and Parables," by Lessing, Herder, Krummacher, and others, not familiar to the English reader; with a very entertaining outline of the history of Parabolic literature.—6. "The Shadowless Man," a reprint of Chamisso's "Wonderful History of Peter Schlemil."

The volumes, respectively, are illustrated with wood-engravings of highly intellectual design; and, altogether, the execution of the present portion of the series gives assurance of its yielding a great fund of entertainment and pleasant instruction to all classes of readers.

The Complete Angler, or The Contemplative Man's Recreation, of Izaak Walton and Charles Cotton. Edited by John Major. Fourth Edition. D. Bogue, Fleet-street.

It would be difficult, within the whole compass of our early literature, to name a volume which has attained a wider popularity than "The Complete Angler" of Walton. For nearly two centuries has it been "the Contemplative Man's Recreation," in the field and in the closet, in the bright beams of a "fine fresh May morning," and in the rural quiet of some moss-crusted retreat: from the time when it was first published, "in St. Dunstan's Churchyard, Fleet-street, 1653," to its issue in the same full-tide of bibliopoly in 1844. How many thousand readers have been, by turns, charmed with its vivid autobiographical spirit, its lively dialogues, its minute and sparkling pictures of rural objects; its varied display of character, both in action and conversation; its pastoral poetry; its quaint, but wise thoughts, agreeable and humorous fancies, and truly apostolic purity and benevolence. Admiration of Walton's Art has well nigh outlived its abuse, and a full score of years have elapsed since the poet sang:—

> And angling, too, that solitary vice,
> Whatever Izaak Walton sings or says;
> The quaint, old, cruel coxcomb, in his gullet
> Should have a hook, and a small trout to pull it.

To chronicle the various editions of this "recreation of a recreation," as old Izaak termed his "Angler," would be a labour beside our purpose; but, it is difficult to imagine any volume more complete in bibliographical and picturesque illustration, or in typographical accuracy and beauty, than the volume before us; the fourth edition which, in 21 years, has passed the scrutiny of the zealous editor, John Major. His "Introductory Essay" sparkles with new and interesting facts in the life of the Prince of Piscators: in it, the editor advocates Walton's claims to a higher position than his earliest biographers have awarded him, and dwells especially upon the extent and high respectability of Walton's connexions, particularly among the superior clergy of his time. He next quotes the proof adduced last year, that, at the age of 24, Walton was free of the Ironmongers' Company. Then we have some talk of erecting a monument more worthy of honest Izaak, than that which has been placed in Winchester Cathedral, whose Dean is delighted that an honour so justly due, should be paid to Walton as the "Historian of the Church." Next, we find a "genuine little scrap," exhibiting a fac-simile of his hand writing, which will be new even to the Waltonian reader. Of course, this Essay only glances at Walton's history, for whom nearly as much has been done in the way of literary and personal illustration as for Shakspeare himself. Still, John Major's enthusiasm is very delightful, and we can readily believe that he has "Waltonised the land," and truly merited Mr. Disraeli's compliment to John's edition of 1823: "one often sees a pretty book, which is interesting to a particular class; but you have hit on a work that pleases everybody." Nor can we pass over the zeal with which certain fond approvals are quoted, from Sheridan's declaration that he never desired a better companion for a post-chaise, than this same Angler, to Wordsworth's imperishable tribute to > Meek Walton's heavenly memory.

The same bibliographic lore, conjoined with artistical taste, is shown in the selection of the embellishments. Those on steel include a portrait of Walton, copied by Bone, from Houseman's picture in the National Gallery; and a companion portrait of Cotton, from a miniature by Lely, for which Kenny Meadows has designed a frame, charmingly characteristic of Cotton as an angler, a poet, a lover, and a Bacchanalian. Then follows a series of new designs, painted by Absolon, and engraved by Willmore. The embellishments on wood, by the Jacksons, are 74 in number. Creswick has painted for the work some delightful river-scenes. The Fish are mostly from paintings by A. Cooper, R.A.; whilst, to enliven the antiquarianism of autographs and portraits, Kenny Meadows has contributed a few kindred fancies of surpassing humour.

Among the localities consecrated by Walton's genius, his house in Fleet-street is the most popular; and of this dwelling Mr. Major treats us with an accredited view, adding "The curious in London topography will recognize the corner house in the print annexed to this essay, as the south-west end of Chancery-lane, Fleet-street, as it appeared till within about the last sixteen years. The third west from the corner is considered as the identical house of Walton, whilst the view, at the same time, contains a glance of the curious old houses up Chancery-lane, in one of which he also resided about ten years after the above date. It is, probably, the only correct delineation extant, having been drawn on the spot by the late Mr. Smith, of the British Museum, whose superiority in topographical delineation is particularly well known."

THE MAGAZINES FOR APRIL.

The Literary World is evidently astir with novelties; whilst books and rumours of books are more numerous than we recollect them to have been for some years, at this season. The Magazines partake of this general activity; and, what with the renewed exertions of the old favourites, and the budding of new aspirants, all classes of readers have cause for congratulation.

Blackwood opens with a paper of charming criticism, entitled "Virgil, Tasso, and Raphael," in which the characteristics of their genius are most poetically delineated. The article, too, teems with such elegant truths as the following:—"So completely in all persons of education are the great works of antiquity incorporated with thought, that they arise involuntarily with every exercise of the faculty of taste, and insensibly recur to the cultivated mind, with all that it admires, and loves, and venerates." The next paper is a sly shaft—"Ping-Kee's Views of the Stage," in which a Chinese borrows his notions of English life from our drama: to wit, Mr. Bourcicault's hot-bed, "Old Heads and Young Hearts." "The Midnight Watch" is a well-written tale of the Civil Wars. It is followed by a searching examination of that very remarkable book, "Vestiges of the Natural History of Creation." We have only space to do little more than name two other papers of striking interest—"A Sequel to the Confessions of an English Opium-eater," and "North's Specimens of the British Critics—Dryden:" in the latter, Sir Walter Scott's strange misplacing of glorious John, second only to Milton and Shakspeare, is not forgotten. The number is a good one, but somewhat over critical.

Fraser leads off with the first of a Gallery of Contemporary Orators—Sir Robert Peel, in which the statecraft of the Premier is vividly and impartially sketched. The introductory pages on "Eloquence in this empire, is power," evince a thorough acquaintance with the parliamentary oratory of our time, and the common sense of the observations on the state of parties compensates for their occasional want of polish; altogether, there is a life-like vigour in the paper which renders the contributor a great acquisition to Fraser's muster-roll. "The Wolves of Esthonia" is a cleverly narrated string of the horrors of wolf visits. The review of Bon Gaultier's Book of Ballads is a piece of broad, rattling criticism: there is a judicious commendation of Miss Acton's Modern Cookery, introduced by a glance at culinary history, secundum artem. Mr. Oakeley's Letter to the Bishop of London, and the Treasury Benches, are the titles of two other papers. There are some excellent Scottish ballads; and the lover of anecdotic gossip will regret to find the "Walk from London to Fulham" terminated by the agreeable narrator arriving at the "ancient village." The number is throughout a capital one.

The Dublin University Magazine opens with a paper on that much-vexed antiquarian question, the origin and uses of the Irish Round Towers, the peg being Mr. Petrie's long-expected Essay. To this succeeds a string of touching poems by the late Mrs. James Gray, a contributor to this Magazine. A series of articles on the Italian Poets is commenced with Tasso. The "Nevilles of Garretstown" is continued; there is some lively railroad romance in "The Road versus the Rail;" and the Number is wound up with a review, or rather digest, of M. Thiers's "Consulate and the Empire."

The Student, and Young Men's Advocate, under the superintendence of the Metropolitan Drapers' Association, contains some sound information in natural and moral science, relieved by lighter matter. The work is wonderfully cheap.

The Naval and Military Sketch-book is an illustrated anecdotic miscellany, with snatches of romance, memoirs of regiments and celebrated persons, harping on "adventure by flood and field:" it is pleasant reading, full of stirring incident, embellished, withal, in good taste, and in abundant variety.

Maxwell's History of the Rebellion in Ireland in the year 1798, is this month concluded with parts XIV. and XV. In his Preface, the author states this work to be compiled "from works long since given to the world—documentary papers—manuscripts for the first time printed—and private details of men still living, and who themselves acted a leading part during that troubled era." With such excellent materials, Mr. Maxwell has wrought a volume of startling interest, and horrifying detail, yet pregnant in every page with lessons to the governing and the governed. Cruikshank, as the illustrator, has preserved his literal skill to the last: the plate of the rebels destroying a house and furniture, is an admirable specimen.

Wade's London Review abounds with stern judgments upon momentous topics of the day; as Ministers and the Banks of Scotland, Anti-Catholic Novels, Rifle-Ball Experiment, and Capital Punishments. Neither is the paper on Rabelais ill-timed, in this age of fun and satire. Caligraphy and Character discusses anecdotically and pleasantly, a position as old as the days of Shenstone—that you may tell a man's disposition by his hand-writing.

The Church of England Magazine for six months, forms a goodly volume, closely printed, and liberally illustrated. Glancing at the contents, we find ancient monuments, biographies of eminent persons, choice theological extracts and essays, a tour to the English lakes, papers on fossil remains, and the serpents alluded to in the Scriptures, original poetry of a religious cast, Sabbath meditations, sermons, and family prayers, curiosities of the animal and vegetable kingdoms, remarkable days and places, &c.—the whole superintended by clergymen of the United Church of England and Ireland. As regards quantity and sterling quality of matter, the work is a marvel of cheapness.

The Illuminated Magazine, No. XXIV, concludes the present series, and announces its appearance next month, in a handsomely-bound volume, without any increase of charge. The present Number concludes Craven's Tale of Fatherland, in which there is some attractive nouvelette writing. A strange eventful story in verse, by Charles Whitehead, is powerfully illustrated by Kenny Meadows. Dr. Roden's "Travel and Talk" discourses pleasantly of Naples and Florence. "The Past, the Present, and the Possible" is a "Keep-moving," cosmopolitan paper; and, an article entitled "Contemporary History" mercifully exposes the stuff of which the minor intelligence of the folio of four (or eight) pages is made. The Number is lively and unflagging throughout.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

At her Majesty's Theatre, when we have not novelty of lyrical music we have novelty of reading of scores and of impersonation. "Lucia di Lammermoor" was performed on Tuesday night, and was the occasion of a remarkable début, and one which had for some time engrossed the attention of the dilettanti. Its result surpassed all previous expectation. Thunders of applause greeted each effort of the young and fair débutante, and her success was not only complete, but most brilliant. The first notes of Madame Castellan, full, easy, and assured, surprised her auditors, and her earnest and thrilling execution of the beautiful air, "Regnava nel Silenzio," for which another cavatina from "Rosamonda" is generally substituted, took them by storm.

It has seldom been our lot to hear a fresher, more liquid and melodious voice; its compass is remarkable; naturally a high soprano, it descends to the lowest regions of the contralto, and embraces two octaves and a half, from the A flat in the bass to the E flat above, and is perfect throughout. Her execution is clear and flowing, her expression true and impassioned. To her impersonation of the hapless Bride of Lammermoor, it would be difficult to give too large a proportion of praise. It is in perfect keeping throughout, and yet no traces of the study which she has doubtless expended upon it can be perceived. The character of the simple, tender, confiding Lucy, seems to belong to her; nature, not art, seems to produce the emotions which shake her whole being, and the spontaneous simple and natural feeling which bursts forth, as though irrepressible, give to her acting a totally different character to that of any other artiste.

The scene in the beginning of the second act, where the meek and timid girl is goaded into bitterness and reproach by the cruelty of her brother, was given by her with the force of reality; while the scena, when poor Lucy's reason is wrecked—where the memory of lost happiness, and the realisation of broken hopes, mingled with the consciousness of existing evil possess her mind, was touching in the extreme, and the sweet and thrilling tones that came forth from her lips, seemed the natural expression of feelings too strong to be repressed. Her attitudes, always in perfect keeping with her subject, were most graceful; whilst her ingenuous countenance reflected each shade of feeling. The applause was tremendous. The fall of the curtain after each act brought forth an universal call for Madame Castellan; a royal dilettante himself stimulating the audience with his bravos! which formed a running commentary at each pause of her performance. We have seldom seen a more pronounced and decided success.

Moriani was, what he generally is in the impersonation of Edgardo—it is impossible he should be more. The character Sir Walter Scott portrayed, he enacts in every minutia; from beginning to end the character of the gloomy Edgar, his spirit embittered by misfortune, and excited by revenge, is not lost sight of for a moment; and this renders the contrast more striking with that deep and passionate devotion to Lucy Ashton, which has frustrated all his schemes of vengeance, and that gushing tenderness with which the Bell'Alma inamorata escapes from his dying lips.

Fornasari displayed more than his wonted energy and vigour in the part of Ashton. The solemn brazen tones of this noble singer form the darker shadows of the picture—in whose depth the spectator reposes, as in those of a picture of Rembrandt—whilst it brings out, with inexpressible effect, the features of the dramatis personæ in the foreground. The result of last Thursday's performance was the more striking, as it was unexpected; and the acquisition of a first-rate prima donna is an event which will create a sensation throughout Europe, where the love of lyrical music daily acquires more universal sway and intensity.

THE FRENCH PLAYS.

After a short relache for Pastor, the St. James's Theatre reopened its doors on Monday, for the first appearance this season of Mademoiselle Plessy, of the Theatre Francais. This clever actress was born at Metz, celebrated for its mirabelles, which glitter with their chrystalized sugar in their round boxes on our dessert tables. On the death of her father she was brought to Paris to be placed in the Conservatoire; but, instead of this, became a pupil of Samson, under whose tuition she rapidly became the finished actress, and soon acquired her high position, acknowledged by the fastidious habitués of the Theatre Francais.

It has been a sudden change from the melodrama of Frederic Lemaitre to the calm comedy of Mademoiselle Plessy; and we scarcely imagined that those who thronged so eagerly to behold his terrible nature in the "Dame de St. Tropez," or "Trente Ans," and his amusing blague in "Robert Macaire," would find great pleasure in the severe elegance of Plessy. But she is evidently appreciated, and that highly too, by the audiences at the French plays: the appearance of the house on Monday, and the general applause which greeted her entrance, proved this.

The "Ecole des Veillards," in which this lady performs Madame Danville, is not a very interesting piece. We plead guilty to having caught ourselves yawning once or twice during its representation: indeed, it appears to have acquired a reputation far beyond its merits. The plot lacks the ingenuity of the French school of dramatic writing; and the dialogue is deficient in point and humour—serious defects in a comedy. It is, however, evenly written. Mdlle. Plessy's acting was distinguished by all that care and piquancy which has been so much admired. One of her most valuable qualities is, that she speaks the speech allotted to her, not in any pretensious or studied manner, but naturally and truthfully. Her deportment is also perfect. M. Cartigny, as Bonnard, merits a favourable notice; and M. Oudinot played with his wonted effect, as Danville, the husband.

OLYMPIC.

Mr. Marble, the American comedian, of whom we had to speak favourably during his engagements at the Strand and Haymarket theatres a few months back, appeared at this house on Easter Monday. His previous career in London could not be termed a successful one; but this was entirely owing to the wretched trash in which he appeared, rather than any want of merit on his part as an actor. There is a quaintness and dry humour in his performance which is highly diverting; and as Sampson Hardhead, "The Game Cock of the Wilderness," in the piece of the same name, he has an opportunity of putting forth all his drolleries. The piece itself is by an American author—so, at least, we presume; but, as it has been proved several times, even down to the last trans-Atlantic importation, Metamora, that our own ideas of excellence differ somewhat with those of Brother Jonathan, the "Game Cock of the Wilderness" is partly rewritten and constructed by Mr. Leman Rede, whose experience in such matters is well known. He appears to have had but rough materials to work upon. There is a daughter in love with one man, but urged by her father to marry another; there is an attempted murder, when the choice of the father tries to shoot the choice of the lady: there is a wrong man taken up for it, being the "Game Cock of the Wilderness," with other situations more or less conventional. Mr. Marble's acting, however, was very entertaining, keeping the audience constantly on the qui vive to catch his sly witticisms and opinions; and at the fall of the curtain he was loudly called for. We have no doubt but that the "Game Cock" will flutter his wings for some time at the Olympic. A burlesque succeeded, called "The Seven Champions of Christendom." It is written by Mr. Stoquelar, turning the old legend into fun, and abounds with humorous allusions to the late topics of the day, which have formed the chief points this Easter in all the extravaganzas. But candour compels us to say it is so inefficiently performed, and put upon the stage in such a dreary manner, that we much wonder it went even so well as it did. Miss Davenport, a clever tragic actress, is totally out of her place in burlesque; and the attempts of the rest of the company to be droll, entirely misunderstanding the spirit of extravaganza, were literally depressing. There were some capital notions throughout the piece, which actors with common intelligence could have made a great deal of; but which, as it was, fell "dead flat." To act a burlesque properly—that is to say, a burlesque of the present day—requires the greatest care and nicest perception of humour, widely different from the low buffoonery of one of the characters in the present instance, whose contortions never raised a smile. We recommend the manager to visit Richardson's show; from the corps dramatique of that popular establishment he can replace some of his company with great advantage.

ASTLEY'S.

We do not look for any high order of literary merit in the pieces produced at Astley's Theatre. On the contrary, we think we should be somewhat disappointed if we found it. But there must be a great deal to see, and a great deal to read, in the play-bill: we must have grand entrées and double platforms; combats, rescues, and red fire—plenty of red fire. And we must also have numbers of children about us, for their laughter and amazement is the greatest treat, perhaps, after all; we question if we should enjoy the jokes of Mr. Merriman with half the zest, if there were not little people near us to laugh too.

On Easter Monday the house re-opened, according to custom, with a new grand spectacle, called "The Maid of Saragossa, or the Spanish Amazons," in which the well known picture by Wilkie formed the concluding tableau of the first act. There were ladies in brilliant armour, mounted on "fiery untamed steeds," defending a party of sleeping Guerillas against the French; there was, of course, the defence also of the town, and a comic Irish soldier, who gets into trouble, nobody knows how, and always has remarkable business to transact, nobody knows where. But the grand effect was reserved for the end of the spectacle, wherein the town tumbled down into ruins, and there was such a firing of cannon and clashing of weapons—such clattering of infuriated steeds, and cheering of the conquering troops, as was never before witnessed. There is no theatre where these effects are managed so well as at Astley's; although, we must confess, we have of late missed the genius displayed by Ducrow in their arrangement. The scenes in the circle were really excellent. A great acquisition has been made to the equestrian company by the engagement of Monsieur and Madame Dumos. The lady is a very graceful dancer, as well as rider; and the gentleman appeared in an "act of horsemanship," representing some passages in the life of Napoleon, changing his dress upon horseback, and assuming several well-known attitudes. Two brothers, the Messrs. Bridges, were loudly cheered for some very daring equestrian feats, especially that of managing five or six horses at once. The very small foothold which appears requisite to cling, as it were, to the backs of the steeds is most remarkable. There were several other performances more or less commendable, and a lively farce sent every body home in good temper with themselves and the world in general.

SADLER'S WELLS.

It has so often been our task to praise the management, and general arrangements of this excellently conducted theatre, that in noticing it, at present, we can do little more than reiterate what we have before said respecting it. As we predicted several weeks ago, "Richard the Third" has proved a most successful revival in every sense of the word; and the theatre has been literally crowded to the ceiling on each night of its representation. It must be exceedingly gratifying to Mrs. Warner and Mr. Phelps to see their exertions thus crowned with unvarying success; the more so, since every imitation of their plan, with the hacknied "gag" of "reviving the legitimate drama," and "affording a home to Shakspeare," has proved an utter failure—the result of general incapacity on the part of the "revivers" and "home-finders." To see an intellectual entertainment entirely taking the place of inferior melodrama, or the buffoonery of smoke-clouded taverns, must be a source of pleasure to every one anxious to see the moral amusements of the community promoted.

SURREY.

When we first saw the novel of "Margaret Catchpole" advertised, and a synopsis given of its incidents, we imagined it would not be long before the dramatists caught it up with a view of adapting it to the stage. Our anticipations proved correct. One or two versions have already appeared at the theatres, that at the Surrey being from the industrious scissors of Mr. Edward Stirling, whose tact in arranging popular works for representation on the stage is well known. Although the Surrey ranks with the minor theatres, it is by no means an unimportant one. On the contrary, its productions appeal to a very large class of the community; and its various departments support, indirectly, a great number of individuals. We conceive the Surrey holds a position level with that of the Ambigu-Comique, or the Porte St. Martin theatres, in Paris. The pieces are of the same calibre; the carte of fare provided for its patrons displays more highly-seasoned pieces de resistance than delicate entremets; and a successful piece may be regarded as a standard of the dramatic taste with which the middling classes,and those a shade lower, are imbued. Hence the most favourite productions are those whose scenes are laid amongst the domestic circles in which the majority of the audience move; and they appeal in general to the sympathies of individuals whose ideas are in the same category as those of the characters represented. The strange story—stranger than fiction—of Margeret Catchpole is, doubtless, already familiar to most of our readers through Mr. Cobbold's remarkable book. It has lost none of its interest in a dramatic shape; indeed this is increased by the pathos and truthfulness of Mrs. R. Honner's acting. She is a most valuable actress; and in the representation of the peculiar line of characters usually entrusted to her, without a rival. Indeed, every rôle in the drama was well filled, especially by Messrs. H. Hughes and Cowell. The latter gentleman we had occasion to notice at the Adelphi, and most favourably. He appears a great favourite at this house, where he has better opportunities of exhibiting his talents. Altogether the piece achieved a decided success. In the entertainment which followed, a little child, Miss Heron, played an Irish character. Her performance was certainly clever; but we confess such high-pressure precocities are little to our taste. In speaking of the capital manner in which the plays are put on the stage at this establishment, we must make favourable mention of Mr. Honner, from whose perception and arrangement other theatres might take a hint.

The bills at the other theatres have remained nearly the same as they were last week. We regret to state that Mr. W. Harrison has suffered from a relapse, and is now again severely indisposed. This has, of course, affected the performance of operas at Drury-lane; and the ballet not having proved a hit, the houses have been very indifferent. On Saturday evening last the theatre was closed.

FANCY BALL.

A very elegant fancy ball and supper was given at the Freemasons' Tavern on Thursday evening, to their friends, by some gentlemen well known in the theatrical and literary circles of the metropolis. Dancing commenced at ten o'clock and was kept up with unabated spirit until past six in the morning. The dresses were of the most gorgeous and characteristic description; and everything went off so well, that we believe it is intended to make an annual affair of it, under the title of "Une soirée d'amis."

SUFFOLK-STREET EXHIBITION.

It is with great pain as critics that we are compelled to record the generally low character of the present year's collection of paintings now gathered together upon the walls of this gallery. Nor is it alone in excellence of degree, but in generic classification of style, that the present exposition takes a very low rank. But one scriptural painting (that of Hagar and Ishmael dismissed by Abraham, 646, by E. Latella) and this of no great excellence, is to be found among the eight hundred works collected by the Society of British Artists. And not a single work of epic pretension, good or bad, is to be discovered there. In fact the great strength of the exhibition is good, bad, and indifferent landscape of all class and size, sprinkled with portraiture, and a slight infusion of painting of genre. We shall now proceed to analyse the separate productions of the principal exhibitors, none of whom, with the exception of Mr. Herring and Mr. Woolmer, betray any very great improvement. We ought, perhaps, also to except the works of another exhibitor, Mr. Anthony, from this sweeping assertion. The pictorial utterance of such talent as he seems to possess is decidedly better than the silence to which it had previously been condemned, as we certainly do not recollect his name as the producer of anything worth attention in the previous exhibition of this society.

The solitary painting of Latella's, to which we have already alluded, is executed in wax or fresco, and is marked by a dry, hard style of workmanship, which, however clean it may be, is anything but pleasant to the eye. The subject itself is too heavy for Mr. Latella. If he knew himself better, he would refrain from dealing with subjects which require something more than the dignity which a tolerable portrait painter can confer upon a thoughtful head. Moreover, his ill-judged imitation of the manner of the German eclectic school, argues a profound want of taste. To raise by changing the character of the British school, we need the originality of Haydon, rather than parallel plagiary with those of Maclise and Eastlake.

One of the very best landscapes in the Gallery comes from the easel of J. Tennant (near Hendon, Middlesex; 226). It is painted with infinite brilliance and charm, and far surpasses any of the other paintings of the same master in completeness. His large poetical landscape from Spenser's "Faerie Queen" ("Sir Calidore Entertained by the Shepherds;" 192), is luminous and clear, but wants intention and purpose. It is, as regards its name, an utter failure; and the other qualities which it possesses are not of sufficient excellence to make any compensation for the want of poetry shown in it.

The President of the Society, Mr. Hurlstone, exhibits only four pictures this year. (Nos. 56, 122, 348, and 405). The first of these, called "Rebecca"—an Italian woman with a pitcher, or vase, for we forget the precise form of the jar she bears upon her head—is by far the best of the four. But, in common with them, it shows that slovenliness and looseness of hand which Mr. H. has of late years been accustomed to mistake for freedom and mastery over his materials. In addition to this, the markings out of his features are offensively detailed with a raw lakey purple, and the hip of the figure is ill-drawn. As a portrait-composition the figure is put together with exceeding grace. Of the remaining three we prefer No. 405, "Salute Signore," the colour of which is less luminously rotten than that of the "Rebecca."

Herring's "Vulcan and Hebe" (171), is a painting of a blacksmith with a cupbearer from the neighbouring pot-house and a horse, the latter of which forms by far the most important portion of the painting. Mr. Herring understands the pictorial character of the horse well; and is only second to Landseer in his method of interpreting. His other contributions to the gallery are 121, 224, 321, 353, 396, 551 (the companion painting to "Vulcan and Hebe;" and, as regards colour, decidedly the better picture), and 559. The second upon this list (224), "Ducks after Nature," is an admirable little painting, full of life and nature.

Zeitter contributes a large number of his Hungarian sketches; all of them characterized by that curious surface which his execution has hitherto displayed. (No. 223), "The Stranger Inquiring his Way of a Hungarian Goatherd;" and (470), "Hungarian Peasants Going to Church," are, perhaps, the best of the ten compositions which he has this year exhibited. The first is a charming piece, of delicate tone, and melodious colour.

The single fancy subject, exhibited by Mr. Salter, is a repetition of the worn-out subject of the Bacchante, and one of the worst repetitions of it which we have yet seen. It has neither passion, joy, nor wine in it. The drawing of the figure is weak and lifeless, and the colour that of wax-work rather than flesh. We have heard that the various living models of the metropolis are doing less work this season than ever. We can fully believe that Mr. Salter contributes nothing to their support.

Mr. Woolmer has now learnt to tame down his poetic wildness into something like sobriety, and we can with reason congratulate him upon the change in his style. His landscape of "the Dingle" (No. 429), is one of the most charmingly poetical productions in the gallery, and needed only a slight degree more solidity in its shadows to have been pictorially almost perfect. There is also a tendency in this picture, as well as in the "Dorothea" (No. 363), to focus the higher lights with flake white—which, in some degree, impairs the richness and melody of its harmony. His "Scene from the Arabian Nights" (No. 302) is a gracious and ideal imagination, full of beautiful and tender tone. It is an inspiration, warmed with the inspiration of that marvellous work which used to enchant our boyhood with its dream of beauty and wonder. The handling of the "Dorothea" is vigorous and masterly, without the slightest affectation of coarseness, but needs somewhat more refinement and nicety in finish.

Pyne exhibits a large landscape, which is full of taste and conventional skill, but wants, in many portions, a closer and more minute attention to accidental colour. It partakes of the panoramic monotony, which seems as if it was necessitated by large extent of surface. The means employed are simple and good, and it is long since we have seen anything finer in landscape art than the recession of tone exhibited along the right hand brow of the valley. Nos. 339 and 344 are two masterly little circular effects, with no attempt at detail in them, fathered unscrupulously upon a couple of Welsh names. The rest of Mr. Pyne's paintings are composed of sea-scapes and river scenery. No. 623 (Vale of the Taff, South Wales) is one of the best of these canvasses.

Mr. Anthony exhibits several landscapes, characterised by marked originality of manner. His "Ruined Church and Round Tower of Aghadoe, with View of the Lower Lake of Killarney" (159), is singularly true and sweet in character, but is injured by an overdone care in detail, and somewhat too great a brilliance in manner. The same faults mark his "May-Day in the Last Century," which is otherwise a painting of surpassing eloquence in its variety of colour and novelty of hand. (No. 500).

The portraiture of the exhibition finds its best representative in Mr. Hill, who, with the exception of a prevalent flatness, and monotony of colour and handling, shows great taste in the general execution of his pictures. He draws gracefully, composes freely, and if he shows an occasional tendency to the weakness and thinness of water-colours, shows also a fine susceptibility of eye for the more delicate variations of tone. In No. 12 he has stepped aside from his usual class of subjects. The dead game are painted with excessive freedom, and the boy and background are richly, as well as modestly, treated. It is a canvass which does Mr. Hill infinite credit.

In caricature, for their class of design ranks little beyond it, we find Mr. Prentis and Pideling, both of whom exhibit considerable power in seizing the more exaggerated features of mirth and absurdity. As a mere artistic feature in his work, we would recommend the first to infuse less lamp-black and gloom into his paintings, and should wish the last to acquire more force and brilliance in his manner of mixing his light and shade. The "Lost Steak" of the latter (320), and the "Materials of a Future Page" (41), are favourable specimens of their manner.

Clint, Wilson, and Lancaster would, if we were disposed to have gone further, have come in for qualified praise. Clater possesses a clear and careful manner, as does Shayer, with no other qualification as a painter. Mr. Stevens is the finest exemplificator of tea-tray work on our present list of painters. Boddington imitates Bright badly, and Allen, whom we grieve hitherto to have omitted, is a fine painter, with English perceptions and English tastes about him. No. 86, by this artist, possesses an exquisite passage to the left of the painting of English colour and scenery. Like Lee and Creswick, we love him, because he is so throroughly English. Ward, the Academician, exhibits several small canvases of merit, which we regret should so evidently seem to be traps for Art-Union prizes. Au reste, there is nothing worth noticing in the Exhibition; and as we should regret to speak of artists, solely for the bitter delight of censuring their labour, we close our notice; not, however, without alluding to our deep sorrow in finding that so little impulse has been communicated to the body of artists by the late attempts made by Government to raise the character of British art. Surely we are not yet so utterly without epic talent as such an exhibition as this would argue; and it is with grief we see so large a collection of paintings as this, unmarked by more than that class of talent which is unwarmed by those higher inspirations which spoke to the old epic art of Italy and the poetic taste of Greece, in the painting and the sculpture which have outlived empires and nations, forms and creeds, by the power of that immortality genius confers upon the impulses of her children.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

When a cry was raised against railroads on the grounds of their being a heavy blow and a great discouragement to fox hunting—and indeed to the chase generally—it was little anticipated that the hot-water system would presently become, if not a national sport in the vernacular meaning of the term, at all events a very tolerable substitute and handsome equivalent for so much sporting materiel as it should damage. For example, your Oxonian, keen disciple of Nimrod though he be, has ten to one the best of it, even if occasionally the iron turnpike does interfere with his twenty minutes best endeavour to ride the tail off a bucephalus of Mr. Quartermaine's stud. Which of us can look back upon the mean invention of our day, though but half a score years ago, to get rid of troublesome time and cash by the agency of a yellow chaise and four posters, without rendering him up bodily to the green monster when contemplating the glories to be achieved by the aid of a special train? The vicinity of the Haymarket, available till Ten P.M., and college won before midnight—think of that gentlemen commoners, and proctors, not gentlemen at all. As soon as the Cambridge line is open, offices for the sale of opera stalls and pit tickets will be opened at both universities. But we would go further than this; we would claim for steam coaching the merit of being, for its own sake and effects, a pastime most worthy of cultivation. Sweet are the uses of the rail, if only they be properly applied, which certainly they are not where a snail's canter, of some twenty miles an hour or so, is the limit of their exploit. Take your locomotive and send him along, like a Derby winner, or an electric telegraph's note of interrogation, or a lover's hopes, and sit behind him, without your heart leaping out of your mouth, if you can. Do you want an authority for it, a glorious example of such a taste? On Tuesday last when the royal party was about returning to London from its short visit to the Isle of Wight, a director of the South Western Railway, whose duty it was to be in attendance on the occasion, inquired of Prince Albert "whether two hours and a quarter would be too short a time for the performance of the journey up?" "I think two hours and a half would be quite fast enough," replied his Royal Highness. "Oh no, no," exclaimed her Majesty,who had overheard what was passing, "no, no, two hours and a quarter." It was done in two hours and ten minutes; the observation of the engine driver upon the speed, being, "he didn t know what to do with the time." When the special train passed the Kingston station it was hard held; there cannot be a doubt that had it made steady running from the start, the distance could easily have been done in an hour and a half. Speed—like most other pleasant things—the more's the pity, is not to be had a bargain; those who want it must pay for it, and very probably there will soon be on every great line of railroad, trains that will do sixty miles an hour, at corresponding fares. Will it be too much to call a run with one of these "spott?" A well-known Meltonian, in the extacy of a ten minutes' hunt, best pace over grass, once cried out that he never knew hound or horse, could go half fast enough for him; and only it was quite certain to kill him he would try the sensation of being blown out of a mortar. Little did he think that he should ever see the day, when surrounded by his family, and a wilderness of well-stuffed cushions, he should regularly pass between his town and country houses, at the average rate of a bombshell.

In consequence of the usual spring races on Epsom Downs, being postponed till the end of the month, there was no actual race meeting in the current week; for Croxton Park is a hunt in all its legitimate features. The glorious weather that has at last set in, however, is not neglected in the training stables, and all the returns from their neighbourhoods, report the activity and earnestness with which their operations are going on. Of course the results of their labours are kept for the use of all they may concern, as much as may be; nevertheless, some of the secrets would seem to have oozed out, for as much as the Cobweb Colt in the quotations from Manchester, is said to have gone back on Tuesday, in the odds for the Derby, to 25 to 1. He will, it is likely, come again; but another fortnight will make ducks and drakes of many of the public fancies. With the exception of Zanoni having disappeared from among the market horses for the Chester Cup, that event is pretty much where it was. On Monday Cataract was without backers in London, while in the country he was rising in public consideration. The betting on that handicap has ranged over a very large field of horses, and the early birds have secured the best of the bookmaking. The yachting season promises to be as early as brilliant: already an unusual muster of vessels are afloat, and some very fine craft are on the eve of being launched. Old Hyerns, having usurped half the reign of Spring, has at length been put to the rout, and order and harmony are restored. The Jubilee of Nature has commenced—man will now begin his festival. It will be a gorgeous one, for peace and prosperity are abroad, and there is goodwill among men.

Monday.—A very slack day, and scarcely a movement worthy of observation. To distinguish the actual from the nominal favourites, however, it may be as well to state that Semiseria, Obscurity, the Era, Winesour, Celeste, Ratan, Yheoman ac Knuc, the Pride of Kildare, Old Ireland, and Patriot, were in fair demand for the Chester Cup; and Weatherbit, and Lord Exeter's lot, for the Derby. The Newmarket Handicap made its début, but with very little prospect of becoming a good betting race.

Thursday.—The subscribers mustered but scantily this afternoon, and, as far as their proceedings affected the market prices, to very little purpose. With the exception of Semiseria and Cataract, all the horses mentioned below, were more or less in favour; the transactions, nevertheless, being of very small amount. Obscurity, it will be seen, became first favourite, a movement accomplished without the outlay of a sixpence. The Derby betting showed a strong disposition to back Clear-the-Way, the Cobweb colt, Pantasa, and Fuzbos, and sent the favourite back a point; the general business, however, was more than unusually flat and inoperative.

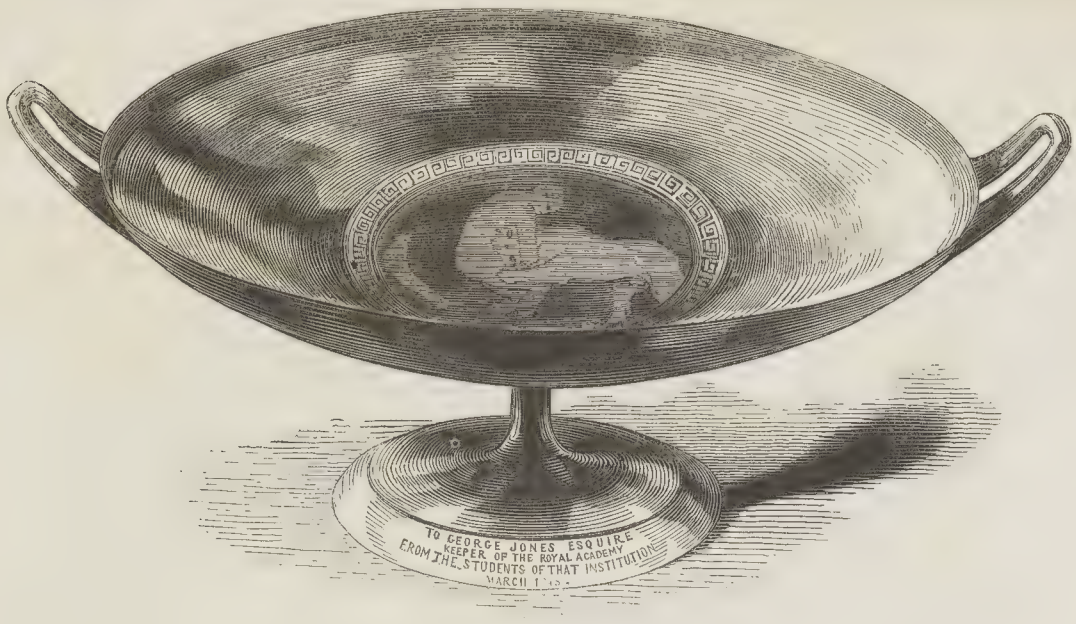
EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Augsburgh Gazette of the 25th March publishes a correspondence from the Polish frontier, in which it is stated that his Imperial Majesty will not visit Germany this year, but will proceed to the Trans-Caucasian provinces and take up his residence for some time in Tiflis.

Mr. O'Connell, it is said, may be expected in London early next week.

M. Noel de Quersonnières, the oldest man in France, died a few days ago at Neuilly, near Paris. He had nearly accomplished his 117th year.

A letter from the Havannah of the 5th Feb., gives an account of the following tragical event having taken place during the late Carnival. A negro got unperceived into a masked ball, and stabbed many persons present, of whom six have died. The man who committed this atrocity has been arrested and recognised by one of the persons whom he had wounded. It had become a subject of inquiry whether this was an isolated act of this individual assassin, or whether he belonged to a band who had determined to avenge the death of their fellows who were lately executed.



The total number of persons on board the ships United States and England, both of which, there is too much renson to fear, have been lost, with all on board, was 164—viz., in the former, 74; in the latter, 90.

We learn from Breslau, that a conspiracy against the state has been discovered in Silesia, and that several of the conspirators have been arrested. A Commission of Justice has been sent from Berlin to try the offenders.

It is said that the subscriptions to compensate Father Matthew for his heavy expenses while prosecuting the cause of teetotalism, have already exceeded £7000—a sum nearly sufficient to cover the rev. gentleman's liabilities.

The Moniteur Parisien states the number of French government steamers now afloat or building is 92. Of these, eight are frigates of from 450 to 650 horse-power, and 18 corvettes of from 220 to 320 horse power.

A letter from Athens of the 18th ult. states that the Russian Chargé d'Affaires in that city had received fresh dispatches from his Court. They confirm the declaration of the friendly disposition of Russia towards Greece and the present Ministry.

ETRUSCAN TAZZA, PRESENTED BY THE STUDENTS OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY TO GEORGE JONES, ESQ., R.A.

TESTIMONIAL TO THE KEEPER OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

On Saturday last, at the closing of the Royal Academy, preparatory to the opening of the annual exhibition in May, the students presented Mr. Jones, Keeper, with a testimonial of their esteem for his unremittingly kind and valuable services. The testimonial consisted of a particularly beautiful Tazza, in silver, the design of which we gladly copy into our columns.

Mr. Jones having expressed his willingness to receive the Vase in the Antique School, a large portion of the students assembled on that evening to witness the presentation; and on Mr. Jones entering the school, accompanied by Mr. Etty and Mr. Mulready, the acclamations of the students fully testified the popularity of these gentlemen in the institution of which they have so long been distinguished members.

Mr. Jones received the Vase from the hands of Mr. A. D. Cooper, senior student, and son of the academician; and in reply to a short but appropriate speech from that gentleman, addressed the school in a warm and clearly heartfelt manner, which must have been highly gratifying to the students.

The Tazza is of silver, very highly burnished, the ornamental devices being frosted: it is copied from a fine example in the British Museum; the diameter is 15 inches. The base bears the following inscription:—

TO GEORGE JONES, ESQ., R.A., KEEPER OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY, FROM THE STUDENTS OF THAT INSTITUTION.

The older students of the Royal Academy well remember when the late keeper, Mr. Hilton, received a similar mark of respect; and several who are now academicians must recollect the evening when Fuseli acknowledged a similarly actuated testimonial.

NORTHAMPTON GRAND MILITARY STEEPLE-CHASE.

The locality fixed for this spirited finale to the Northampton Meeting, on Thursday, the 27th ult., was two miles beyond Brixworth, about nine miles from Northampton; the manner in which the riders in the steeple-chase of last year were beset by the mob at the brook, being the principal reason for removing it to such a distance. The starting field (says a contemporary,) was a considerable eminence, opposite to Brixworth, divided from the eminence on which that renowned village is situated by a beautiful valley, speaking in a hunting or steeple chasing sense, through which flows the stream known as the Brixworth brook. On the crown of this eminence is a plantation called Cottisbrook Cow Pastures, one of a large series, representing the positions of the French and English armies at the battle of Waterloo, which were planted soon after that memorable event, the Cow Pastures, as we are told, corresponding with the situation of the right wing of the allied army at Hougomont. The starting field, which was also the winning field, was staked and roped nearly its whole length, a necessary precaution in every steeple chase, the want of which often causes great confusion, deprives the spectators from having any clear view of the finish, and has frequently prevented the best horse from winning the race.

After passing out of the starting field, the line turned slightly to the right, passed over several large fields of pasture, with moderate fences, till it met the Brixworth Brook. This contained a breadth of thirteen or fourteen feet of water, an obstacle which does not appear on paper as very formidable, by those accustomed to such matters, but must be admitted to be quite sufficient to thin a field of twenty horses, among which many, both horses and riders, were quite unaccustomed to the pace of steeple chasing. Here, accordingly, a terrible ducking and splashing occurred, and a correspondingly serious gap was made in the field, some falling back from opposite bank, some jumping into the water, others refusing, and the race was afterwards confined to the few who got successfully over. After passing through a couple of ploughed fields a turn was made to the left, and the rising ground over the turf was traversed till the road leading from Brixworth was met with, beyond which the horses came again into sight. Two more ploughed fields were here passed over, at the end of which was a mere double fence, and beyond that, separated by a large meadow, was the brook once more, higher up the stream, but of much smaller dimensions than where it was crossed the first time. At this point, the crowd, particularly the horsemen, was so great that the riders were completely buried in the dense mass, and it was with difficulty that they could be distinguished as they emerged from it. Indeed, the mass of cavalry which hung upon the sides and rear of the horses as they were running in nearly all the fields adjoining the starting one, was a serious drawback on the enjoyment of most of the spectators, and a great annoyance to the riders. Beyond the brook the line continued in the same direction over two or three grass fields; then, turning to the left, it entered the field below that from which the start took place, where a bend to the right brought it over the last fence—the first and last being the same—and thence, between the posts and rails, up a pretty smart ascent to the winning flags. The fences were about twenty in number, and the line three miles in length, which shows that the enclosures were large.

Our correspondent's sketch represents a scene in the run at Brixworth-lane, when the first horse fell, after getting over, and turned round on the fallow; the next, a fine black horse, got over, but threw his rider over his head. The next horse passed the staked hedge into the lane, but refused the bullfincher into the fallow. The two next horses cleared both fences in capital style.

WINDSOR STEEPLE CHASES.

This annual sporting event, which commenced on Wednesday, attracted, as upon all former occasions, an immense number of persons, not only from the neighbouring towns and villages within a circuit of twenty miles of Windsor, but several hundreds from the metropolis. The number of persons congregated in the winning and starting meadow, and the fields adjacent, could not have amounted to less than between 20,000 and 30,000.

THE NORTHAMPTON STEEPLE CHASE.

DOST MOHAMED.

Dost Mohamed Khan was the Chief of Cabool, who, for a variety of reasons, the full force of which is better known to the Indian Government than the public at large, was deposed by the interference of England, and Shah Soojah raised to power in his stead. It was to us the "direful spring of woes unnumbered"—the disasters of the Affghan Campaign are not yet forgotten. The Chief was deposed in 1839, in favour of a man of worthless and cruel character, weak and profligate. Dost Mohamed, on the contrary, had both energy and ability. After the fatal retreat of the British troops, our protége—the precious Shah Soojah—(according to Lady Sale) "Set his seal to a proclamation calling on all true Mussulmans to fight against the Feringhees." The deposition of the Dost was the cause of the rise of the Affghan population against us, and throughout the negotiations that preceded the retreat, and which were terminated by the assassination of the English Envoy, the great object of the natives, headed by Akbar Khan, was to get back the person of the Dost, who was in the power of the Indian Government. Lady Sale, in her journal, frequently refers to Dost Mohamed and generally with some degree of favour; he was certainly a superior man to his successor, and much more popular with his countrymen. Towards the close of her book, she says, "Once again in power here, I would place Akbar, Mohamed Shah, and Sultan Jan hors de combat; befriend those who befriended us, and let the Affghans have Dost Mohamed Khan back, if they like. He and his family are only an expense to us in India; we can restore them, and make friends with him.

Again: "As to the justice of dethroning Dost Mohamed, and setting up Shah Soojah, I have nothing to say regarding it; nor regarding our policy in attempting to keep possession of a country of uncivilised people so far from our own, whence all supplies of ammunition, money, &c. must be obtained. Let our Governors-General and Commanders-in-Chief look to that." When the Dost was deposed he was sent to Hindostan with his family; he was appointed a residence and a guard of honour; he was by no means made a close prisoner, as during his detention he frequently went hunting, to which sport he is much attached. It is also certain that he interfered as much as he could do at such a distance, to check the disorders that took place under Akbar Khan; he urged the latter to fight for the throne if there were any chance of regaining it, but not to ill use the prisoners, or the women and children. He has long since returned to his country, and attention has been again drawn to him by an attack made on him by some assassins, who, however, failed in their attempt on his life. The occurrence is given as part of the intelligence from Affghanistan in the last Indian Mail.

THE CEREMONY OF TAKING THE VEIL AT A CONVENT.—On Monday a young lady was invested with the holy habit and religious veil of a Sister of Mercy, at the Convent of Mercy, Bermondsey. The ceremony took place in the church of the Most Holy Trinity, which adjoins the convent. The sacred edifice was crowded with spectators of the higher classes of society, who appeared to take the deepest interest in the imposing proceedings. Miss Zimmer, the postulant, having communicated in the morning, first appeared in her secular dress at the ceremony. At noon, all the religious assembled, put on their cloaks, and lighted their candles. The following divines officiated:—the Right Rev. Dr. Griffiths, Revs. G. Foley, North, Butlar, Collingridge, Bowman, Cotter, Horrabin, Ringrove, Bamber, and O'Neale. The postulant took her place between the Superioress of the convent and an assistant, and on her knees asked the blessing of the former and her own religious name. At a given signal the choir sang the hymn Glorioso Virginum. The hymn finished, the celebrant Bishop repeated "Ora pro eâ, sancta Dei Genetrix." He then blessed a wax candle, and placed it on the altar, and having put incense into the thuribles and blessed it, he sprinkled the candle with holy water, incensed it, and presented it lighted to the postulant, saying—"Accipe, filia charissima, lumen corporale, in signum luminis interioris, ad repellendas omnes tenebras, ignorantiæ, vel erroris." The Bishop next preached a sermon suitable to the occasion from these words:—"Behold, we have left all things, and have followed Thee." The sermon ended, the Superioress and her assistant conducted the postulant to the grate of the altar, when, kneeling, she was interrogated as follows:—Celebrant: "My child, what do you demand?" Postulant: "The mercy of God and the holy habit of religion." Celebrant: "Is it of your own free will that you demand the holy habit of religion?" Postulant: "Yes, my Lord." After some further questions, and answers, and prayers, the parties arose, made a genuflexion, and retired, when the postulant put off her secular dress, and the religious habits having been blessed by the Bishop, she was clad in them, as well as in the blessed veil. She then became a novice, and at the conclusion of the initiatory rites the Bishop sprinkled her with holy water; the assistant directing her to rise, made with her a genuflexion to the Holy Sacrament, and conducted her to the Superioress, to whom she kneeled. The latter raising her embraced her. The novice then embraced the other religious, to whom she bowed before and after the embrace. The choir then sang the Psalm "Ecce quam bonum, et quam juncdum habitare fratres in unum." The psalm ended, the religious retired in the same order in which they entered.

THE SACRILEGE AT HASTINGS.—Three persons have been apprehended on suspicion of having committed the sacrilege and felony at St. Leonard's Church on the night of the 24th of March, as already noticed by us. Their names are Tindall, Swinard, and Hyland. They underwent an examination on Saturday, when the former prisoner was discharged, and the other two remanded till Monday, when they were examined in the Town-hall, and were fully committed to take their trial at the next assizes at Lewes. The prisoner Swinard intimated that he should like to speak to the magistrate in private. They accordingly retired into a private room, when he said that they thonght the lady was buried in her jewels, and that was the reason they broke into the church. They were in the church from 11 o'clock till nearly three, and an hour was occupied in breaking the vestry-room open. If they had known she had not been buried in her jewels, they would not have gone to the church.

SCENE FROM THE NEW BALLET, AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

We detailed the plot of this comic novelty in our Journal of last week. Our Illustration represents the wedding fête at the auberge: Robert and Bertrand are seated at the table on the left; the villagers are grouped about the scene—a pleasing rustic composition—and the artistes in the centre are Mdlle. Polin and M. Gasperini.

SCENE FROM THE BALLET OF ROBERT AND BERTRAND, AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

ANAIDE CASTELLAN.

Madame Anaide Castellan was born in the Lyonese, in the south of France. Like most persons who have afterwards attained great pre eminence in any particular branch of art, she exhibited the bent of her mind at a very early age, and showed remarkable dispositions for music. When but eight years old, she was placed by her parents under the tuition of the celebrated Madame Damoreau-Cinti, the finest vocaliser of her times; and under such a mistress, her musical capabilities rapidly developed themselves day by day. She afterwards became a pupil of the celebrated Bordogni, the most fashionable of all professors of lyrical art, and in 1837 obtained the prize of the Conservatoire, at Paris. In the autumn of 1838 (she was then 16 years of age) she made her début on the operatic stage at Varlse, in Italy. The remarkable compass and sweetness of voice, and the dramatic intelligence displayed by so young a singer, soon won for her golden opinions. She performed at Turin in the ensuing Carnival; in the spring, at the San Benedetto, at Venice. After visiting France for her private affairs, she again returned to Italy, and performed at the opening of the Teatro Nuovo, at Florence, a musical solemnity, which took place in the spring of the following year. In the autumn she sang at Rome, and in the ensuing Carnival came out at Milan. About this time occurred her marriage with Signor Castellan Giampetro, a tenor singer, and shortly after she took her departure with him for America. Our artiste remained for a short time at the Havannah, where she sung at a few private concerts. Mexico was the city next honoured with her presence, where, by a singular coincidence, Fornasari, the celebrated basso, appeared with her. In the splendid capital of the New World, Madame Castellan appeared as another European conqueror, and one to whom the descendants of Montezuma's valiant Cacaques yielded unresistingly. Here—where she was joined to one of the brightest stars of her Majesty's Theatre, Fornasari—she remained two years, the éclat of a style of beauty so unusual in that climate, and the prestige of her graceful and winning manners enhancing the universal admiration which her genius excited.

Madame Castellan then proceeded to New Orleans, where her success was brilliant; but these triumphs, in cities unused to the higher degree of refinement in art, might have been attributed perhaps as much to their rare opportunities of criticism on musical genius, as to her superior merit; it was, therefore, left to the good citizens of New York to warn us of the rare degree of excellence that had been wasting its sweetness in the wilds of America. The worthy Quakers, on ordinary occasions so matter-of-fact and calculating, and so averse to recreation, are, nevertheless, occasionally susceptible of a degree of enthusiasm approaching to frenzy, and which strangely disorders their habitual composure. Of this many a fair denizen of the Old World has had experience; but all former triumphs were thrown into the shade by the excitement produced by the arrival of Madame Castellan. The first concert given by her at the Apollo Hall was filled by the most fashionable audience. The other performers, amongst whom were Signor Paggi, a famous and all-admired performer on the oboe, and Signor Giampetro, were totally eclipsed in the intense interest excited by the thrilling notes of the fair Frenchwoman. She took her audience by storm, and the next night of her performance, given in another concert room—the largest of the kind in New York—the immense building was crowded to the roof. Not only all the dilettanti New York can boast, but sober men of business and learned divines might be seen partaking in the general furore. From 2500 to 3000 persons were said to be present, and we learn from the journals of New York of that period that the name of Malibran, the queen of song, was whispered on every side. This speaks sufficiently for her success.

On leaving New York, Madame Castellan proceeded to Philadelphia, and afterwards to Saratoga; on her way to the latter town, when passing through Ballston, the beaux of that celebrated spa were drawn up in a body to meet her, and her appearance was welcomed by showers of bouquets and flowers. From Saratoga she proceeded to Quebec, and thence to Montreal. Her concert at this place was, as usual, crowded, and her performance the subject of tumultuous applause; the editor of a journal in this city, inflamed with jealousy on behalf of a lady named Mrs. Gibbs, who had had the misfortune to perform the same night, made a violent attack upon our artiste. The consequence was a general explosion of indignation upon the unfortunate editor, not only from the journalists, but from all the inhabitants of Montreal, whose enthusiasm was only increased by their wrath. Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore were successively the scenes of her triumphs. About the 20th of December, 1843, Madame Castellan returned to New York, where she appeared in conjunction with her former instructress, Madame Damoreau-Cinti. These two "stars," as may be imagined, electrified the American audience they were soon destined, to lose the object of so much homage.

MADAME CASTELLAN.

Madame Castellan returned shortly after to France, where she sustained the reputation that had preceded her across the Atlantic. She sang successively at numerous concerts, both public and private, and enjoyed high favour in the musical world. In the spring of 1844 she was induced to come over to England; she appeared at the Philharmonic Society, as our readers will remember. She had the honour of singing before her Majesty, and at the Ancient Concerts. Her reputation as a concert-singer was here established without a doubt; but the dramatic genius which this artist possesses in so high a degree, had hitherto been kept in the back ground.

Baron de Brunow, the lynx-eyed representative of the great Czar, a nobleman who has a perception and a tact for art, equal to that which has made him the most celebrated diplomatist of the age, soon discerned the latent dramatic genius of the fair songstress, and engaged her for St. Petersburgh, at the very moment when Mr. Lumley, an equally wary judge, had fixed on her as a future star of her Majesty's Theatre. At St. Petersburgh, plaudits and flowers, gold and diamonds, were showered on the gifted Frenchwoman; but it was only on her appearance in London that she was considered and stamped as a prima donna of the highest pretensions.

Madame Castellan is rather under than above the middle height; her features are small; she has expressive eyes, dark hair, and an extremely fair and delicate complexion; her motions and attitudes are graceful, and her manner singularly natural and unaffected. Her voice has an immense range, her every motion is dramatic, and her notes are imbued with a feeling and energy that transport the hearer's thoughts far above the limits of what the mere vocal register can effect.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

Longchamps has passed, but the triumphs of La Mode, to which this day has for so long a time been dedicated, were retarded by the unpropitious weather. Few of the élégantes who ventured forth that day dared to display all the resources of the costume which had for so long a time beforehand occupied her thoughts; but since then, the weather has become brighter and warmer, and the graceful novelties intended for exhibition then have come forth, one by one, like butterflies in the sunshine.

Nothing can be more graceful than the present promenade costume. The rich and soft cashmere shawl, so peculiarly fitted to the demi-saison alone gives a peculiar character of elegance and distinction to the toilette. The variability of the weather at present renders this the only style of covering which can with safety be adopted. Scarfs of Indian cashmere are much worn; many of them might be seen at Longchamps, as also those in one colour and wadded, which are much in vogue for young ladies; whilst, however, the dresses and shawls worn on this occasion were adapted to the inclemency of the season, the fair wearers compensated for this hard necessity in adopting bonnets of the lightest colours and materials. Several crape bonnets even might be seen trimmed with flowers or ribbon. Fancy straws were universally worn, trimmed with flowers, strawberry or chesnut leaves, or simply with ribbon, usually in five gradual shades of colour. Chip bonnets now begin to be worn, and yield to none in their simple elegance. One of these bonnets, trimmed with five shades of straw-coloured ribbon, and ornamented by a bird of Paradise, or a fancy straw bonnet, with insertions of black lace, trimmed with black velvet and dark auriculas, is most appropriate for the carriage drive or the morning visit. Veils and voilettes are universally worn in white tulle or coloured crêpe lisse.

The spirit of invention and contrivance is extended even into the department of fashion, and machinery is now applied to bonnets. One is now made in Paris, which, by the aid of an elastic spring, can be packed up in the smallest possible compass, and when taken out resumes its original form and fraicheur.

The French, the most impressionable of all nations, show the "ruling passion" of the moment even in their dress. The Coiffure à la Victime, in the Reign of Terror, may still be remembered. A very different feeling now reigns uppermost with the Parisians. It is their admiration for Eugene Sue, whose romances, so full of exaggeration and false sentiments, produce from mere morbid love of excitement such a golden harvest to himself and the journals for whom he writes. Mdlle. de Cardoville, the red-haired heroine of the "Juif Errant," gives her name to every possible form of costume, while the prevailing colour, roux, is in compliment to her styled Couleur Cardoville. The mantelets to which this title has been given are in the shape of a scarf, but drawn in on the fore-arm and shoulders, and trimmed with fringe or lace. Silks, shaded, shot, and striped, are still in vogue for the morning costume. Many in dark colours may still be seen. They are made high and quite tight, the long sleeves open a little way up from the wrist, and sous-manches of lace. Narrow velvet Brandebourgs on the body and front of the dress, confined by a button at each side, or rows of fringe crossing over the front of the dress from the top to the bottom, are much worn as trimmings. The evening costume for young ladies is most frequently in white; the fashion of light tarlatane dresses, with double skirts, continues, and will continue to prevail; nothing can be so graceful or so becoming to every figure and complexion. The principal change in the form of these dresses is the quantity of ribbon employed in trimming; the tunics of the dress are always bordered by five or six rows of narrow ribbon, and the berthes ornamented in the same manner; sometimes one row only of broad ribbon is employed. Flowers are much worn; and here we must censure the mixture of flowers and jewels in profusion, which now occasionally adorn the dress and coiffure of a first-rate élégante, and have a heavy and gaudy effect. A far prettier trimming for a ball dress is a garland of green leaves. These are much worn also on the hair. Touffes of roses at each side of the head, connected by a narrow wreath of green leaves, are much worn. A charming costume de bal is composed of a tarlatane or muslin dress, the skirt edged by a broad ribbon, the body and sleeves rather full. Over this is a dress of light coloured poult de soie; the skirt descends half way below the knees; it is open at each side, up the front of the corsage, and at the sleeves, the bows of ribbon connecting each opening, and the white dress appearing beneath. The effect of this toilette is peculiarly elegant. Evening dresses are often made with two skirts, the under one being trimmed with bouffans of the same material. Toques and Petits Bords are much worn, but lappets of lace enjoy surpassing vogue, and are trimmed with tufts of roses.

THE SPRING FASHIONS.

(Abridged from "Berger's Ladies' Gazette of Fashion.")

The spring fashions have already appeared, and are of unusual beauty and elegance. We never recollect such a briliant display of novelties of every description as our present number contains (says the "Ladies' Gazette of Fashion"); indeed, many of the most beautiful and striking novelties have been obtained from exclusive sources, and cannot, therefore, appear in any other work. But to our notes, commencing with chapeaux and capotes, which still continue small, the latter are made close, the former moderately open. The capote form retains its vogue for the promenade. The favourite materials are satins of white, light green, blue, and oiseau, Italian, rice and fancy straws, and poult de soie, both plain and shot. We have seen some very pretty capotes of lilac, poult de soie shot with white, and trimmed with two tufts of heliotropes, divided by a band of ribbon, which descends to form the brides. The same style of trimming is adopted for white crape capotes, the flowers, Parma violets, the ribbon shaded white and violet. Satin capotes are trimmed with a veil of point de Angleterre, placed under the brim, and descending en violette on each side. Rice and fancy straw chapeaux are made very small shapes, rounded on the cheeks, and standing out from the nape of the neck. They are trimmed with plaited ribbons of three different shades of the same colour, terminated by knots formed of small coques put close together. Flowers will be in vogue for rice straw and poult de soie chapeaux, also feathers. Straw and silk will be most in favour for the promenade. Light green, lilac, and pink, will be the most fashionable colours.

FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

Walking Dresses will principally be made of pekins, poult de soie, gros de

Naples, and plain, shot and figured taffetas. Plain silks will be more in vogue than they have been for some seasons. The figured silks, particularly the pekins, are all of new patterns, and are very pretty. Muslin will also be much in vogue, and will be superbly embroidered. A singular alteration has taken place in the forms of all robes made of rich materials. They are gored in such a manner as to sit close round the waist without any fulness, increasing in width as they descend, so that they are excessively wide at the bottom. If the skirt is of great width, it may be cut bias as cardinals usually are.

SCARFS, MANTELETS, &c., will again be in vogue. We have seen several of Cashmere and Barege, in new patterns, and also of Muslin, beautifully embroidered, trimmed with lace, and lined with silk. Also several mantelets of poult de soie of light colours, principally green, or green and white shot; some are bordered with a new fancy trimming, passementerie zephir; others with lace.

COLOURS.—The new Spring colours will be emerald, pea, and apple-green; several light shades of blue, cherry colour, and some shades of pink, red, and grey, lilac, drab, oiseau, and some new shades of yellow and fawn colour.

A GAME OF CHESS BY TELEGRAPH.

A novel and extremely interesting proof of the rapidity and fidelity with which intelligence may be communicated through the agency of the Electric Telegraph is about to be shown. At the suggestion of Mr. Staunton, the gentleman who, it will be remembered, obtained a signal victory at Paris over the French chess champion, a year or two ago, a game of chess will be played next week between two parties nearly one hundred miles asunder, at no more perceptible expense of time than would be required if they sat at the same table.

On this occasion Mr. Staunton will take his place at one of the termini of the South Western Railway, and Mr. Walker, the well-known writer on chess, at the other, and they will thus play a game together—their only media of communication being the wires of the Electric Telegraph. Every facility for this entertaining and remarkable experiment has been kindly afforded by Professor Wheatstone, the patentee of the Telegraph; and it is calculated that the game, which will commence at eleven in the forenoon, will be finished in about three hours.

THE EXECUTION OF TAWELL.—In the greater part of our impression last week, we gave full particulars of the execution of Tawell, which we received by express from our own reporter. It may be as well to state, however, for the information of those readers who received early copies, that the culprit was executed at Aylesbury yesterday (Friday) week. Previously to his execution he confessed his guilt, and also that he had made an attempt upon the life of Sarah Hart in September last.

A case of almost unheard of barbarity was brought before the last Court of Assizes for the Ardèche, (France). A woman was tried and convicted of having murdered four new-born infants intrusted to her at different times to carry to the Foundling Hospital, for each of which she received fifteen francs to remunerate her for loss of time and expenses. She denied her guilt, but the remains of the poor babes were all found, part buried in the fields and part left on the ground to become devoured by birds and beasts of prey. She was condemned to hard labour for life.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—The arrivals of English wheat up to our market having been somewhat extensive during the present week, and the show of samples in consequence large, the demand for that article has ruled extremely dull, at a decline of quite 1s per quarter, without a clearance being effected on either market day. Comparatively little fine foreign wheat has been on offer, yet the transactions in it have been trifling, at late rates. In bonded corn, so little doing that the quotations have ruled almost nominal. Of barley and malt the arrivals have been small. The best qualities have supported previous figures, but other kinds have had a downward tendency. The large supply of Irish oats has caused that description of grain to decline 1s per quarter. Beans, peas, and flour, as last advised.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 52s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s, potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 43s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to —, per barrel.

Seed Market.—Notwithstanding the present advanced period of the year, very little business is doing in seeds, the quotations of which rule about stationary. The imports of foreign clover seed, and tares, are large.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa —s to —s. Hempseed, 35s to 38s, per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s, per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 14s; white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 6s to 7s 6d, per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £24 to £26, per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £13 to £13 5s. per 1000: Rapeseed cakes £6 15s to £7, per ton. Canary, 42s to 48s, per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 45s 10d; barley, 32s 4d; oats, 21s 5d; rye, 30s 0d; beans, 34s 10d; peas, 34s 8d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 45s 3d; barley, 32s 3d; oats, 21s 6d; rye, 30s 9d; beans, 34s 9d; peas, 35s 4d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 6s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 8s 6d; peas, 7s 6d.

Teas.—In the private contract market very little business has been doing, and prices have been with difficulty supported. On Tuesday, 10,536 packages were offered at auction; but only 1450, including 900 packages of souchong, found buyers.

Sugar.—The imports of sugar, from all quarters, continue on a most extensive scale. Dealers are therefore, purchased with caution; yet fine colory parcels have been held firmly, at full prices.

Coffee.—Only a limited business has been doing in all descriptions of coffee this week, yet prices may be considered about stationary.

Oils.—Linseed oil is in fair request, at 25s to 25s 6d. Most other kinds of oil move off slowly, at late rates.

Provisions.—Some very large quantities of Irish butter have come to hand this week, yet a fair business is doing in it, at full prices. Foreign butter is heavy, at a decline of 1s per cwt. The best qualities of bacon are in good request. In other kinds we have but few sales to report. The contracts for forward delivery are numerous at 42s to 46s per cwt. Most other kinds of provisions are in sluggish request, at last week's quotations.

Tallow.—This market still continues much depressed, both as respects price and demand. It appears quite evident that prices must further recede. Those for the autumn are 38s 6d to 38s 9d. Town tallow, 38s to 39s 6d, net cash.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful do, £4 12s to £5 4s; fine upland do, £5 5s to £5 10s; clover hay, £4 10 to £6; oat straw, £1 18s to £2; wheat straw, £2 to £2 3s per load.

Hops.—The best parcels of hops are in fair request, at full prices; but all other kinds are a dull inquiry.

Wool.—Several arrivals having taken place within the last few days from our Australian colonies, public sales may be shortly expected. In the private contract market, only a moderate business is doing, at late rates.

Potatoes.—The best qualities of potatoes are in fair request, at 60s to 80s per ton; but all other kinds are a mere drug.

Smithfield.—Each kind of prime stock has commanded a steady sale, at fully previous figures. In other qualities, very little is doing. Beef, from 2s 6d to 4s; mutton, 2s 8d to 4s 4d; lamb, 4s 10d to 5s 10d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; and pork, 2s 10d to 4s 2d per 8lbs, to sink the offals.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—A fair average amount of business is doing in these markets, and prices are generally supported. Beef, from 2s 4d to 3s 4d; mutton, 2s 6d to 3s 8d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 8d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 8d; and pork, 2s 8d to 4s 2d per 8lbs, by the carcase.

ROBT. HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market still continues flat from the combined operation of the late American news, and extensive speculative sales for the fall. Prices on Monday quoted for Consols, 99½ to ⅝, but some large operations on Tuesday caused a decline of about one quarter per cent. A slight improvement was perceptible as the week advanced, but the last price quotes only 99⅝, buyers for money, and sellers for account. Exchequer Bills on Wednesday advanced 62 to 64, and have further improved, closing at 64 to 65. A large purchase by a leading broker gave this impetus to the market, which is supported by a slight reaction in the value of money. Annuities for Terms close at 11⅞. Bank Stock for account, 215. Canada Guaranteed Debentures, 111⅜.

Monday was settling day in the Foreign Market, but the account was so small from the trifling variations in quotations, that no difficulty was experienced in adjusting differences. Columbian continues on the advance, considerable speculation arising from the fact, that the Committee are in possession of terms for the arrangement of the debt. On Tuesday it quoted 15½ to ⅝, and again advanced on Wednesday to 16. This price has, however, been barely maintained, the closing quotation being 15⅝. Spanish is not quite so good as at the commencement of the week. The Active Stock closing at 29½ to ⅝; Three Per Cents, 40¼. The endeavour to create an improved market for the Passives, seems likely to fail, its price having receded to 6⅜; Portuguese is firm at 66; Dutch Two and a Half per Cents., 63⅜; Four per Cent. Certificates, 97½ to ½; Ex Dividend (which is now in course of payment) Mexican, 35¾; Deferred, 16⅜.

The settlement in the Railway Market passed off quietly, the last account having been comparatively small. The market since has become very buoyant, and all descriptions of shares in new lines have been on the advance. Caledonian, Scottish, Midlands, Dublin and Galway, and Direct Northern, have improved considerably. London and York has not partaken of the rise to the same extent. Rugbys are on the advance, and Blackwalls have advanced to 8. The Coventry, Nuneaton, and Bedworth line, was quoted on Monday for the first time, and now its price is 5½. The closing quotations are Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush, 2; Birmingham and Gloucester, 138; Bristol and Exeter, 84; Caledonian, 13⅜; Churnet Valley, 7⅜: Coventry and Leicester, 2⅜; Cornwall, 5⅜; Direct Northern, 5⅜; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 10½; Dublin and Galway, 5⅜; Eastern Counties, 21⅜; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 62; Ely and Bedford, 1⅜; Great North of England, 195; Great Western, 183: Guilford, Farnham, and Portsmouth, 5½; Harwich, 2½; Lancaster and Carlisle, 40½; Birmingham Stock, 236; Brighton, 65⅛; Lynn and Ely, 7⅜; Manchester and Leeds, 148; Midland, 117; Newark and Sheffield, 7⅜; North British, 18⅜; Rugby, Worcester, and Tring, 4⅜; Scottish Midlands, 4⅜; Shrewsbury, &c., 4⅝; South Devon, 20⅜; South Wales, 6⅛; Trent Valley, 17½; York and North Midland, 105; Boulogne and Amiens, 12⅜; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 3; Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Cette, 2⅜; Great Northern of France, 6⅜; Lyons and Avignon, 3½; Paris and Lyons (Ganneron's), 2⅜; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's), 3¼; Paris and Lyons, 5⅜; Rouen and Havre, 31⅛; North of Spain, 2¾; Tours and Nantes, 3⅜.

The object of this Expedition is the promotion of Science, the acquirement of knowledge generally, or the gratification which results to enlightened and enquiring minds from distant travel. Respectable Passengers only, and such as are not afflicted with disease, will be received on board. The Ship will not in any way be used for trading purposes, and will be fitted up in the most convenient and comfortable manner for the accommodation of the passengers, with one large Saloon, two apartments for Study, and State Rooms for Single Beds. The Voyage will require about two years, and the Passage Money is fixed at Two Hundred and Seventy Pounds (£270), including Provisions and Wine at Sea and in Port. The Ship will carry an experienced Medical Man. For further particulars apply to Messrs. E. SIEVEKING and SON, 12, Size-lane, City, or to ROBERT M. SLOMAN, in Hamburg.

TO THE LADIES.—The high and universal celebrity which ROWLAND'S KALYDOR continues to maintain, as an active, yet mild and soothing extirpator of all impurities of the skin, is, during the present period, most pleasingly evinced. This preparation, eminently balsamic, restorative, and invigorating, is equally celebrated for safety in application, as for unfailing efficacy in removing all impurities and discolorations; and imparting a healthy freshness and transparency to the Skin and Complexion. Its universally great demand excites the cupidity of unprincipled shopkeepers, who give the title of "Genuine" Kalydor to compounds of their own manufacture, of the most deleterious character, containing mineral astringents utterly ruinous to the Complexion, and, by their repellent action, endangering health. It is therefore imperative on purchasers to see that the words "Rowland's Kalydor" are on the wrapper. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. Sold by the Proprietors, A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.  All others are Fraudulent Imitations!!!

ROWLAND'S UNIQUE PREPARATIONS (under the patronage of the several Sovereigns and Courts of Europe, and universally preferred).—ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the Growth, Preservation, and for Beautifying the Human Hair. Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s. per bottle. ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for improving and beautifying the Skin and Complexion. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, for the Teeth and Gums. Price 2s. 9d. per box, duty included.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION.—Unprincipled individuals, for the sake of gaining a trifle more profit, vend the most spurious compounds under the same names (some under the implied sanction of Royalty); they copy the labels, bills, advertisements, and testimonials (substituting fictitious for the real names and addresses) of the original preparations, and use either a fictitious name, or the word "Genuine," in the place of "Rowland's." It is, therefore, highly necessary to see that the word "Rowland's" is on the Wrapper of each article.— All others are Fraudulent Imitations!!! The Genuine Preparations are sold by the Proprietors as above, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

GREAT NOVELTY IN PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

On the First of May next,

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE

WILL BE ISSUED AS

A BOUND VOLUME,

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

The issuing of a Magazine in bound volumes monthly, will remove the great objection to periodical publications when sent out in paper covers. They are always unsightly, are frequently lost by being scattered about, and give an appearance of carelessness and neglect to the drawing-room, or library table, where neatness and elegance of arrangement are so desirable.

The plan on which the New Series of the ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE will be issued will obviate these objections; it will furnish every month, to the book-case or library,

A HANDSOME BOUND VOLUME,

(PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE)

in small 8vo., which will be enriched with the best ARTISTIC and LITERARY talent of the day.

Part 3—No. 9, The Ivy Green; No. 10, I love the Night; No. 11, Woodman, spare that Tree; No. 12, La Favourite Valse au Deux Temps, by F. Lancelott; No. 13, the Redowa and Polish Polkas; No. 14, Les Roses Valse, by Strauss.

As all the above Nos., only 3d. each, are equal, if not superior, to the more expensive publications, the Musical World are invited to inspect this work, that they may appreciate its merits.

Published by W. STRANGE, 21, Paternoster-row, and sold by all Booksellers.

REMOVAL.—M. JULLIEN begs most respectfully to acquaint the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, who, since his residence in this country, have condescended to honour him with their kind patronage, that finding his present small premises by far too limited to carry on the largely increased business as music publisher which is now intrusted to him, with that punctuality and despatch necessary in all commercial transactions, he will, on the 10th of April next, remove his Establishment from No. 3, Maddox-street, to No. 214, Regent-street.

Having more than eighteen months since foreseen the absolute necessity of this removal, M. Jullien has employed that interval in making such arrangements as he believes are most calculated to insure the completeness of an establishment dedicated to the publication of that particular branch of music to which M. Jullien has devoted himself.

"La Musique Dansante" is the branch which M. Jullien undertakes, and all that directly or indirectly appertains to it will, in fact, form what by the Parisians is very aptly designated the specialité of his new establishment.

This specialite will include the importing, printing, and publishing of the newest musique de danse of this metropolis as well as of every city in Europe; that published abroad being issued to the London fashionable world as speedily after its first appearance on the Continent as the greatly improved and rapid means of communication will allow. With a view to this much desired object, M. Jullien has entered into contracts with the principal musical publishers of Vienna, Warsaw, Petersburg, Frankfort, Madrid, Naples, Berlin, and Paris, who have undertaken to forward all their newest publications to M. Jullien, the moment of their appearance, and from the innumerable compositions which, by these means, will necessarily pass through his hands, he will have the opportunity of selecting the best, and with his stamp of recommendation (particularly as to their fitness for dancing) will issue them to his patrons, who will thus be spared the expense and annoyance of being obliged to purchase a mass of music (a large portion of which is often found on trial to be utterly useless), in order to select some few additions to their musical libraries.

Beyond the importing of foreign compositions, M. Jullien hopes to be the means of bringing forward many of the works of the very numerous native composers of musique dansante, who, in consequence of the estimation now accorded to that kind of composition, have of late years devoted their talents to its study.

M. Jullien therefore begs most respectfully to solicit a continuance of that kind patronage already so liberally bestowed on him, trusting that the increased facilities of his new establishment, added to his own renewed exertions, may enable him still to merit the confidence of all who honour him with their support.

M. Jullien's office for balls and soirees is also removed to No. 214, Regent-street.—No. 3, Maddox-street, March, 1845.

CHARLES VYSE, 30, Ludgate-street, Manufacturer and Importer of FANCY STRAW BONNETS, and FRENCH MILLINERY to the Royal Family, informs the Nobility, Gentry, and Public, he has received from the first Magasin of Paris, the fashions for the month of April. C. V. has much pleasure in announcing to Families, that the extended abolition of the Customs' Dues will permit him to reduce materially the above articles of Female Toilette.

Gentlemen wishing to select for Ladies, are respectfully informed that the Establishment has a FIXED PRICE; and any purchase not approved is immediately exchanged.—30, Ludgate-street.

DRESS COIFFURES.—As it has become necessary, in accordance with the prevailing mode, to dispose the Hair in effective masses, or in conspicuous mounds, a certain body of hair is essential to afford the coiffeur the means of proudemy the arrangement. Thinness or weakness of the Hair in, in these cases, a complete obstacle, and it is only to be effectually remedied by the application of OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA, which prevents the Hair from turning grey, and the first application causes it to curl beautifully, frees it from scurf, and stops it from falling off and a few bottles restore it again. Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle No other prices are genuine. Oldridge's Balm, 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand.

NELSON'S MEDAL, DISTRIBUTED AT GREENWICH HOSPITAL, ON WEDNESDAY.

PRESENTATION OF "NELSON MEDALS."

It will be in the recollection of our readers that a subscription was raised for the purpose of giving a dinner to those men who fought under the immortal Nelson, at Copenhagen, Cape St. Vincent, Teneriffe, the Nile, and Trafalgar, at the opening of the Nelson Monument, in Trafalgar-square. The committee, however, at the earnest solicitations of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, decided that it would be far the better to abandon the original idea, and, in lieu thereof, present to each of the sharers of Nelson's great victories a Medal, together with a pecuniary gratuity. This interesting ceremony took place on Wednesday, in the Painted-hall, Greenwich Hospital; and next week, we shall present to our readers a spirited representation of the impressive scene. At present, we annex a representation of the Medal received by each man. It bears the bust of Nelson, surrounded by his immortal signal, "England expects every man will do his duty;" and on the reverse an exact representation of the Nelson Pillar, with the inscription, "To Commemorate the Opening of the Nelson Testimonial, Trafalgar-square, 31st October, 1844." In addition to the Medal, each man received the sum of ten shillings. At half-past twelve, the boys marched off to their dinner; and the ceremony of distributing the medals, &c., terminated at about three o'clock.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

The first of the series for the season took place on Monday evening last. The following was the programme:—

PART I.

Sinfonia in D, No. 7	Haydn
Song—"The Quail," Miss Rainforth	Beethoven
Concerto—Pianoforte, Madame Oury, op. 37	Beethoven
Rec.—"Ecco il punto," and Aria, "Non piu di fiori;" Madame Albertazzi; Corno di Bassetto Obligato, Mr. Williams	Mozart
Overture—Les Deux Journées	Cherubini

PART II.

Sinfonia in C minor	Beethoven
Aria—"Allentre ti Lascio," Signor F. Lablache	Mozart
Concerto—Violin, in D, M. Sainton	Spohr
Terzetto—"Soave conforto," Miss Rainforth, Madame Albertazzi, and Signor F. Lablache	Rossini
Overture—La Chasse de Jeune Henri	Mehul

Leader, Mr. Loder. Conductor, Sir H. Bishop.

From this selection it is quite clear that a desire to produce novelty did not in the slightest degree influence the directors when they were drawing up the bill of fare, which does not contain an item that has not been done to death these twenty years. Moreover, never has there been a more tame or ineffective performance. The Philharmonic Association is one, strictly speaking, for the performance and encouragement of Innstrumental Music, although we have heard de tems en tems some of the first-rate vocal artistes of the day at its concerts: still, it is essentially, as we have already said, an Instrumental Society, and as such we will consider it on the present occasion, observing merely of the singing that it was little beyond mediocrity. Whether it was the vivid recollection of Mendelssohn's poetical enthusiasm last season, with which he infused a soul into the orchestra which it never possessed before, or that wielding the baton in direction of a mighty symphony is not exactly in Sir Henry Bishop's line, we will not presume to say—but, certes, never did we hear the symphonies and overtures go more languidly. Haydn, perhaps, may bear to be given with stately dignity and grace—but the impetuous Beethoven must not be reined in too tightly—the last movement of the glorious C minor symphony was quite spoiled. We could not but pity poor Loder—accustomed as he has been to serrer, or press the time, all his efforts proved ineffectual, for the Conductor hung upon his energies like a dead weight. We never heard the symphony with less relish. It is to be hoped that the Directors will make some better provision for the next concert, and not keep back all the good things to the close of the series. We must not omit to observe that Mdme. Oury played Beethoven's Concerto in the most admirable manner—her touch is at once brilliant and expressive. M. Sainton, in Spohr's Concerto for the Violin, appeared to be much improved since last we heard him: his style is more delicate and chaste, and his beautiful tone, if possible, improved.

The room was very fully attended.

ANCIENT CONCERTS.

The first concert of the season took place on Wednesday evening, under the direction of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge. The following was the programme:—

PART I.

Overture (Occasional)	Handel
Selection from a Te Deum	Sarti
Rec.—My Cup is full (Joshua)	Handel
Aria—Shall I in Mamre's (Joshua)	Handel
Chorus—"For unto us" (Messiah)	Handel
Rec.—"E la madre fra tanto" (Passione)	Paisiello
Aria—"Potea quil pianto" (Passione)	Paisiello
Motette (MS.) "Si iniquitatis"	Cherubini
Rec.—"O let eternal honours" (Judas Maccabeus)	Handel
Air—"From mighty kings" (Judas Maccabeus)	Handel
Graduale—"Hora, dies, et vita fugit"	Seyfreid
Rec.—"Relieve thy Champion" (Samson)	Handel
Air—"Return, O God of Hosts" (Samson)	Handel
Quartet—"How bless'd the Dead"	Weigl
Chorus—"Hallelujah" (Messiah)	Handel

PART II.

Grand March from "Alcides"	Handel
Quartet and Chorus.—"Show me Thy ways"	Caldara
Rec.—"Eccomi sola"	Guglielmi
Preghiera—"Gran Dio"	Guglielmi
Glee—"Discord, dire Sister"	Webbe
Rec.—"Ingrata!"	S. Mayer
Duetto—"Per pieta"	S. Mayer
Madrigal (Full choir)—"Come away, sweet love" (1604)	T. Greaves
Aria—"Parto! ma tu, ben mio"	Mozart
Chorus—"Domina, ad adjuvandum"	G. Porta

Here was a bill of fare made up by a liberal hand; but even "sweetness" may be too "long drawn out;" the programme contained enough for four concerts. As usual the mighty Handel predominated, and stood like a pyramid amongst the musical sands about him. With the exception of a quaint composition by Seyfreid, called a Graduale, and Greaves' madrigal, there was no novelty. The next concert will be under the direction of Prince Albert, on which occasion the Ancient Concerts will be rendered more Antient still by the revival of long-forgotten music to be performed on instruments that have for centuries sunk into desuetude. The viol de gamba, viol d amour, spinnet, harpsichord, dulcimer, rota, or hurdy-gurdy, are all engaged for the occasion.

HER MAJESTY'S RIVER STEAMER, "FAIRY."

This new iron steamer, intended as a yacht for the use of her Majesty, has been built by Messrs. Ditchburn and Mare, of Blackwall; and the engines have been constructed by Messrs. Penn and Co., of Greenwich On Monday and Tuesday she proceeded down the river to test her speed, and we believe she has far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of her constructors. It is stated that after 12 trials at the mile laid down by Government in Long-reach, her speed was found to be 15 miles per hour, which is the greatest rate a vessel has ever been propelled by a screw. Such a result is highly creditable to the parties abovenamed, and says a good deal in favour of a propelling power, which up to this time has not been much adopted.

HER MAJESTY'S RIVER STEAMER, "FAIRY."

NEW MUSIC.

I LOVE THE CHURCH WHEREIN MY FATHER KNELT. A Ballad for the youth of England. The words by G. F. MANDLEY; the music by W. PIGOT. Burns, Portman-street

A graceful, flowing, and expressive melody—tastefully and artistically harmonized in perfect accordamce with the words, which are highly expressive of the devotional tenderness of the subject. The title-page of this interesting song reminds us of one taken from an old missal. The landscape, with distant view of church at top, with nearer one at bottom, the little interiors on the left side, and the illuminated and ornamented frame, altogether constitute it one of the most beautiful things we have seen.

MADRE MIA! Canzonetta, Written and Composed by Mrs. COWDEN CLAEKE. J. Alfred Novello.

The words are anything but Tuscan poetry—they are puerile indeed. The music is graceful, but drags somewhat unrhythmically in the second part of the air.

THE DAUGHTER'S GIFT. Ballad. Words by T. OLIPHANT, Esq. Music by JULES BENEDICT. Leader and Cock, New Bond-street.

A very elegant and sentimental ballad—a graceful flowing melody, harmonised with all that felicitous combination of science and taste for which Benedict is so distinguished. The harmony at bar 2, third stave, third page, where the subject is about to be resumed, is delicious, and the similar passage in the second verse is treated with dexterous variety. We recommend it to all lovers of pure music.

HANDEL'S SONGS, Newly Arranged, expressly for Amateurs and Private Performance. By WILLIAM HUTCHINS CALLCOTT. Leader and Cock.

"In presenting a new edition of the favourite songs by the above celebrated composer," the publishers state, that "they feel some explanation is necessary for adding to the many excellent editions already in existence. They, therefore, beg to state, that from numerous inquiries for the songs in lower keys than those in which they were originally written, they have been induced to publish the present edition, which, it is hoped, will be found more generally useful. It may also be observed, that the pitch of the tuning fork in the lifetime of Handel being more than a semitone lower than that of the present day, many of these editions are, therefore, nearer the composer's own key than any other yet presented to the public."

This may be all very well, but we are decided enemies to transposition. Au reste, the texts and accompaniments are very creditable to Mr. Callcott's taste and musical accuracy, and, no doubt, will afford many a circumscribed voice an opportunity of becoming familiar with many a gem which has been hitherto out of their reach.

ERE I WAS SENT TO SEA. Song. Written by BENJAMIN BANKS. The Music composed by J. L. HATTON. Leader and Cork.

We confess we have but an imperfect sympathy with this kind of sea song. There is a mawkishness even about Dibdin's best which would not suit the present day, and this production follows in their wake.

I REMEMBER THY VOICE. Ballad. Written by the Hon. Mrs. NORTON. Composed by JOHN BLOCKLEY. Leader and Cock.

As mooth flowing melody, but not very remarkable for anything.

FRIENDS AT SEA. Duet. Written by HARCOURT RUSSELL, Esq. Composed by FELICE BLANGINI. Leader and Cock.

The music is pretty, but we confess ourselves to be quite at sea with the words. What is the meaning of the following couplet?

"May those now sailing o'er the wild and stormy deep Smoothly on their course with fav'ring wind still sweep!"

CHAMBER TRIOS. "BLESSINGS ON OUR ABSENT FRIENDS." Composed by F. ROMER. Leader and Cock.

The general effect of this trio is good; but we cannot permit the skip in the 2nd bar from the 6–4 on E to C minor—inversions should never be left but for their own fundamentals. This fault occurs frequently throughout.

VOCAL GEMS OF GERMANY. No. 5. Edited by WILLIAM HUTCHINS CALLCOTT.

This number contains one of the most divine melodies composed by the too early lost Himmel; it has been nicely arranged by Mr. Callcott, but we could have wished that the metre of the original words had been preserved in the translation. The substitution of a monosyllable for a dissyllable frequently mars the whole effect.

CHESS.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.—"B.," Regent's Park.—The mate cannot be given in less than four moves.

The problem in question must have cost the ingenious constructor many days of care and attention, and it is absurd to suppose that the obvious mode of prolonging the mate suggested by our correspondents should have escaped him. Those enthusiastic amateurs who are still dissatisfied should write to the author himself, Herr Anderssen, Breslau. We are at direct issue with "J. R. H." as to the merits of game No.* 5. His solution of M. Calvi's problem is unsound; it is impossible to effect mate in less than the stipulated number of moves.

"R. F.," Clonmel.—We have not time just now to play over the long games sent.

"Scacchi," Glasgow.—A pawn, technically speaking, is not a piece. Your solution is incorrect: mate cannot be given in fewer than five moves.

MARRIAGE OF MR. WARD.—Mr. Ward, about whom so much has been said lately in consequence of the proceedings at Oxford, was married on Monday, at St. John's church, Paddington, to Miss Frances Mary Wingfield, youngest daughter of the late Rev. John Wingfield, D.D., Prebendary of Worcester.

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE PROFESSOR DANIELL.—We are happy to learn that a subscription (open to the public) has been entered into at King's College, for the purpose of testifying respect to the memory of this distinguished philosopher. The funds raised it is proposed to apply to the execution of a bust of the late Professor, and the foundation of a chemical scholarship, in connection with the College. The President of the Royal Society, with other eminent and scientific friends of the deceased, have formed a committee to carry these objects into effect.

CABINET COUNCILS.—Two Cabinet Councils have been held during the week, a fact which indicates that the Ministry have important topics to discuss. We have reason to believe that the recent message of President Polk has occupied a good deal of the attention of the Cabinet.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SWITZERLAND.

DIFFERENCES of religious opinion, inflamed by political jealousies—local enmities mingling with both—have long kept Switzerland in an unquiet state; for the last ten years it has been agitated; more than once during that time portions of the people have taken up arms against each other, or the whole nation has risen to resist a threat of foreign interference. "Blood has been shed ere now," in these quarrels; but recent accounts have presented us with all these hatreds and jealousies terribly increased, and the latest exhibit a people in the heart of Europe involved in that greatest of national calamities—a civil war.

As the Great Powers will be imperatively called on to interfere, and the question will thus assume an European importance, a few remarks on the present condition of Switzerland may not be uninteresting.

It is in many respects a peculiar country. It is not large in extent, but its people are of three distinct races, speaking three different languages. Its whole population does not much exceed that of London; its largest city, Geneva, does not number thirty thousand inhabitants; yet it has played an important part in history, having, like Venice, derived more importance from the energy of its people than from its territory or material resources. The House of Hapsburg, now represented by the Emperors of Austria, in vain endeavoured to subdue that portion of it which rebelled against its sway: army after army of the Imperialists was defeated by the mountaineers, who "made their chivalry to skip." Charles the Bold made a similar attempt, and failed yet more signally; he was overthrown in several battles, losing in the last his crown, his treasures, and his life. The memory of these days is still fresh among the people; the arsenals and museums of the country are yet rich with trophies of these wars of the Middle Ages, and the visitor may walk through hundreds of suits of armour, the spoils of the Austrian or Burgundian knights, who fell on the fields of Sempach and Morat. The spirit of the people is warlike. Even to the overwhelming military power of Napoleon, that subdued all Europe, they did not succumb without resistance. Every man is armed and trained, and at the slightest appearance of foreign dictation or interference, a formidable army can be assembled on the frontiers.

When France, in 1838, demanded the expulsion of Louis Bonaparte, and, on the refusal of the Swiss to withdraw their protection from him, threatened to march French troops into their territory, the heights of the Jura, from Neuchatel southwards, were speedily occupied by the Swiss forces, and had the threat been acted on, the struggle would have been bloody and fierce, although to speak of the Swiss as able long to resist any one of the Great Powers by which they are surrounded, would, of course, be ridiculous. Still the people are bold and energetic, and universally armed, every peasant having his rifle: to this union of the spirit, and the means of acting on it, may be ascribed that readiness to fly to arms, which, while it is the strength of a country in case of attack from without, becomes fatal to it when resorted to for settling the differences that arise within.

Divisions and jealousies between State and State are the bane of Federal Governments; this is perceptible enough in America; but there a single State would absorb half the Swiss Republic. It is in the smaller and more minutely divided country that the diversities become more numerous, and the conflicts of opinion more violent. The general idea of Switzerland is, that it is a Federal Republic, composed of many different Cantons; but it is not so well known that the Cantons vary essentially from each other in their political constitution. The Catholic Cantons differ from the Protestant, and the Protestant differ from each other; and this variety exists to an extent perfectly extraordinary. There are single and double Cantons; in some, democracy is qualified; in others it is absolute. In one or two, the aristocratic element, though nearly destroyed, is still perceptible; and one Canton (Neuchatel) presents the anomaly of forming part of a Republic, at the same time belonging by allegiance to the Kingdom of Prussia! These political differences, sufficient of themselves to paralyse everything like unity of action, are rendered more violent and more complicated by religious dissensions. The Protestant is on the whole the predominating faith; but in particular Cantons, the Catholics are the most influential; and, unhappily, each party, like the factions of the old Italian Republics, the moment it attains power, persecutes the other. The Liberal or Radical party is the most numerous, and is influenced by the old hatred and suspicion of priests and Jesuits, which is an inheritance from the French revolutionary teachings of Voltaire and Rousseau, not diminished by the "Rationalist" doctrines of Strauss (of Zurich) and others, which have obtained too great an influence not only in Switzerland, but elsewhere. This mass of fierce and ignorant intolerance is carried into political contests, and the defeated minority have no scruple in flying to arms when they are out-numbered by votes. There are scattered through the country several colleges and schools of Jesuits, and more than two hundred monasteries and convents, containing nearly 3000 inmates. Over some of these establishments Austria claims a kind of controul, the faint relics of its former sovereignty, and from religious sympathies, as well as from its political antipathy to Liberalism of every kind, the Government of Prince Metternich naturally gives its support to the Catholic party wherever it has obtained a hold in the Federation. If there is one thing a Swiss hates worse than a Jesuit, it is an Austrian; he detests the individual on account of the policy of his rulers; he hates the falsehood and espionage which are made the instruments of Metternich's wily despotism. Hence the Catholic party is identified with all against which the Swiss Liberal is most violently prejudiced—priestly power, political absolutism, and foreign influence, with which he firmly believes a Catholic supremacy would enslave his country. With such opinions prevailing among an armed people, it is not surprising that they end in battle and bloodshed; conflicts have frequently taken place within the last few years, but the central Government having been able to interfere between both parties, they were not attended with much mischief. When the insurgents outnumber all the force the Government can command, interference is impossible, and the conflict of parties and creeds deepens as at present into all the horrors of civil war.

The recent excesses of the Swiss Radicals, who perhaps think they are patriots, deprive them of all claim to pity for the slaughter that has been made among them. They were the aggressors, and have fallen by the hands of those they attacked. But at the same time the Catholics are by no means free from blame. They have used their political influence, when they gained it, to persecute, exile, and imprison their opponents. Neither party have attained that political enlightment which enables men to differ, and yet live in peace; and we fear that the thirst for revenge which such a murderous conflict as this must awaken in the survivors of the defeated party, will not tend to produce that desirable state of things. It is mournful to think what time, and suffering, and blood, it costs ere men learn from the most effective of all teachers, the lesson of forbearance for each other's errors, and the unity of action which is required for the good of all. Without them no people can exist as a state, and a few years of such divisions as those by which Switerland is convulsed, will subject it to a "partition," in which the much hated Austria will have the lion's share.

CONFLICT AT LUCERNE.

In our late impression last week we communicated the untoward commencement of an insurrection in Switzerland. The Free Corps made an attack upon Lucerne, but was repulsed with great loss. The accounts are very contradictory, but we supply a narrative of the affair from the best sources.

According to the Federal of Geneva, the Free Corps was composed principally of Bernese, including some of the inhabitants of the Cantons of Argovia and Soleure. This detachment commenced their march on Monday morning, (the 31st ult.) at two o'clock, and, entering upon the territory of Lucerne by Hutwyll, arrived in the evening, about five o'clock, before Lucerne.

After having, as some say, gained the hill of Gutsch, which overhangs the town, or, as others maintain, before beginning the attack, they called upon Lucerne to surrender, but, whilst this negotiation was pending, night came

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

There is nothing particular from France this week. The Chamber of Deputies rejected on Monday, by a majority of 179 to 151, the proposition of M. Cremieux for conferring the right of voting at elections on citizens belonging to liberal professions. The Chamber of Peers has been discussing the bill for improving the condition of the slaves in the French colonies.

A duel took place a few days ago between the Duke d'U—— and the Marquis de C——, in consequence of a dispute which arose between them on the preceding day at a sporting dinner. A toast having been given in English by the Marquis de C——, the Duke observed that, among Frenchmen, French ought to be spoken. To this the Marquis replied, "The English language ought not to be disagreeable to you, and you should comprehend it, for you, who are a Pritchard's man, have voted in favour of the English Ministry." This was followed by a violent altercation, which led to the meeting, which was with swords. The sword of the Duke passed near the heart of the Marquis, whose wound, however, though severe, is not considered to be dangerous. The Duke was also wounded slightly on the hip, and is confined to his bed.

The Moniteur publishes a Royal Ordinance of the 23d ult., promoting the Duke de Montpensier from the rank of Chief of Squadron in the 4th Regiment of Artillery to that of Lieutenant-Colonel.

The Moniteur Parisien publishes a letter from Count Alfred de Flers, in which he states that the report of M. de Beauvallon (the adversary of M. Dujarrier in the late duel) and his seconds having fled into Holland is unfounded. They will, adds the writer, present themselves to take their trial.

SPAIN.

Our letters from Madrid announce that the Pope had recommended the marriage of Queen Isabella with the Hereditary Prince of Lucca, and that of the Infanta Luisa Fernanda with Count de Trapani. His Holiness was said to have obeyed, on this occasion, the orders of the Court of Austria, which would consent, on those conditions, to recognise the Government of Queen Isabella.

The proceedings in the case of the last conspiracy discovered in the capital are being pursued with the utmost activity. Several printed proclamations and various other documents compromising several important personages, have been seized, so that the public will soon be aware of the nature of the plot, which was still kept a mystery at Madrid.

BELGIUM AND GERMANY.

The Flemish papers have fearful accounts of inundations in various parts of Belgium and Germany, arising from the change of weather. At Mayence on the 30th ult., the Rhine was at an elevation which it had not attained in 1844, and the villages in that quarter had suffered much in consequence. At Worms no communication could take place otherwise than by boats. The Danube, rising above its limits, had inundated the contiguous lands. At Nuremberg the well-known journal, the Correspondent, could not be brought out as usual, the waters having rendered the printing office inaccessible. The Gazette de Coblentz, of March 30, states that the village of Nessendorf is under water, and that the Moselle, bursting from its proper bounds, has flooded the tract formerly covered by it, but latterly used as pasturage. The distress of the people below Ehrenbreitstein, the stre ts of which are submerged, is very great, notwithstanding the succour which has been liberally distributed among the poorer victims of the inundation.

At Mayence, on the 1st instant, the waters were beginning to retire in some degree. Letters from Dresden, of the date of March 30, describe the waters of the Elbe to be higher than they have been at any time since 1784. The cathedral church, situated in the old town, is submerged, as well as the royal stables. There was no communication between one part of the city and another, except by boats. The river was still rising, and houses were constantly abandoned, the damage done in different quarters proving enormous. Accounts from Bremen, of March 31, state that at an early hour that morning the dikes of the Weser gave way at a point where such a calamity could have been least expected. The waters were rushing forth with amazing impetuosity, carrying with them trees and moveables of all kinds, including the wrecks of human habitations. By ten o'clock a dozen houses had been overthrown by the floods, and, before the day was out, no fewer than thirty-three were destroyed.

The number of poor cre tures who had fallen victims to the catastrophe was not ascertained, but it was necessarily considerable, since no danger in this part had been apprehended, and the inhabitants were wholly unprepared for it. Numbers had taken refuge on the roofs of their dwellings, and unhappily there was great difficulty in rendering them any assistance. The accounts from all parts of the Elbe received at Bremen were afflicting. The waters were still rising. Advices from Affenbach of the 1st inst. announce that half that town is under water, the river having risen to a height quite unprecedented. The damage caused by the floods in the town is estimated at 100,000 guelders, and it was feared that disease would show itself among families obl ged to remain in the midst of humidity.

UNITED STATES.

By the ship Montezuma, we have received New York papers to the 18th March. They do not, however, contain any news of importance. The most interesting incident is a protest of General Almonte, the Mexican Minister, against the proposed re-annexation of Texas, which he describes an "unparalleled outrage." It was believed that the General would leave the United States for Mexico immediately.

The official list of the new Executive had not yet been published. However, the National Intelligencer thus gives it in advance:—

James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, to be Secretary of State.
Robert J. Walker, of Mississippi, to be Secretary of the Treasury.
W. L. Marcy, of New York, to be Secretary of War.
George Bancroft, of Massachusetts, to be Secretary of the Navy.
Cave Johnson, of Tennessee, to be Post-master-General.
John Y. Mason, of Virginia, to be Attorn y-General
Alexander H. Everett, of Massachusetts, to be c ommissioner to China.
Benjamin G. Shields, of Alabama, to be be Chargé to Venezuela.
William H. Polk, of Tennessee, to be Chargé to Naples.
Albert G. Jewett, of Maine, to be Chargé to Peru
Robert Armstrong, of Tennessee, to be Consul at Liverpool.

According to the latest accounts from Mexico, Santa Anna was still a prisoner in the Castle of Perote, and the general opinion was that he would neither be put to death nor banished, but would be imprisoned for the re mainder of his life. Generals Bassedre and Canalizo, Sa ta Anna's principal minions, had been removed to the fortress of Chapultepec.

The Texas ques ion was still agitated in many of the Mexican papers, the editors appearing to oppose the right of the United States to annex that country as strongly as ever.

A proposition has been made by the British Minister at Washington to the United States' Government, to submit the Oregon dispute to the arbitration of a third power. This offer was declined by Mr. Calhoun; in reference to which the New York Commercial Advertiser remarks that—"This is an act which that gentleman will hereafter regret. Nothing could have been more liberal or just. If any difficulty should hereafter arise between the two nations on the subject, the civilised world will censure the United States for declining such a peaceful overture."

On the night of the 5th ult. a fire broke out in the National Theatre, Washington, caused, it is said, by the carelessness of one of the company, who was dressing. The theatre was wholly destroyed, together with some seven or eight dwelling houses adjoining. The theatre was not insured.

Fires have also been numerous in Charleston and Savannah, and about 3500 bales of cotton were destroyed.

The boilers of the steam boat Syren burst in Apalachicola Bay, at Mid night on the 26th of Feb., and ten lives were lost.

Dates from Galveston, Texas, are received to the 24th of February. The Galveston Civilian states that President Jones had directed the letters of marque and reprisal issued against Mexican vessels to be withdrawn.

The Captain General of Cuba has issued a proclamation, ordering all vessels arriving at the ports in that island with slaves on board to be confiscated.

THE REVENUE RETURN.

The Return of the Revenue for the Quarter ending on Saturday last is very satisfactory, and exhibits a progressive improvement.

The general result presents the gratifying proof of prosperity offered by a net increase of One million four hundred and ten thousand seven hundred and odd pounds sterling, as compared with the revenue of the year ending April 5, 1844, itself a year of unexampled financial productiveness.

The increase would be still greater, but for the prospective or actual operation of the reduction of the duties on sugar, cotton, glass, &c. The effect of this reduction is apparent in a decroase of £201,000 in the Customs for the last quarter.

The year's gross increase upon the principal branches of revenue is as follows:—

Customs	£718,602
Excise	344,784
Stamps	242,800
Taxes	25,275
Post Office	57,000

There is a falling off in the Crown Lands' Sales and Miscellaneous Revenue; but as these are merely casual sources of income, their flux or reflux proves nothing. There is also a decrease in the Property Tax, probably the result of a relaxation in the collection of the tax.

According to the Leipsic Gazette, the lower part of Prague was, at the beginning of this month, completely inundated. Several large dykes in Bohemia have been carried away by the floods.

The Afrique, published at Algiers, says: Abd-el-Kader is at Bon-Beida with 1000 cavalry. He menaces the Beni-Meynarens, and the Douy-Thabets. Several tribes are preparing to join him; amongst them are mentioned the Dissident Djeffras, the Ouled-Mahrs, and the Bem-Mafacs. Colonel Géry has gone in pursuit of the Emir. The whole province is in a state of agitation. The movement of Abd-el-Kader is attributed to the determination of the Emperor of Morocco to expel him from his territory."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Railway Mania.—Lord Brougham moved for returns of the number of railway bills now pending in Parliament, and of the number in favour of which the Railway Board had reported, and referred to what he termed the "present frenzy for speculation in railways." The effects of that frenzy were likely to be detrimental, he said, to the credit as well as the resources of the country. After referring to the evil effects produced by over-speculation in 1826, Lord Brougham said he had lately seen a calculation made by one of the most eminent railway sharebrokers at present in this country, that if the house were to pass the 240 odd railway bills now pending, in the course of two or three years 130 millions would be required for those speculations. He need not remind their lordships that no one member of their house regarded with greater disapprobation than he did, and had ever done, any interference whatever on the part of the Government with the public. But it was quite a different question whether the Legislature or the Government should give encouragement to this spirit of speculation by granting acts of parliament, conferring the most extraordinary powers upon the speculators, and without which not one of these speculations could by possibility be undertaken. Lord Brougham then adduced several instances of the ruinous consequences arising from this railway-mania speculation, and of the injury done to property.—Lord Dalhousie declined to enter into the general question of railway speculation, but mentioned several instances of the hardships to which the owners of property in the neighbourhood of railways were exposed, and of the effrontery of railway engineers. It would require, he believed, from £140,000,000 to £150,000,000 to complete all the proposed railways, but it was impossible to conceive that they would all receive the sanction of the Legislature.—Lord Ashburton admitted the difficulty of preventing railway speculation, and remarked that although gambling-houses were put down, this railway mania pervaded all parts of the town. As an instance of the way in which the industry and manufactures of this country were deranged by the railway mania, he mentioned the iron trade. Iron was advanced 300 per cent. in price beyond what it was last year or eighteen months ago. The consequence of that was that the manufactures of the country connected with iron were destroyed. The manufacturers found competitors in every part of the world—in Belgium, America, and elsewhere—with whom they were unable to compete, in consequence of the high price of the raw material.—The returns were ordered.

The State of Ireland.—The Marquis of Normanby, in moving for some returns relative to the constabulary of Ireland, entered into a discursive speech as to almost everything connected with the Government of that country, implying a leaning on the part of the Irish Government towards a party, and eulogising the loyalty of the Irish people, who would receive her Majesty, should she favour the country with a visit, with an enthusi sm such as she had not yet experienced.—Lord Stanley vindicated the Irish appointments of the Government, and declared that it would pursue a straightforward policy, unbiassed by party considerations of any kind. He entered into an elaborate defence of the system of promotions and appointments in the constabulary, and concluded by expressing his willingness to produce the papers moved for.—The house adjourned soon after eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The Auction Duties.—The auction duties formed the chief subject of discussion. The Chancellor of the Exchequer having moved the order of the day for the house resolving into Committee on the Excise Acts (auction duties), proceeded to state some general reasons for the abolition of these duties, and adduced specific examples of their inequality and hardship in operation. Owing to exemptions and evasions the duties were only paid on seven millions out of forty-five millions value of property ascertained to be annually transferred, and a tax producing only £300,000 per annum cost at least £50,000 in expense of collection.—Mr. G. Bankes opposed the motion, and argued that there were various burthens which it would be more expedient to alleviate than the auction duties. The result of the division on the subject was—

For the repeal of the auction duties	167
Against it	30
Majority	137

On the proposition to raise the annual license of the auctioneer to £15, some conversation took place, and ultimately the Chancellor of the Exchequer agreed to fix the annual license at £10.

The house then went into Committee on the Customs' Acts, when, after some discussion, the various clauses were agreed to

The house sat till twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The house sat to day for a short time, but nothing of consequence occurred, and at an early hour an adjournment took place till Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The Post Office.—Mr. T. Duncombe moved for leave to bring in a bill to secure the inviolability of letters passing through the Post-office, and stated his intention to be to abolish completely and effectually the power, legal or illegal, of the opening of letters by warrant now exercised by the Secretary of State. There was, in his opinion, no middle course; to repeal absolutely the power claimed was what he desired; because he felt satisfied that, if it were retained in any shape, the system of fraud and forgery now in use at the Post-office would be continued.—Sir J. Graham thought the hon. member had placed the question in its fairest and truest light before the house, and with many of his positions he was prepared to state his entire concurrence. He agreed with him, that in this case there was no middle course open to the house or the Government. He did not believe it would be useful to continue the power of opening letters unless with its exercise secresy was preserved; and, if the law were at all continued, he did not think it could be beneficially altered. He admitted at once that this was a most odious power. He admitted that it was one which was viewed with great and just jealousy by the people of this country; and if, consistently with his sense of public duty, especially after his late painful experience, he could assent to the hon. member's motion, nothing would give him greater delight. Having stated his view of the foundation of the law, and pointed out the inconveniences which would result from the abolition of it, Sir James Graham concluded by saying he would not submit to the introduction of the bill.—Lord John Russell, although he blamed the exertions of the power for the purpose of detecting plots in foreign countries, believed it to be necessary to guard against conspiracies at home, and therefore he refused to vote for its abolition. It was his opinion, coinciding therein with that expressed by Lord Denman, that, in all cases of opening letters, the information on which the warrant may issue should be given upon oath, and that all legal and defensive forms should be observed. A Bill to restrict the practice had, he believed, been prepared by Lord Radnor in the other house, and to such a bill Lord John Russell declared his intention of giving his support.—On a division, the numbers were—

For the motion	78
Against it	161
Majority against it	83

Interments in Cities.—Mr. M'Kinnon, after descanting upon the evils arising from interments in cities, moved a resolution which, having been amended, was submitted in these terms:—"That the practice of interment in the metropolis and in large cities is injurious to the public health, and demands the serious attention of this house." On a division the numbers were—

For the amended motion	66
Against it	44
For the amended motion	66

The house was next occupied for some time with a motion of Mr. M. Gibson, for some returns connected with agriculture, but eventually the motion was withdrawn.—Adjourned at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The Field Gardens Bill.—Mr. Cowper having moved the second reading of this bill, Mr. Escott objected to the measure, because of the stringent and compulsory powers which it enforced, and moved as an amendment that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—After some debate, shared in by Mr. Cowper, Mr. M. Milnes, and Mr. Bouverie, Sir J. Graham expressed his general approbation of the bill, which, however, had some defects which might be removed in committee.—Some further observations were made by Lord J. Manners, Mr. Henley, and Mr. Wortley, and the second reading of the bill, on a division, was carried by 92 to 18.

The Museums of Art Bill.—Mr. Ewart moved that the house should go into Committee on this bill.—Mr. Buck complained of the absolute power that this bill gave to town councils to assess the inhabitants for the purposes of the bill, without any control whatever on the part of the rate-payers, and moved as an amendment that the house should go into Committee on that day six months.—Ultimately, at the suggestion of Sir J. Graham, the amendment was withdrawn, and the bill was postponed for a week.—The house adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Maynooth.—Many petitions were presented against the additional grant to Maynooth, and a desultory conversation took place upon the subject, in the course of which Sir R. Peel said he considered that to be a Government question (hear, hear), he thought it to be a question of the utmost importance, and he would do everything in his power to promote the success of it. (Loud Opposition cheers.)

The Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.—Mr. Christie moved, "That an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to appoint a Commission, to inquire into and report upon all matters relating to the privileges, revenues, trusts, and to the state of education, learning, and religion, in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and the colleges of these Universities." A debate followed, in which the principal speakers were Mr. Ewart, Sir. R. Inglis, Mr. Hope, and Mr. Goulburn; it was closed by Lord Palmerston, and the House then divided. The motion was rejected by a majority of 61, the numbers being—For it, 143; against it, 82.—The house adjourned at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

The house was for some time occupied with petitions against the grant to Maynooth.

The Sugar Duties Bill.—Lord Dalhousie moved the third reading of this bill. After a long discussion the motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a third time and passed. The house adjourned at half-past nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

A vast number of petitions was presented against the proposed increased grant to the College of Maynooth, by members on both sides of the house.

Impeachment of Sir Robert Peel.—Mr. Ferrand presented a petition from members of the Dublin Protestant Operative Association and Reformation Society, and other Protestants, praying the house forthwith to institute an inquiry into the conduct of the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Bart., and, if the premises of the petitioners be correct, to impeach him for high crimes and misdemeanours against the laws and constitution of the realm. The petition was ordered to lie on the table.

The Maynooth College Bill.—Sir R. Peel having moved the second reading of this bill, Mr. Colquhoun, as an amendment, moved that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—Mr. Grogan seconded the amendment.—Mr. Gladstone spoke warmly in support of the bill.—A very long discussion ensued, and ultimately the debate was adjourned.—The house adjourned soon after midnight.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—Commons.

The Labouring Classes.—Lord J. Russell has given notice that, on the 22d inst., he will move certain resolutions respecting the condition of the labouring classes in England and Wales.

Public Museums.—The Public Museums Bill has been read a third time and passed.

Glass (Excise Duty).—The Glass (Excise Duty) Bill has been read a third time and passed.

Dog-stealing.—Mr. Liddell has given notice that he will move for leave to bring in a bill to prevent the offence of dog-stealing.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

OPPOSITION TO THE BILL FOR ENDOWING MAYNOOTH.

Sir Robert Peel having appointed Wednesday for receiving a deputation from the general committee for conducting the opposition to the Maynooth Endowment Bill, a number of clergymen of the Established Church, dissenting ministers, and laymen, waited upon the right hon. baronet, and stated the objections entertained by Protestants generally to the measure. They alluded to the number of petitions which had been already presented against the bill, and the still greater number which were in course of signature; and urged upon the right hon. baronet, as the head of the Government, the inexpediency of proceeding with a bill which was manifestly hostile to the opinions and feelings of the country. They especially requested that the second reading of the bill may be postponed, in order that further time may be afforded to the more distant parts of the kingdom for the manifestation of their sentiments on the measure.

Sir Robert Peel listened to the representations of the deputation with his wonted suavity of manner, but declined to accede to the request for further time.

We hear that a similar deputation is to wait on Lord John Russell, for the purpose of communicating to his lordship the state of public feeling with respect to the bill, and to impress upon him the extreme alarm with which the measure has been viewed by the different denominations of Protestants throughout the country.

A requisition has been signed in the City, calling upon the Lord Mayor to convene a meeting of the citizens to petition against the bill. Monday next, is at present named for the meeting, at which the Lord Mayor, it is expected will preside. Covent-garden Theatre is engaged for a puulic meeting on the same subject, to be held on Monday evening next. Several numerously-attended meetings have been already held in the suburbs of the metropolis, and others are about to be holden.

The provincial papers also contain accounts of meetings to petition against the measure.

Improvements in Hyde Park.—During the last fortnight, upwards of one hundred and fifty labourers have been daily employed by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, levelling the various parts of the grass, new gravelling the numerous foot paths, and making very considerable improvements throughout the whole of Hyde Park.

The East India House.—On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when the thanks of the Court were voted unanimously to Mr. J. Shepherd, chairman, and Sir H. Willock, K.L.S., deputy-chairman, for their great application and attention to the affairs of the company during the past year. A ballot was also taken for the election of six directors in the room of Mr. J. Cotton, Mr. J. Loch, Mr. C. Mills, Mr. W. H. C. Plowden, Mr. H. Shank, and Mr. H. St. George Tucker, who go out by rotation. At six o'clock the glasses were closed, and delivered to the scrutineers, who reported that the election had fallen on Major-General Sir J. L. Lushington, G.C.B., Mr. G. Lyall, M.P., Mr. E. Macnaghten, Mr. J. P. Muspratt, Mr. M. T. Smith, and Mr. W. Wigram.

Drury-lane Theatrical Fund Dinner.—The anniversary festival of this institution was held on Wednesday at the Freemasons' Tavern, under the presidency of the Duke of Cambridge. Above two hundred gentlemen sat down to dinner. After the usual loyal and patriotic toasts, Sir I. L. Goldsmid proposed the health of the illustrious chairman, who, after returning thanks, urged on the notice of the assembled company the claims of the Theatrical Fund. Mr. Harley, as an official representative of the charity, returned thanks in a speech replete with appropriate expressions of gratitude for past support, and earnest appeal for renewed favour. A list of subscriptions was read, amounting to £730, exclusive of a legacy of £500 by the late Mr. Edward Walpole.

The Printers' Pension Society.—The eighteenth anniversary of the Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Printers and their Widows, was celebrated on Tuesday by a public dinner at the London Tavern, Benjamin Disraeli, Esq., M.P., in the chair, supported by Sheriffs Sydney and Hunter. The subscription amounted to nearly £400.

Mortality in the Metropolis.—The total number of deaths from all causes in the week ending on Saturday last is 950, an amount of mortality very much less than in any week for the last three months. During that time the weekly rate has been as high as 1155—in the week ending on the 22nd of March; and the lowest number returned during that period until this week is 980—this was in the last week of January. Great, however, as is the decrease, the amount of mortality, without of course taking into account the increased population, is still above the average, that of the last five springs being only 888. In sporadic diseases, in those affecting the brain and nerves, and especially in those of the lungs, there has been a considerable increase. Under the last head no less than 301 persons are returned as having died during the past week, the ordinary average being only 267. Forty-one deaths from diseases of the heart, too, are recorded, the average being only 24.

The Anti-Corn Law League.—The usual monthly meeting of this body took place at Covent garden Theatre on Wednesday evening, when a large assemblage of persons were harangued by Col. Thompson, and Messrs. Houghton, Cobden, and Fox. Several Anti-corn Law members of Parliament, as usual, were present. Mr. Cobden in his speech admitted that he could say nothing new; but he gave an odd illustration of his own mode of finding out a free-trader. He said that if he went into a farmer's dining-room, that was to say, a farmer's ordinary, he could easily find out who were free-traders by just taking up their hats and picking out those with the widest hole. (This novel mode of discovering a free-trader was applauded by the majority, though many, no doubt, thought it no compliment to have it supposed that a free-trader must have a thick head.) Mr. Fox expatiated upon the beauties of the forthcoming bazaar at some length, and concluded with an exhortation to his hearers to continue to persevere until they had effected the great object of the Anti-corn Law League. The Chairman thanked the meeting for the great attention that had been paid to the proceedings, and rejoiced that they had never once been under the necessity of calling in a policeman. This testimony to the good behaviour of the multitude was followed by three cheers for the League, and the meeting dispersed.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

The Romford Bank.—Monday was fixed for the declaration, in the Bankruptcy Court, of a further dividend upon the estate of Mr. Thomas Johnson. A few additional debts were proved, and a number of creditors were present. The case, which excited much interest, from the previous position of the bankrupt, after a lengthened examination, was adjourned to the 10th of May next, and a second dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound was declared upon Thomas Johnson's estate.

The Secrets of the Linendrapery Trade.—The well known case of Charles Mottram occupied the Court on Saturday, an application having been made by the bankrupt for a certificate. The facts brought before the Court in support of the opposition for a refusal of the certificate, or for its postponement for a considerable period, went to show that the bankrupt commenced business in 1842, as a warehouseman, in Friday street, Cheapside, and the fiat issued against him in February, 1844, having in eighteen months incurred debts still owing to the amount of £10,930, and liabilities to £2622. In the period mentioned purchases had been made to nearly £40,000, on which a profit of only £789 was received, from which was to be deducted £677 as a loss, showing that little more than £100 had been profit, the general practice of the bankrupt being either to sell at prime cost or at a loss. The bankrupt passed his last examination in August last, and had abstained from applying for his certificate until the present occasion. The good debts given up were £237, and the doubtful debts £307. The property given up was estimated at £275, and the property in the hands of creditors at £2400. It appeared that the trade expenses were set forth on the balance-sheet at £4157, and the personal and private expenses at £1447 17s. 3d. The bankrupt alleged that he commenced business with a capital of £3723—termed a fallacy. His wife (daughter of Lady Townsend) had a legacy of £8000, of which £3600 could not be assigned, and in raising money on the other portion from the Minerva Assurance Company, the expenses were £1168 14s. His father, Charles Mottram, who was an uncertificated bankrupt, and now an inmate of the Queen's Prison, had assisted him in his business, at a salary of £400 a year. The bankrupt had kept a livery servant. An objection to the certificate was made on the part of the assignees. Mr. Commissioner Fane said the Court would give its decision on Tuesday next.

IRELAND.

The Queen's Visit to Ireland.—The Royal Visit has become the universal topic in Ireland. It is generally supposed that her Majesty and her illustrious Consort will arrive about the middle of July. It is stated that plans of the apartments in Dublin Castle, and in the Vice-regal Lodge, Phœnix Park, have been taken by her Majesty's desire, and forwarded to Buckingham Palace. It is stated that her Majesty is to make a short stay at Knowsley, the seat of Lord Derby, near Liverpool, on her way to Ireland, and that preparations for the reception of the Royal party are now in progress there. Sir Robert Peel will be in attendance upon her Majesty during her sojourn in Ireland.

The Repeal Association.—The proceedings on Monday last were more worthy of notice than for some weeks past. Mr. Grey Porter, the author of a pamphlet on Federalism, was enrolled as a member, and made a speech in favour of the Repeal. Mr. O'Connell eulogized Sir R. Peel in strong terms, for his measure for improving Maynooth. Mr. O'Connell said he should not wonder after all if Sir R. Peel himself brought in a bill for the Repeal of the Union (laughter). He never opposed the Repeal with greater sternness than he did the Emancipation of the Catholics; yet he was the man who carried the Emancipation Bill triumphantly through the House of Commons, and forced it through the House of Lords. Well, now I am (said Mr. O'Connell) beginning to fall in love with Si Robert Peel—hurrah for Peel and Re-peal (cheers and laughter). Do I blame him for the course he took then? No, I praise him, and I praise him for his speech and plans in reference to the College of Maynooth (hear, hear). Mr. O'Connell proceeded to say that the bill for giving an increased grant to Maynooth was an excellent one. The grant had been given without restriction or limitation, or without any trick. It was done in a noble and generous manner, and he felt grateful for it. "I admit," added Mr. O'Connell, "I do speak harshly sometimes of those whom I believe opposed to measures for the good of my country; but I am ready to do justice to all the friends of Ireland—to all who show such a disposition as this bill shows of serving her. (Hear, hear). I do exclaim there never was a bill brought in on fairer terms, and we freely acknowledge it. But will it make us give up the agitation for the Repeal? (No, no.) There is one delightful thing in connection with this act of justice. On Thursday Sir R. Peel brought in the Maynooth Bill and passed it by a majority of 102, and on the following day (Friday) he set the Americans at defiance (cheers). Yes, finding himself in a strong position, by this act of justice to Ireland, he addresses language to America befitting a British Minister. I say go on in the same way, and we will set the Americans at defiance (protracted cheers). The quarrel is a queer one as it stands. The Americans are bragging away on one side, and Peel is standing in an attitude of defiance on the other. Something like two fellows anxious to be at one another with their friends holding them, each exclaiming 'Let me at him' (laughter). I say to Sir Robert Peel give the Irish their Parliament, and to the Americans I would say don't dare to attack England You have some 2,300,000 slaves; the English will send some sergeants and corporals from the West India Islands amongst them. No men like to be worked hard for nothing, and a supply of black sergeants and corporals sent amongst them would turn these slaves into freemen (cheers). America, I say, don't dare to attack England—if England do justice to Ireland (renewed cheers)." The amount of the Rent was £333 7d.

Murder in Tipperary.—Last week a respectable farmer, named John Ryan, who resided at Miltown, in the neighbourhood of Clonmel, was murdered by his brother Thomas Ryan. The cause of this melancholy and disgraceful murder was a dispute about land. It appears that the deceased was walking on the road towards Fethard, in company with two of his neighbours, when his unnatural assassin fired at him from behind a ditch with a loaded pistol. The ball penetrated his heart, and he fell a corpse at the feet of his companions. The murderer has fled.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Fatal Accident.—On Wednesday morning, at an early hour, the family of Mr. Wood, the coal-merchant, of Hungerford Wharf, Strand, were deprived of one of their family under the following circumstances:—It appeared that Mr. Wood, jun., who was a lighterman, was in the act of removing a large barge of coals in shore, when, while on the gunwale, his foot slipped, and he fell overboard; when unfortunately, before assistance could be rendered him he was drowned. At ten o'clock the body was found near where the accident happened

Fire near Rotherhithe Church.—On Wednesday night a fire broke out in a narrow thoroughfare, called Spread Eagle-court, Rotherhithe, generally inhabited by the low Irish. Water, however, being in abundance, and several engines having arrived, the destructive element was prevented extending beyond the building in which it originated. The premises, which are the property of a Mr. Green, are supposed to be insured. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Fatal Colliery Explosion near Newcastle.—Last week another of those fearful explosions of fire damp so frequent in the district, occurred in the West Moor pit, at Killingworth, about six miles from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and in the adjoining county of Northumberland. On inquiry on the spot, it was ascertained that ten men and boys have fallen victims on this occasion, and that two others, who were in the same district, but nearer the shaft of the mine, were got out alive, and are in a fair way of recovery. A coroner's inquest has been held on the bodies, which extended to two days. The evidence, however, only went to show that great care had been taken in the pit to prevent accidents, and that it was fully examined by the proper parties on the morning of the accident. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death." The pit belongs to Lord Ravensworth and partners, and was not at full work when the accident occurred.

Death from Swallowing a Shilling.—On Wednesday Mr. Baker held an inquest at the London Hospital, on the body of William Falthorp, aged forty years. It appeared from the evidence that the deceased had been an inmate of the hospital for some time past. He was in a decline, and no hopes were entertained of his recovery. On Sunday afternoon he was in bed, playing with a shilling, which he intended giving to another patient for his trouble in waiting upon him, when suddenly an alarm was given that he had swallowed it; and before the nurse belonging to the ward could reach his bed, he was dead. A patient said he saw deceased endeavouring to extract something from his throat with his fingers. Mr. Wordsworth, house surgeon, said he had made a post mortem examination; but could not say that the coin was the actual cause of death, although it had accelerated it. The Jury returned a verdict of "Natural death, accelerated by accidentally swallowing a shilling."

Sudden Deaths.—On Wednesday, Mr. Carter, the Coroner for Surrey, held an inquest at the Red Cow, Peckham, on the body of Mr. Isaac Wells, aged sixty-one, a gentleman of independent property, living at Barden-place. It appeared that the deceased returned home from a walk, at three o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and appeared in good health up to the instant previous to his death, which took place at twelve at night, when he fell from his chair on the floor, and expired immediately. Verdict "Natural death."—On the same day, Mr. Baker held an inquest at the Globe and Pigeon, Shadwell, on the body of Mr. John Friar, a tobacconist in the neighbourhood. On Tuesday afternoon, deceased left home in apparent good health to go and pay a bill to Mr. John Williams, also a tobacconist. After making the payment, and whilst standing in Mr. Williams's shop, he suddenly complained of severe pain in the head, and seated himself in a chair. He was then attacked with nausea, which caused Mr. Allen, a neighbouring surgeon, to be sent for, but before he arrived deceased was dead. The surgeon attributed death to apoplexy. Verdict acccordingly.—Mr. Carter also held an inquest at the Hero of Waterloo Tavern, Waterloo-road, on view of the body of Catherine Brian, aged twenty years. Mrs. Hadland, of 112, Stamford-street, stated that the deceased was her servant. On Saturday evening, at nine o'clock, the deceased went out to order the supper beer. Shortly after she returned, and whilst engaged in washing a glass to pour it into, she suddenly fell backwards and expired without a groan. The Jury returned a verdict of "Natural death." Mr. G. Mills held an inquest at the Grapes Tavern, Brompton, on view of the body of Mrs. Elizabeth Robinson, aged forty four years. It was proved that on Friday week she was in her usual good health and spirits. About seven o'clock in the evening, she complained of being thirsty, and asked for a bottle of soda-water. One was opened for her by one of her daughters, and while she was sitting on her chair in the act of drinking it, she suddenly exclaimed, "Oh, hold my head," and before the daughter could do so, she fell off the chair in a life less state. Verdict, "Natural death."

Execution at Stafford for Fratricide.—John Brough, who was convicted at the Stafford Assizes for the murder of his brother, was executed at Stafford on Saturday morning. The criminal confessed his guilt some time since, and appeared very penitent. After he had been pinioned, he walked with tolerable firmness, accompanied by the officers, to the gaol lodge; but on reaching the steps leading to the drop, he trembled exceedingly, and required the assistance of two of the officers to ascend. He held down his head, and wept bitterly, holding his pocket-handkerchief to his face. The last words he was heard to utter, were, "I hope the Lord will have mercy on my poor soul!" The rope having been placed round his neck, the chaplain proceeded to read the customary sentences of the burial-service, and when he came to the words—"In the midst of life we are in death," the executioner drew the fatal bolt. After hanging about an hour the body was cut down, and immediately interred within the precincts of the prison. John Brough was 39 years of age. He was a single man.

Royal Visit to the Zoological Gardens.—On Saturday last her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Princess Royal, and the Prince of Wales, visited the Gardens in the Regent's Park. There was scarcely a beast or bird of any peculiarity which her Majesty and Prince Albert did not particularly notice and explain the nature of to the royal infants. After remaining upwards of an hour on the south side of the gardens, the royal party proceeded to the habitations of the giraffes and elephant. The Prince of Wales and Princess Royal carried with them a quantity of biscuits, with which they amused themselves to the great gratification of her Majesty and Prince Albert, feeding the giraffes and elephants, and having remained nearly an hour, the royal party proceeded to the Museum, when her Majesty having expressed herself highly gratified, the royal party took their departure. The royal visit was quite a private one.

CIVIL WAR IN SWITZERLAND.

on. The Corps Francs considered themselves certain of victory, when two battalions of riflemen from Uri and Unterwalden, who had been manœuvring to take them in the rear, commenced the attack.

A panic seized the insurgents; they were at once thrown into the greatest disorder, but there was no flight. On every side the resistance was obstinate, but the attacks poured down upon them from all quarters. The artillery, ranged by General Sonnenberg in the most commanding position, committed immense havoc in the ranks of the Corps Francs, the Landsturm completely surrounded them, and it was only after repeated engagements that they were able to cut their way through, and regain Zoffinguen.

It is said that this detachment of Corps Francs has lost from 1000 to 1200 men, including killed and wounded. All their artillery, with the exception of the two cannon taken at Nidau, were abandoned. It is asserted that several of the chiefs have been killed, and that the town of Nidau alone has lost sixty men.

It seems that there were two principal engagements; one at the foot of the Gutsch, and the other at the bridge over the Emme, where the explosion of a mine prepared by the inhabitants of Lucerne occasioned a great loss of life amongst the insurgents. It is asserted that 150 prisoners have been conducted to Lucerne, amongst whom is Colonel Rothpletz, the Inspector-General of the Argovian Militia, and President of the ancient committee of Corps Francs.

The fact of the return to the canton of Berne of several Bernese who had belonged to the expedition of the Corps Francs is confirmed by the letters from Berne; they were part of a company of dragoons, of whom only fourteen have been able to save themselves, owing to the swiftness of their horses.

A private letter from Geneva, dated April 3, says:—"I have now ascertained, almost without doubt, that the loss of the Corps Francs, instead of being exaggerated, is still greater than was at first supposed. When they commenced their march they amounted to from 5,000 to 6,000, and are now nearly annihilated. They were in fact cut to pieces, although they acted with the greatest courage. General Sonnenberg, who is an old soldier, showed consummate skill, and drew them into a defile, bordered on one side by the river, and on the other by rocks, which were filled by riflemen and artillery. He then attacked them in front, in the rear, and on the flank; and you may easily conceive the carnage that must have ensued. The Catholic population of Argovia have risen, and have commenced an attack on the government of Arau. Berne has sent troops to protect them. One only of the divisions of Corps Francs lost 1,000 men, without including the loss that may have been sustained by the others. The Radicals have received a fearful lesson."

The Journal des Débats states, that—

"All the information it had received from Switzerland represented the defeat of the Free Corps as still more complete than was at first believed The conquerors, it was said, had taken upwards of 1500 prisoners, who had been removed to the mountains of the small Cantons, and that, consequently, it would be difficult for their friends to rescue them. The Government of Lucerne had refused to liberate these prisoners, and insisted on being paid the expenses of the war. The number of killed was not exactly known, but it must have been considerable, if we are to judge by the fury of the engagement. General Sonnenberg, the commander of the troops of Lucerne, had designedly drawn the Free Corps into the heart of the Canton, and retired before them to Gutsch, a hill commanding the town of Lucerne. When he found that they had advanced far enough, he suddenly attacked them in front, whilst they were at the same time assailed in the rear by the Landsturm, which had risen in arms after their passage. The column of refugees and volunteers which had entered from the side of Berne was actually cut to pieces, and the entire staff of the Free Corps which accompanied that column was either killed or captured. The other column, consisting of refugees and Argovian volunteers, which advanced from Zoffinguen, encountered a division of troops near Sursee, and was also completely routed. About 2500 men of that column succeeded in returning to Argau. The fate of a third column, which entered by Reinach, was not known. The people of the Catholic districts of Argau, and of a portion of Soleure, had risen and marched to the assistance of Lucerne. Listal, the chief village of Bâle Country, and the head quarters of the Radicals of that Canton, was entirely deserted. Fears of a civil war prevailed there as well as at Bâle City, where the Conservative party was preparing for the contest."

We translate the following from the Constitutionnel:—

"The accounts from our correspondents come to the 4th. Of the three columns of insurrectional troops that entered Lucerne, one only, that composed of volunteers from Berne, regained the territory of Argau without sustaining very considerable loss. The fate of the column commanded by Major Ochsentein is still unknown. With the exception of the soldiers of Zug, who showed some humanity, the troops of the primitive Cantons acted with great ferocity. It is but too certain that, out of the 4000 to 5000 men that composed the invading army, not more than 2000 have escaped the massacre. The number of prisoners is daily increased by isolated captures. The Directory has difficulty in finding federal commissioners willing to undertake a mission, which is the more thorny, as these delegates can be invested with only very restricted powers, which are the more illusory as they do not emanate from the Diet. M. Streng, of Thurgau, who was appointed to this charge, in the room of M. Vieli, has also declined it, and been replaced by M. Hozffi, of the Grisons, whose aceptance is more than doubtful. Thus deprived of a colleague, the first commissioner, M. Noeff, of Saint Gall, has great difficulty in acting with any efficiency. Besides, he had only just left Arau on the 4th for Lucerne, where the re-action was still proceeding in all the spirit of revenge. The radical change in the members of the federal executive power, on the eve of the opening of the Diet, has caused a great sensation among the deputies, almost all of whom arrived at Zurich on the 4th, and the session was to be re-opened on the 5th. The foreign ministers had suffered to transpire the dissatisfaction caused them by this victory of the liberal party in regions wherein they would with pleasure have seen the elements of conservation continue to predominate. Threats of intervention were in the mouths of almost all the diplomatists, and they went even so far as to say that France had decided upon making common cause with the other Cabinets in reducing Switzerland to reason. The debates in the Diet are expected to be very stormy, although the two most formidable champions of the Liberal party, M. Neuhaus, of Berne; and M. Druey, of Vaud, are not yet at their post. The last is detained at Lausanne by a severe illness, and the detention of M. Neuhaus at Berne appears to be rendered necessary by existing circumstances. The first measure to be proposed to the Diet by the Directory, almost entirely composed of new members, should be calculated to put an end to the present intolerable situation to which the faults and inhuman proceedings of the Government of Lucerne have reduced the Cantons for love of the Jesuits. However, it will be difficult to obtain a majority in favour of the amnesty, the only means of healing the still bleeding wounds of the Confederation."

The Débats says—"Our advices from Zurich are anything but favourable to the maintenance of peace in the Confederacy. The elections that have just taken place for the re-composition of the Executive Council have given the majority to the Radical party. It appears certain that M. Mousson, President of the Vorort, has resigned. The Radicals are, therefore, absolute masters of the authority which, as being the Vorort, is, for two years to come, to direct the affairs of Switzerland."

A communication from Lucerne, of the 4th, in the New Zurich Gazette, states that the official reports give the number of killed in the late affair at 300, and that of the prisoners, 1730.

A Berne letter of the 3rd states that among the persons killed were the commander-in-chief of the expedition, M. Ochsenbein, of Berne, employed in the police, and member of the Swiss Committee which directed the movement, and M. Funk, brother of the President of the Appeal Court of Berne, who took two cannon from Nidau, in spite of the opposition of the Prefect and the Executive Council, and many other officers.

As there seems to be some misapprehension as to the cause of these insurrectionary proceedings, it may be proper to state that the Canton of Lucerne, which enjoys great privileges and has considerable power, has decided upon appointing the Jesuits to superintend the national education. This arrangement was displeasing to the Protestant party of some of the other Cantons, and these individuals, forming themselves into what is termed a Free Corps, an armed body, made the attack. It is only necessary to observe, that however injudicious may be the introduction of the Jesuits in Cantons where there is considerable religious excitement, it is impossible for the Government to tolerate the existence of an armed body like this Free Corps.

A report of the proceedings at the re-opening of the Swiss Diet, on Saturday last, has reached us. Considerable excitement prevailed in the assembly. The President, in an appropriate address, after remarking that he did not expect that the Diet would so soon re-assemble, went on to say that the Free Corps, irritated that the Diet was powerless in coming to a decision with respect to the Jesuits, made an irruption on the territory of a confederate state. A terrible destiny has befallen these misguided men, and sorrow has seized on many honourable families. A federal army is on foot to lend its assistance to the re-establishment of order in our country. The peace of Switzerland depends on what the Diet is about to do.

The reports of the Vorort, the federal commissary, and of the chief of the army were then read.

The report of the Vorort states that after the defeat of the Free Corps the Directory invited the several States not to neglect anything to prevent the renewal of such facts. It next gives an account of the measures taken when the Government of Argau perceived symptoms of revolt in the Freiamt, and concludes by making known the propositions of the two states.

1. Lucerne demands that the Diet should take severe measures to put an end to the organisation of the Free Corps: that Argau and the Bâle country should be called on to pay the expenses caused to the Canton of Lucerne by the recent invasion.

2. Argau demands that the Diet should come to some decision against the Jesuits, and that Lucerne should proclaim a general amnesty.

M. Weber, Second Deputy of Berne, demanded, as a matter of urgency, that the Diet should address a pressing invitation to Lucerne to accord a general amnesty.

M. Stegwart, deputy of Lucerne, spoke against the sending of commissioners, and the calling out of federal troops, as useless measures. Independently of the propositions which Lucerne had submitted to the Cantons, he had to make another. The Free Corps, after having obtained their arms and accoutrements from the Cantonal arsenals, and being fully supported, had entered the Canton of Lucerne like robbers, to the number of 7000 or 8000. The deputy here entered into details of the matter. According to him there were 2000 prisoners (who had not been ill-treated) and 300 killed. It was sufficient, he remarked, to look at the men in custody to see that they were the refuse of society. (Loud marks of indignation from the tribunes.) Lucerne was obliged to quit her friends and faithful confederates to apply to perjured men (marks of disapprobation from the assembly). Written proofs of the connivance of the authorities of the Cantons could be now produced. Lucerne insisted on the demands which she made in her letter to the Vorort of March 26th; and, in addition, required satisfaction from the Cantons of Berne, Argau, Soleure, and Bâle-Country; and if that satisfaction was not accorded, she reserved to herself to take all proper steps for her preservation. The Deputy concluded by declaring that the Grand Council of Lucerne had proclaimed an amnesty in favour of the criminals of December 8, excepting only the most guilty.

After this speech, which produced a sensation of sadness in the assembly

a report was read from the federal representative, M. Nœff, dated Lucerne, April 4, announcing that the Grand Council of Lucerne had taken measures which led to hope that clemency would be shown. There were to be three classes of prisoners.

At a meeting of the Grand Council of State, held at Lucerne on the 4th, the instructions to be given to the deputies at the Extraordinary Diet were resolved on. It was also agreed that the amnesty was to extend to all but the authors and chiefs in the movement. The Grand Council decided that the trial of the offenders should take place immediately.

The Journal des Débats of Wednesday has the following:—"An account was received yesterday from Switzerland, affirming that Dr. Steiger, one of the chiefs of the refugees of Lucerne, who was made prisoner at the late battle, was tried and condemned on Thursday, and immediately shot. We would willingly doubt the truth of this news. This merciless act of vengeance would not do honour to the victory of the government of Lucerne, and it cannot be by such sanguinary acts of reprisal that the government and the friends of the Jesuits will strengthen their cause, or gain for it sympathy and support. The number of the victims of this deplorable civil war is already sufficiently great. The exact amount of the killed cannot yet be ascertained; but it is said that out of the 600 men who marched from the half canton of Bâle Country, only 100 have returned, and that a single man alone has got back to Liestal."

Lucerne is situated nearly in the centre of Switzerland, and its position appeared to point out this Canton as the natural battle-field of the two great parties which divide the Confederation. Lucerne is, in fact, at one of the extremities of the lake of the four Cantons, on the borders of which are situated the primitive Cantons of Unterwald, Uri, and Schwyz. To the north of these is the Catholic Canton of Zug. Lucerne, therefore, on the east, touches the Cantons most in favour of the Jesuits, and the lake of the four Cantons offers it a direct and easy communication with them. On the west, Lucerne, on the contrary, touches on the Cantons most strongly in favour of the liberal side, and which lie in the following order round her frontiers: — Argau, Basle (Country), Soleure, and Berne. Lastly, between the Canton of Zug and that of Argau, to the north of Lucerne, is the directing Canton of Zurich. Thus placed, between its allies on one side and its adversaries on the other, Lucerne became the necessary battle-field for both parties. To defend the town, the Government of Lucerne had established a part of its forces at Surzée, five leagues from Lucerne, at the point where the road coming from Soleure and Argau on the north, and that from Berne on the west, join together to lead to Zurich. The rallying points of the volunteers were fixed on to be Zoffinguen, on the road from Soleure to Lucerne and Huitwyl, on that to Berne; but the volunteers of Soleure and Argua left the road which led direct to Surzée, and, deviating to the west, joined the volunteers of Berne half-way between Huitwyl and Surzée, and thus took the Lucernese, who were established at the latter place, in flank.

Our Engravings, five in number, show the sites of the principal events of the Insurrection, and the entire Seat of War.

The Illustration upon our front page shows a scene of a desperate attack made by the insurgents in Lucerne; and the Engraving below is a picturesque view of the town.

The pair of Illustrations above, are:—1, a view of the exterior of the hôtel-de-ville at Zurich, wherein the Swiss Diet hold their sittings: the artist has chosen the moment of the arrival of deputies to join the assembly. 2. PRINCE METTERNICH.

The disturbed state of Switzerland has necessarily drawn the attention of Austria; by her possessions in Italy she is brought into close contact with the southern Cantons of Vaud and Valais, while her political influence in the north and east, from the prevalence of the German language and the Catholic religion, is unquestionable. That most watchful of Ministers, Prince Metternich, keeps a vigilant eye on the workings of Liberalism wherever it exists, to keep its tenets from invading Austria, as he would keep out the plague; and while he is thus occupied with the struggle of the two principles so near his own borders, and busied with diplomatic arrangements, every resource of which is so well known to the veteran statesman, we take the opportunity of giving his portrait, and a brief sketch of his career.

Clement Wencesilaus Nepomuk Lothair, Prince of Metternich, Duke of Portella, State Chancellor of the Empire of Austria, Minister of the Interior, Knight of the Golden Fleece, a member of every order of every realm of Europe, with, perhaps, the exception of the Order of the Garter of England, and whose numerous titles it were here wearisome to name, was born at Coblenz, on the 15th of May, 1773, the only son of Prince Francis George, of Metternich—an ancient and noble House that had for generations inherited the wealth and honours that fall to the share of the talented, the favoured, or the lucky servants of Kings. From his youth he was destined to the service of the State, and his great natural talents were developed and improved by the most careful education. In his fifteenth year he entered the University of Strasburg. He quitted it in 1790, and for the next four years travelled, at intervals studying at Mayence.

In 1794 he accompanied his father to Vienna, where he married Maria Eleonora, the only daughter of Prince Ernest of Kaunitz-Rittberg, a relative of the renowned Kaunitz, the Minister of Maria Theresa. His active career may be said to have commenced in 1801, when he was dispatched as envoy to Dresden. Napoleon was then growing to greatness, and little dreamed that an almost unknown resident at Dresden was destined to be the man whose diplomacy was in after years to knit that band of monarchs together, beneath whose union the military colossus fell. In 1807, he was sent to Fontainebleau, where the nature of the man—quiet, calm, and determined—proved an overmatch for the more impetuous temper of Napoleon; he saw that the power of the Emperor, great as it was, was assailable, and was not dazzled by it; Napoleon neither awed nor influenced him, and, losing his temper, it is said the soldier used language to the statesman that did not fall short of personal insult. During the campaign of 1809, Metternich was a prisoner of war in Paris; but after the battle of Wragram, was liberated by an exchange.

The success of the French armies compelled the Emperor Francis to the step—disastrous to all parties—of sacrificing his daughter to the Child of the Revolution, too ambitious of an alliance with the oldest Sovereign house in Europe; and with the year 1812, the first period of Metternich's active career may be said to have closed. A forced peace, in which both sides were insincere, could not be of long duration: from the breaking out of the war to the overthrow of Napoleon, Metternich was the presiding spirit in the councils of Austria, and the talents and activity he displayed, amid all the difficulties of the time, were astonishing. His labours were brought to a close again after the rising of the Congress of Vienna. After the re-establishment of peace, Metternich undertook the task of repressing the spirit of liberty, in the name of which the Princes of Germany rallied their subjects against the French invaders. They encouraged it while it suited their purpose; they began to crush it the moment that purpose was wrought; and in the work of despotism, never had monarchs an abler or craftier instrument than Austria found in Metternich. He is one of those statesmen who recognise neither right nor wrong, but sees only his end and his means, and uses the last, whatever they may be, without scruple or remorse. And he has attained all he cared for — success; the world will probably never know at what a cost of human suffering and political crime. Where there is neither jury nor press, the dungeon and the grave hide all. It may be said, however, that he is not, on system, needlessly or wantonly oppressive. As the necessity for rigour ceased, he relaxed; and as far as the material well-being of the people is concerned, there is not a nation in Europe so well governed as Austria; this is as true of her Italian States as of her German Empire; the Austrians are well fed, lightly taxed, and life being easy, they are a gay, a cheerful, if somewhat sensual people; but all the energy that finds such free and wholesome exercise in other lands is repressed; where the Government does all, there is no need of exertion, and trained and broken to the system the Austrians have as little desire, as they are incapable of doing it, to govern themselves. The people, too, are taught, but it is after a fashion; it is the education of slaves; when the Governments of Europe were in terror at the advance of intelligence, Metternich was the first to see that education was a two-edged sword, and he founded that scheme of "state teaching" which has made intelligence an instrument in the hands of despotism, instead of allowing it to be what it would have become—a power over it. The Government teaches what it wishes the people to think, and no more; and even the intelligence that is gained, is not allowed to be used for any purpose for which intelligence is of value. Thought and opinion are both stifled by a rigid censorship of all writings for the press.

And for doing what no man else could have done, Metternich has had his reward. He has had honours showered on him, and his wealth is enormous. Besides his hereditary fortune, he became possessed through his first wife of the estates of Prince Kaunitz; in 1816 the Emperor Francis presented him with the castle and estate of Johannisberg, in the Rheingau; he holds besides, the lordships of Konigswart, Plass, Ammon, Markusgrun, and Miltigan in Bohemia; Kozetein in Mähren; and Gramme, Bronbach, Oberehe and Rheinardstein on the Rhine.

PRINCE METTERNICH.

His first wife died on the 19th of March, 1819; he remained eight years a widower, but in 1827 married a lady named Von Leykam; she also died after two years of marriage, and he re-married in 1831, the Countess Melanie Zichy Ferraris, who was born in 1805. His family consists of two daughters by his first marriage, a son by the second, and a son and daughter by the third. His eldest son is not more than sixteen.

We cannot better close our sketch than with a tribute to his personal demeanour and polished elegance of manners, placed in contrast with his stern political despotism, from the pen of Count Auersperg, one of the best of the living poets of Germany. The piece has a power and purpose of its own which make it worth quoting independently of its close connection with our subject:—

THE SALOON SCENE.

'Tis evening; flame the chandeliers in the ornamented hall;
From the crystal of tall mirrors thousandfold their splendours fall.
In the sea of radiance moving, almost floating, round are seen
Lovely ladies young and joyous, ancient dames of solemn mein.

And amongst them staidly pacing, with their orders graced, elate,
Here the rougher sons of war, there peaceful servants of the state,
But observed by all observers, wandering 'mid them one I view,
Whom none to approach dare venture, save th' elect, illustrious few.

It is he who holds the rudder of proud Austria's ship of state,
Who 'mid crowned heads in Congress, acting for her, sits sedate.
But now see him! O, how modest, how polite to one and all;
Gracious, courtly, smiling round him, on the great and on the small.

The stars upon his bosom glitter faintly in the circle's blaze,
But a smile so mild and friendly ever on his features plays,
Both when from a lovely bosom now he takes a budding rose,
And now realms like flowers withered, plucks and scatters as he goes.

Equally bewitching sounds it, when fair locks his praise attends,
Or when he, from heads anointed, kingly crowns so calmly rends.
Ay, the happy mortal seemeth in celestial joys to swim
Whom his word to Elba doometh, or to Munkat's dungeons grim.

Man of Empire! Man of Council! as thou art in kindly mood,
Shew'st thyself just now so gracious, unto all so wondrous good,
See! without, a humble client to thy princely gate hath pressed,
Who with token of thy favour burns to be supremely blessed.

Nay! thou hast no cause of terror! he is honest and discreet,
Carries no concealed dagger 'neath his garments smooth and neat.
It is Austria's People!—open—full of truth and honour—see!
How he prays most mildly, "May I—take the freedom to be free?"

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

On Monday evening the opera of "Guillaume Tell" was reproduced at this house, when we had the great delight of hearing Duprez once more in the part of Arnold. We have nothing more to add to our former opinion of this transcendant artiste's merits, than that he sang with purer intonation, and, if possible, with increased energy, particularly in the scene where he hears of his father's death. When will English singers, possessed as they are of fine voices, emulate the foreigners in passion, feeling, and true perception of character? Alas! we fear never! The advent of such a singer as Duprez should fill the house with all aspiring vocalists, who, from a single phrase as delivered by him, could learn more than from the prosy lectures drawled out for a twelvemonth by old women dubbed Doctors and Knights.

M. DUPREZ, AS ARNOLD, IN GUILLAUME TELL.

Drury Lane Theatre.—Her Majesty will honour this theatre with her presence in state on the 24th instant.

Herr Staudigl is expected to arrive in town on Monday next. This is gratifying intelligence to all lovers of true music.

Philharmonic.—The second concert of this Society will take place on Monday next, when it will be honoured by the presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert. We hope it will prove "a more exquisite song than the last."

A Juvenile Violinist.—Young Day has arrived in town from Brussels. Foreign certificates give him the highest character for extraordinary ability upon his instrument.

NEW MUSIC.

Morceaux de Salon. Rondo for the Pianoforte. Composed by Louise Bendixen. Chappell.

Highly creditable to Miss Bendixen's musical genius, and acquirement in the art. We could wish, however, that a little more had been made of the episode subject, and that (at page 3, stave 1) bar fourth had commenced with an F double sharp, instead of E. The same remark applies to the repetition of the passage in other keys: but, altogether, this is a light and elegant production, and evinces an original and cultivated mind.

A Standard Tutor for the Organ. By J. A. Hamilton, Author of the "Musical Primer, Catechisms," &c. D'Almaine and Co.

For a man to call his own work upon any subject a standard one, is a bold speech, and we confess that, although Mr. Hamilton's claims to the use of such a term are strong, we do not much incline to it. His descriptions of the organ and its various capabilities are clear and concise—but he places the cart before the horse; they are addressed to the non-musical reader—for his rudiments of music follow, instead of precede the explanation of the instrument they are recommended to study. A man must know something of music before he can understand the properties of a musical instrument. Nevertheless, this work possesses much merit, and we fearlessly recommend it.

A Morning and Evening Cathedral Service; with an Accompaniment for the Organ. By Samuel S. Wesley. Chappell.

This work contains a preface which, we are sorry to say, speaks contemptuously of the noblest church services in the world: the works of Tallis, Byrd, Tye, Gibbons, Purcell, and a hundred other worthies, cannot be set aside for the vain pretensions of a modern, who thinks he can excel them. He imagines they erred in the treatment of their subjects: let us request him to look at home and conside his own "Credo," in which the word "invisible" has all the startling effec of Haydn's "light"—there is nothing at all "mysterious" about it. This is not the work of a poetical musician. Mr. Wesley may be, and indeed is a wonderfully executive organist; but he has no creative fancy beyond that of foolishly entering the ring with his betters. His work is coldly correct, and that is all.

Our reverence for the ancients may have provoked us to severity; but we do not like to hear lake birds cawing at the nightingales of Elizabeth's reign.

ENCOUNTER WITH A SLAVE FELUCCA.

ENCOUNTER WITH A SLAVE FELUCCA.

We learn from a letter, dated her Majesty's steam-vessel Growler, Jan. 19, off Sea Bar, that on the 12th of that month Lieutenant Lodwick (the first lieutenant of that ship), whilst cruising in the pinnace, on the look-out for slavers off that place (the Growler having left to go down to Gallinas), fell in with a felucca, which, on seeing the pinnace, hove to; and showed no resistance. When the pinnace, however, was within 30 yards, Lieutenant Lodwick observed a whole range of muskets fore and aft the felucca; he cheered his men on to get up to her before she discharged this fearful battery; but no sooner was the cheer out, than the felucca opened on the boat; fortunately, they fired too high. Lieutenant Lodwick now returned the fire with a round shot, and 180 balls in a bag. In the first volley from the felucca, the rim of Lieutenant Lodwick's hat was shot through; but the second volley told with mortal effect; two men were shot dead, and Lieutenant Lodwick and two men severely wounded—the lieutenant having been struck on the left knee and thigh. This left the pinnace with so few men that having had six of its oars shot away, it was obliged to leave the field, and the boat was picked up standing towards the Gallinas. Lieutenant Lodwick is reported out of danger, and he will also save his leg; the other two men are doing well. The gallantry of the Lieutenant has been properly reported to the Commodore. The boat and gear were literally riddled.

There were about 70 men on board this felucca; and the crew of a prize, captured a short time since, say that she is commanded by an Englishman, the crew consisting of English, French, and Americans. There must have been a great many killed and wounded on board her, as the crew of the pinnace could hear the groans. She has escaped no fewer than six times from our men-of-war cruisers. She is a long, low, sneaking craft, with a stump of a mast not six feet above the deck, but having a yard running up at an angle of 45 degrees above 180 feet long, with a sail that propels her through the water at such a rate as to distance the swiftest cruiser. We have heard that she was built at Barcelona, and has a crew of between 60 and 70 of the worst description of men-stealers. Her escapes have been almost miraculous, and it is believed that nothing but a steamer will catch her.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Emilius."—Neither of the children of King Louis Philippe was born in England. We were in error last week. Mr. James's names are George Paul Ransford.

"A Brighton Subscriber."—The navy of the United States, in 1841, consisted of 11 ships of the line, 13 frigates of the first class, 2 frigates of the second class, 23 sloops of war, 4 brigs, 8 schooners, 2 steam frigates, and several smaller vessels. The regular army of the United States was reduced, in 1842, to 9012. This force is employed chiefly to garrison the fortifications on the sea coast and the frontiers. The principal reliance of the country for defence is on the militia of the several States, amounting, by the returns of 1841, to 1,587,722 men. Of this number, about one-fifth, say 300,000 men, are uniformly equipped, and are mustered and drilled several times a year.

"M. P. C. R."—Westminster Abbey is open every day for Divine Service, at ten in the morning, and three in the afternoon.

"Vernon."—In July, 1843, the Hibernia, a Clyde-built steam ship, made her homeward voyage from Halifax to Liverpool, in eight days twenty-three hours; this being, certainly, one of the shortest, if not the shortest passage, on record.

"A Frequent Reader" is thanked for the sketch, for which, however, we had not room.

"Query Quipcrank."—The sum of thirteen-pence-halfpenny was once currently believed to be the sum received by the common hangman for the execution of each criminal; whereas, it has no reference to the payment made to that officer. Butler, in his notes to "Hudibras," observes:—"I cannot really say whence thirteen-pence-halfpenny was called 'Hangman's Wages,' unless in allusion to the Halifax law, or the customary law of the Forest of Hardwick, by which every felon taken within the liberty or precincts of the said forest with goods stolen to the value of thirteen-pence-halfpenny, should, after three market days in the town of Halifax, after his apprehension and condemnation, be taken to a gibbet there, and have his head cut off from his body." See "Popular Errors Explained and Illustrated," page 265.

"A Guernseyman."—The origin of the Spital Sermon was stated in our journal three weeks since. See page 188.

"An Officer of the Indian Army, U. S. Club." is thanked for his suggestion, which, however, did not reach us until the event had already been illustrated.

"E. F., Kilkenny."—The sketch of the O'Connell procession is declined.

"J. S. G., Cambridge-street."—We had not room for the account of the Meteor.

"J. S., Wallingford."—In all probability on shipboard.

"A Constant Subscriber."—As the article is always placed on table, it cannot be out of rule to partake of it. To the second question, no; they do not take them off themselves, but are removed by a lord in waiting.

"F. D."—The Baron Park who presided at the trial of Thurtell, and the present Baron Parke, are not the same individuals; the former judge is dead.

"Legalicus."—A bill does not become an Act of Parliament till it receives the Royal assent: if no day is named for the commencement of its operation, it comes into effect from the date of such assent. But in general a special day is named in the act itself, "from and after" which it operates. In a bill for the remission of taxes, the Government generally suspend the collection of the duties from the day the House of Commons agrees to the resolutions on which the act is founded; thus, though the bill is not yet passed, the auction duties ceased to be levied on Tuesday last. The title of a bill, as it "enacts" nothing, is not legally a part of it.

"B. M. T."—No.

"T. H.," Kendall.—A letter addressed to the ingenious baronet, at the Polytechnic Institution, would, doubtless, reach him.

"Inquirer."—In Sanscrit.

" H. W. R. M. ."—Consult the last Navy List.

"Isabella."—We cannot recommend either of the advertised nostrums.

"Wisbechiensis."—Neither of the three French railways named has been commenced. The time of completing the fourth is doubtful.

"An Ignorant Subscriber."—Ville is French.

"H. T. C.," Saville-row.—See the last Navy List.

"A Subscriber."—"To put a Spoke in a Man's Wheel" is to thwart him.

"An Old Subscriber," Brighton—Will be entitled only to a quarter's interest.

"A Constant Subscriber."—The extent of Salisbury Plain is about nine by five miles; whereas, Dartmoor extends nearly twenty-two miles from north to south, and fourteen miles from east to west.

"M. T.," Durham.—Bright blue and gold.

"K. Z.," Denbighshire.—The day of the month has never been precisely ascertained.

"W. G. M.," Edinburgh,—Has sent to us seven questions, replies to which would occupy seven times as many lines. We can only reply to the matters of fact. 1. Religious Dramas were regularly performed in London as early as 1180. 2. Shakspeare wrote for the Theatre. 3. The origin of the April Fool custom is unknown everywhere, though it is believed to be connected with a Hindoo festive custom held near the same period in India, called the Huli Festival, when persons are sent upon "impossible" errands, and are laughed at for their failure.

"W. S.," Chapter Coffee-house.—We have not received any communication on our Correspondent's "Numbering Machine."

"A. H." should apply to a respectable Solicitor.

"E. K.," Chipping Barnet, surmises the Mysterious Lady's Secret to be in her companion being the chief performer, and a ventriloquist.

"Locomotive" is thanked.

"W. J.," Cambridge.—We know nothing of the merits of the "Patent India Rubber Felt."

"W. W.," Wotton Bassett.—We have never seen a ladder lofty enough to reach the entire frontage of a six-story house.

"F. B.," Alford.—The unusual occurrence of Easter Day, this year, has already been explained in our Journal.

"Mercia."—There does not appear to be any Charity in the Metropolis for the purpose named by our Correspondent, but an application to one of the larger Hospitals might be successful.

"An Inquirer."—Hogarth's Print of the March to Finchley, is but of trifling value.

"R. G.," Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Mr. Dickens is the author of the Pickwick Papers.

"Alpha," Dronfield.—If the full address be forwarded, an explanation shall be sent.

"Dramaticus."—The fee for licensing any place for performance is One Guinea, which is usually paid by the Manager.

"W. H. C.," York, suggests the placing empty trucks at each end of a railway train, to prevent accidents.

"J. A. N.," Dublin.—If sent gratuitously.

"A. B.," Maidstone, is thanked, but we have not room.

"Chesnut" will, perhaps, favour us with a few sketches.

"Menelaus" is thanked.

"I. S. Z."—The difference in the editions of our Journal is that the Saturday's edition contains the latest intelligence.

"Cruikshanks."—The time of making up the Peninsular mails has been changed to the 7th, 17th, and 27th of the month; and when either of these days falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following Monday.

"W. S.," Birmingham.—We have not engraved the subject.

"E. H. B."—We are not aware of there being any Subscription Library in the Metropolis, of works on architecture.

"Felix," Chester, should order our edition which leaves London on Saturday night.

"C. R. S." may send a newspaper to the Cape of Good Hope, or Graham's Town, by her Majesty's Packets, postage free, provided the paper be made up open at the ends, and posted within seven days of publication.

"J. C.," Bristol.—We have not engraved either of the drop-scenes at Drury-lane Theatre.

"Anglais."—At any foreign bookseller's.

'R. S. T."—Any Savings Bank.

'G. C.," Clifton, may, probably, find the late Professor Daniell's Prize Essay on "Artificial Climate" in his volume of "Meteorological Essays."

'A Subscriber," Banbury.—We do not attempt to decide disputes in card-playing.

'B."—The qualification of a County Member is £600 per annum; that of a Borough Member £300 per annum. Formerly the law required the qualification to be exclusively in land, but it is now modified to property of any kind, to the above respective amounts.

'W. F.," Derby, is thanked.

'H. I.," Atherstone.—A ship is feminine.

"Barnstaple."—Divine Service is performed in French at the French Protestant Church, St. Martin-le-Grand.

"C. D."—The extract from the Gloucester Journal has not reached us.

"W. S.," Birmingham.—The author of "Ten Thousand a Year" is a barrister of the Inner Temple.

C. W. A." should apply to a respectable solicitor.

"W.," Ballymeny.—Yes.

"Hope."—The carriage would be liable to toll.

"Z. R. G."—The letter of M. Vidocq, inserted last week, was originally in French.

"A Subscriber," Falmouth.—We do not think the objection would be valid.

"G. W.," Birkenhead, is thanked for the corrections.

Ineligible.—"P. R. R., from the Italian, by I. A. F.;" "Love, Anon.;" "Lines, by Pea-Green."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 1845.

THE vexed question of the Post-office letter opening has again been discussed, but this time on general grounds; the personal and individual matters that gave so unfortunate an interest to former debates, having been kept comparatively out of sight. Mr. Sheil last week attempted to persuade the house to pass a resolution expressive of "regret" that letters should have been violated. The House of Commons would regret no such thing. This week Mr. T. Duncombe moved for leave to bring in a bill for preserving the inviolability of letters passing through the Post-office, placing them by law, on the same footing as papers in a man's desk, which cannot be seized or inspected except by a search warrant issued on oath. But the Government is determined to maintain the power in all its vigour; Sir James Graham admits that it is a detestable and odious one; but public duty and consideration for his successors, compel him to reserve to himself the hateful privilege. Nobody defends the power, but the majority concur in keeping it; its convenience renders its immorality endurable, and all Governments are inclined to say with Kent in "Lear," when breaking open the despatches of the Steward,

> Leave, gentle wax!
> To know our enemy's minds we'd rip their hearts,
> Their papers are more lawful!

And so, though Lord John Russell partially condemns, though Lord Howick wholly denounces the power, and Sir James Graham acknowledges it is very wrong, and hints that after all he has not found it of much utility, it is still to be permitted. The house having joined in a very general scolding of the Home Secretary, says to him by its vote, in the spirit of old Dogberry, "Dost thou hear now what is likely to fall upon thee? thou art to continue, thou naughty knave, thou art to continue."

The most curious part of the debate was the compliments exchanged by Sir James Graham and Mr. Duncombe; certainly no Conservative member has had half the kind things said of him this session by a member of the Cabinet, as Mr. Duncombe was favoured with on Tuesday night; on the other hand Mr. Duncombe promises that all personal feelings in the matter shall be buried in oblivion. It is a sort of shaking hands after the fight is over to show that the combatants bear no malice. As a parting shot, however, the member for Finsbury pledges himself that this "odious, iniquitous, and villanous power," shall be carried into another arena; he will test its legality by action in the Court of Queen's Bench.

A NOTABLE instance of how unsafe it is for a Government to declare the "impossibility" of finding a remedy for a flagrant public evil, occurred on Tuesday evening. The subject of the Interment in Towns was discussed on a motion of Mr. Mackinnon's, who has kept the question in his hands without doing much with it, except getting up an annual talk about it. But every year increases the number both of the dead and the living; the city is more crowded; the grave-yard is more filled; the bodies of the dead are outraged by the means adopted to make room for many, where there is space but for few; and the living are liable to contagion and disease as clearly to be traced to this heaping together of the relics of mortality, and disturbing them ere they have undergone the last change of "dust to dust," as any effect to any cause whatever. But it is useless to dwell on the horrors that have been made so familiar to us; our business is with the course the Executive Government took on this question of public health and public feeling.

To power when joined with will, all things are possible; the only consideration is the more or less of difficulty that may be met with; but for a Government to speak of "impossibility," in a case where the health of the people is endangered by no natural circumstance of soil or climate, but by a mere practice, which, in many countries has been abolished, and in others is unknown—though death and burial are common to all—is ridiculous. And what has been the effect of the declaration? The common sense of the Legislature places the Government in a minority, by passing a resolution declaring that the practice of "burying in towns is prejudicial to the health of the inhabitants, and deserves the serious attention of Parliament." This was the amendment proposed by Mr. Duncombe to the resolution of Mr. Mackinnon, and carried against the Government by a majority of 17, in a not very full house. It would almost seem as if the member for Finsbury had some peculiar faculty for obtaining majorities against the Ministry on such questions as this, where party opinions and feelings are suspended, and facts are dealt with as plain facts ought to be. Certainly, no member of the house has more frequently succeeded in placing the Government in this awkward position. Every effort was made to induce Mr. Mackinnon to withdraw what was, as Sir James Graham termed it, a "mere abstract resolution," and to bring in a "bill," which would receive "every consideration from the Government." The meaning of this is, that the measure might be proposed, but good care would be taken it should not have a chance of passing. Unless a measure is introduced by the Government, or is adopted (as far as making no objection) by it, it is impossible it can succeed. It is thrust aside for public business, it is delayed and thwarted in every way, and if it ever gets so far, it is strangled in committee. Such has been the fate of hundreds of "bills," and for these reasons Mr. Mackinnon refused to introduce a bill at all; he preferred a resolution, which, amended by Mr. Duncombe, has been carried; it pledges the house against the practice complained of, declares it demands serious consideration, and negatives the assertion of the "impossibility" of touching the question. So far, one step at least is gained towards improvement.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY'S DRAWING ROOM.

On Thursday, her Majesty held her first Drawing Room for the season at St. James's Palace.

Shortly before two o'clock, her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the ladies and gentlemen of the household, left Buckingham Palace in three of the Royal carriages, and proceeded to St. James's, escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards.

The Duke of Cambridge and other branches of the Royal Family, the Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, the Great Officers of State, the Members of the Cabinet, and others having the privilege of the entrée, began to arrive in full state shortly after one o'clock. The magnificence of the equipages, and the splendid liveries of the servants, attracted universal attention.

The general company was exceedingly numerous, and presented a very brilliant spectacle.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, who appeared in excellent health and spirits, were loudly cheered.

The Lady Caroline Leveson Gower, third daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, Lady Adele Villiers, youngest daughter of the Earl and Countess of Jersey, the Hon. Miss F. Scarlett, second daughter of the late Lord Abinger, Miss Lister, niece of Lord John Russell, Miss Hogg, daughter of Mr. Hogg, M.P., and Miss Wyndham, eldest daughter of the Countess of Listowell, by her ladyship's former marriage, were among the fair débutantes in high life who were presented to her Majesty.

VISIT OF THE QUEEN TO THE GREAT BRITAIN.—The Queen is expected to visit the Great Britain steamer on Tuesday next, and the Dwarf iron steam vessel, fitted with a screw propeller, at present in the basin at Woolwich Dockyard, is named for the honour of conveying her Majesty to the place where the Great Britain is moored, off Blackwall. It is not yet known where her Majesty will embark.

THE HAMPSTEAD MURDER.

The Grand Jury have returned a true bill against Thomas Henry Hocker for "Highway robbery on James Delarue, and stealing from him one watch, one ring, and twelve sovereigns, his goods and monies, and immediately before the said robbery, wounding the said James Delarue." The Grand Jury also presented a true bill against Thomas Henry Hocker for "the wilful murder of James Delarue."

Hocker's brief was handed to Messrs. Clarkson and Ballantine through the sheriffs, consequently the expense of his defence falls upon the county. On Sunday last, when his fellow-prisoner Connor was introduced to the chapel, observing his dejected appearance, he stood up and closely scrutinised his features. Upon returning to his cell, he inquired very earnestly as to the particulars of his case, to which he paid great attention.

We annex a plan of the neighbourhood in which this atrocious murder was perpetrated; and in illustration of the evidence, it will be serviceable to those who are unacquainted with the locality.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE OF HOCKER.

The prisoner is in his 20th year, but looks two or three years older. He is about the middle height, and has the appearance of a strong, hardy young man. The expression of his countenance is the reverse of pleasing. There is a settled sullenness and fixedness of purpose in his general aspect, much too marked for any one to fail being struck with it. His features are remarkably large and striking. His eyes are deeply embedded in his face, and his nose and mouth are of unusually large dimensions. He has a narrow retiring forehead, a long face, and flat cheeks. His head is remarkably thin towards the back part, and is surmounted by an ample crop of long dark brown hair, which looks as if never disturbed by comb or brush. The conformation of the head altogether would form a fine study for phrenologists. The existence of the animal propensities is strongly indicated.

POSTSCRIPT.

TRIAL OF HOCKER

FOR THE

MURDER OF MR. DELARUE.

Yesterday (Friday) having been fixed for the trial of Thomas Henry Hocker, for the murder of James Delarue, the Central Criminal Court was much crowded by persons attracted by curiosity. Amongst the distinguished personages on the bench were Lord William Lennox, Lord George Lennox, and Lord Arthur Lennox; the Duke de Broglie, Lord Sheffield, the Sardinian Minister, the Prussian Ambassador, the Chevalier Bunsen, Baron Arneim, Baron Koller, Baron Brenner, the Earl of Lucan, Dr. Gordon, the Prince de Brunswick, the Earl of Bective, Mr. Hope, M.P., Capt. Garth.

No ladies were admitted into the body of the Court, but there were a few in the galleries.

A picture of the scene of the murder had been painted by an artist named Hill, and a plan of the ground prepared by Messrs. Adams and Sibley, the surveyors, for the information of the Court and Jury.

Soon after nine o'clock Hocker was put forward and arraigned. He appeared a little altered since his committal, and looked somewhat thinner in the face, and seemed anxious and thoughtful, but his conduct was marked by that self-possession which had characterised him at the examinations before the magistrates and at the inquest. He pleaded "Not Guilty," in a low but firm tone of voice, to the indictment charging him with the murder—to the Coroner's inquisition—and also to the indictment charging him with the robbery of the deceased.

The counsel for the prosecution were Mr. Bodkin and Mr. M. Chambers; and for the prisoner, Mr. Clarkson and Mr. Ballantine.

At a few minutes after ten o'clock the Judges Coltman and Coleridge entered the court.

The prisoner Hocker was again put forward, and bowed respectfully and somewhat gracefully to the Court. His demeanour was very unlike that which might have been expected from a person in such a situation.

The indictment having been again read, and the prisoner having again pleaded not guilty,

Mr. Bodkin rose to state the case for the Crown, and commenced by calling upon the jury to discharge from their minds all the impressions and influences which they might have received before coming into the box. The prisoner was charged with the murder of James Delarue, and the only motive to the dreadful act appeared to be the desire, on the part of the prisoner, to possess himself of the property of the deceased person. Delarue was a music master, and on terms of close intimacy with the prisoner. On Friday evening, the 21st of February, he left his lodging in Whittlebury-street, Euston square, and was shortly afterwards found murdered. The learned counsel then proceeded to describe the nature of the locality in which the murder was committed, making occasional reference to the plan of the surveyors above alluded to as he went along; and next, shortly to relate the circumstances attending the first discovery of the murder, as will be found proved in the following evidence. He apprehended that there could be no doubt that on the evening he had mentioned, James Delarue met his death by violence at the hands of some person or other, and the great question for them to determine would be, by whom that violence was committed. This duty he called upon them to discharge calmly and dispassionately, and without reference to anything which they might have heard previously to going into that box.

Edward Hilton was the first witness called. He stated, I am a baker at West End. On Friday night, 21st February, I was out on my business at Haverstock terrace. At about ten minutes after seven o'clock I heard the cry of murder coming from the direction of Belsize-lane, where the body was found. I heard the cry of murder six or eight times. I delivered some bread and some bran at Haverstock-terrace, and during the time I was doing this it was that I heard the cries of murder. I went toward the field and cried—Halloa! Halloa!—but no one answered; and I gave information to a constable, and then drove away.

John Baldock, 304 S: I was on duty on Friday, 21st Feb., at Hampstead, and saw the last witness. In consequence of what he told me, I went up Haverstock-terrace, but neither saw nor heard anything. I then went down Belsize lane, and got into the Hampstead-road again. Near the George public-house, I met another constable named Fletcher, and we went together into the field and along by the wall, near the corner of which we found the dead body of the deceased. The body was afterwards removed to the Yorkshire Grey, public-house, where an inquest was held upon it. The body when we first found it was lying flat on its back. Both the coats of the deceased were open, and the right hand glove was off and lying near the body. We also found a hat and a pocket-handkerchief. The body was warm, but quite dead when we got up to it. The injuries appeared to be on the head. There was a pool of blood at the head and another at the feet. I afterwards searched the body. There was no watch or money on the person of the deceased. I found a letter in the coat pocket, which I gave to Inspector Grey. Fletcher, after we had found the body, went away and left me alone with it; in about a quarter of an hour a person joined me; he came from the direction of Primrose-hill and Avenue-road. There are foot-paths across these fields in many directions, by which persons can get into the Avenue-road. My attention was first called to the person by his whistling and singing. He said, as he came up, "Halloa, policeman." I said, "I have a serious case here." He said, "What is it?" I said, "I have a man here who, I think, has cut his throat." He said, "Are you sure he is quite dead?" I said, "Yes, he is quite dead." The person then stooped down, and felt the pulse of the dead man. He next remarked that I had a nasty job. He said he had been in the habit of travelling across those fields for many years on his way from the city, and had property with him; generally having with him money, a watch, and a ring, which he wore on his finger. He added that he had been cautioned by his parents not to come that way of a night. He next said I had got a cold job, and had better have some brandy, offering me a shilling to get some. I refused for some time, but, on his pressing me, I took it. A policeman's lamp was brought with the stretcher; the body was placed upon it, and carried away. The person of whom I have been speaking followed as far as Belsize-lane. He had a mackintosh on; I cannot say who the man was who came up and spoke to me, as he was muffled up; he was a young man, and rather tall—about five feet eight.

To Mr. Justice Coleridge: His face was muffled up with the collar of the mackintosh.

Cross examined by Mr. Clarkson: Knew the time from having seen the clock a few minutes before. The person of whom I have been speaking went up to the body and took hold of the hand. I don't know whether he said, "As you are left alone I will stay with you till the stretcher comes," but I think he did. I know he did. He did not shed tears, but he said he felt "rather queer." He said he felt very much shocked at such a sight. He remained with me about a quarter of an hour. There were several other persons came up with the stretcher. I was examined before the coroner previously to being examined before the magistrate. When I was before the magistrate the second time I stated something different from what I stated the first time. It was contrary to my duty to receive money without reporting it. It was not because I had received a shilling that I changed my story. I had quite forgotten the shilling. Before I saw the sergeant I saw a gentleman coming into the Hampstead-road. This was about three minutes after the alarm of murder.

Re-examined: The name of the gentleman is Kelnor, who told me he resided at 4, Haverstock terrace.

Mr. Clarkson objected to anything being stated that passed between the officer and this gentleman, on the ground of its not being evidence.

Mr. Justice Coleridge overruled the objection.

Re-examination continued: It was about three minutes after I had seen Hilton that I saw the gentleman. I had a conversation with him. He went into the field with me; but he parted from me before I met the sergeant, and went down Pond-street. I reported to the sergeant that I had seen the gentleman.

Hilton was here recalled, and stated, in answer to the Judge, that the reason why he was so accurate about the time was, that he saw the clocks as he went from house to house—bakers' shops, and so forth.

Thomas Fletcher: I am a police-sergeant, and recollect being called by Baldock on Friday evening, 21st Feb. I went with him into the field, and saw the dead body. I examined the body, which was dressed in a great coat and under-coat. Both were open, so as to expose the waistcoat and shirt front. The dead man was lying on his back, quite straight. There was a walking stick lying by him. The small stick produced is that which was found. No property was found upon him. I did not examine his pockets at that time, but did afterwards. I went to procure a stretcher, and afterwards helped to carry the body to the dead-house, near the Yorkshire Grey.

James Gray: I am an inspector of police at Hampstead. I remember a communication being made to me by Fletcher at about 10 minutes past 8. I was at the station-house at that time. I received the letter produced, signed "Caroline," from Mr. Perring the surgeon; it was taken from the pocket of the deceased. The following morning, between six and seven, I went to the field in company with a constable named Thomas. He found a button near the place where the dead man was found. I told him to keep it; he handed it to me at the station-house.

Wm. Satterthwaite: I live in Heath-street, Hampstead. I was not examined either before the magistrate or coroner. On Friday night, Feb. 21, I went with the police to the field. It was when the stretcher was there. I ran forward and saw a person with Baldock. I should know the person again if I saw him. (On looking at the prisoner) I recognise him as that person. He was standing near the feet of the deceased. I said to him—Are you sure he is quite dead? He said, "Yes, I have felt his pulse, and it has ceased beating." I said to a young man, that the deceased was like Daniel Delarue; and the young man said he reminded him also of that person. I then said I thought it was a shoemaker. Hocker said, "Oh, no! it is not he; he seems quite the gentleman; he has a beautiful white hand, and his dress is that of a gentleman." The light was turned on the face of the deceased before the body was put on the stretcher. Hocker was at the feet of the body, and had every opportunity of seeing his face as well as I. After this, I said to Hocker, "What caused you to come that lonesome way?" He said, "Why, if you must know, Sir, I was coming from St. John's Wood to Hampstead, and that is the nearest way;" that he was going to Hampstead on important business, and could not, under these circumstances, help it. When we got to Belsize-lane I took the lamp from the policeman; the body was lifted over the gate. The prisoner then asked me to let him have a light. I could not open the lamp, and he showed me how. He lighted his cigar from the lamp, and I then had an opportunity of seeing his features, Cross-examined: I am a journeyman shoemaker, and work for Mr. Ashenden, in the Edgeware-road. I am not a housekeeper, but have lodged five years in one house; I am a married man, with a family. I had never seen the prisoner before the night in question, but he was the only person I talked to in going across the fields. I did not attend either of the inquiries before the coroner. After I had read the case in the papers I came forward to state what the prisoner had said. On the Monday morning after the last examination, I went to Marylebone-office, and made a statement to Mr. Fell, the chief clerk. I was afterwards taken to Newgate to identify the prisoner, and a gentleman in the governor's office took down my evidence; this was on Thursday, 27th March. The prisoner was not present.

To the Court: I was not sworn.

Re-examined: I went into the prison-yard and saw the prisoner Hocker among ten or eleven more. I recognised him immediately.

Mr. Richard Rogers Perring: I am a surgeon residing at Hampstead. I handed the letter produced to the officer Gray. It was taken from the great coat pocket of deceased. I examined the body at nine o'clock on the night of Feb. 21. I found a large wound about four inches long on the upper and back part of the head on the left side. There was a smaller one immediately in front, a bruise on the left temple, and a wound on the right eye-brow, from which blood had been oozing. That was all I discovered at that time. After the head was shaved I discovered two or three more wounds. They were all scalp wounds, the skull was not fractured. On examining the interior of the head I found extravasated blood corresponding with the part of the head on which the wounds were. The cause of death was concussion of the brain, produced by some blunt instrument, such as a stick. The wounds must have been produced by more blows than one.

Cross-examined: I come to the conclusion that death was produced by concussion of the brain, from the fact that the brain was in a perfectly healthy state, and from the other circumstances. There was no fracture of the skull. The appearance of the head led me to conclude that this was one of the cases of concussion of the brain which left no marks upon the brain itself—no congestion of the vessels, or anything of that sort. The blows must have been of considerable violence. A poker or heavy club or stick might produce such injuries as those which the deceased had received. The blows need not have taken some time in the infliction; they might have been struck in rapid succession. Concussion might be produced without injury to the skull itself. I was not puzzled to ascertain the cause of death; a careful examination of the scalp brought me easily to the conclusion. I have stated concussion of the brain is not likely to follow from shaking; I don't believe it would follow from such a cause. Concussion must be the result of great violence—either blows or falls. I have seen three sticks; the large one is a likely weapon to have produced such injuries as those described. Such blows could be given without injuring the skull, because they were given on the ridge of the skull. Had they been given on the top, I think they must have fractured it.

Re-examined: That part of the human skull which I have described as the "ridge" is of very great strength.

James Thomas, police constable: I found a button a few yards from where the body lay. I gave it to Mr. Gray, the inspector, about nine o'clock the same morning I found it. It was in my possession about an hour and three quarters.

George Leveridge: I live at Mr. Wildgoss's, in High-street, Portland-road, and am a porter. On Friday evening, 21st Feb., I was at the bar of the Swiss Cottage, when the prisoner came in and went to the bar-parlour. He asked for the parlour two or three times. He had a macintosh cloak on. He came in and shoved the door open as if in a flurried state. I had known him before for about three years. I have no doubt about his being the person.

Cross-examined: I did not notice whether the gas was lighted or not. It was not dark. I went in to have a glass of spirits after my rounds. I suppose the gas was alight.

Richard Grenham: I am waiter and potboy at the Swiss Cottage. I re collect the prisoner coming on the night of 21st February. He had a glass of rum and water, and gave me a shilling to pay for it, telling me to bring him a fourpenny piece, and keep the twopence myself. I recollect Leveridge being there also.

Cross-examined: We don't burn gas; we burn spirits. When I went before the magistrate I said I did not think the prisoner was the person, but he replied that he was the person. He did not remain in the parlour more than a quarter of an hour. I did not see the prisoner reading the newspaper to a gentleman who was sitting there.

Joseph Henry Naish: At the time of the murder I lived at 17, Old Church-street, Paddington; I now live at Liverpool. On the 21st of February I had business in Regent's Park, and was in the Avenue-road going towards London, when I saw a person at about one hundred yards from the Swiss Cottage. It was about seven o'clock. I heard a cry of murder, which came from the direction of the fields; and almost immediately afterwards I saw a person come from the hedge side. He was going towards Portland town. That person was the prisoner at the bar. I had seen him before. When I saw him he was running. I asked him if he heard the cries of "Murder!" but he made no answer. He stopped for a moment, and then went straight on. He did not walk, and he did not run—it was a sort of dog-trot. I afterwards went to the place where the murder was committed. It was about three fields from the spot where I had stood on the night of the 21st Feb.

Cross-examined by Mr. Clarkson: I was in the Avenue road when I heard the cry of murder. The prisoner was coming away from the direction of the Swiss Cottage. It was nearly ten minutes before I saw the prisoner that I had heard the cry of "murder." I continued standing there until the prisoner came up.

Sarah Jane Philps was the next witness called. As soon as she stepped into the witness-box, and saw the prisoner, she sobbed aloud, and nearly fainted: I know the prisoner, and had known him ten or eleven weeks before the 21st Feb. He represented himself as a clerk in the Stock Exchange. He used to come and see me at Mrs. Edwards's, in Bath-place. I used to visit Mrs. Maria Edwards, at a gentleman's house, 50, Portland-place. He called on me in Portland-place on the evening of 21st February. I did not expect him, although I thought he might come. Mrs. Edwards was there. He spoke of his dress, and remarked that there was a little blood on the front of his shirt. I did not ask him what he had been about. He said he had come from Grafton street. I noticed dirt on his clothes, and asked him if he had fallen down. He said he had. He gave me to understand that he had been tipsy, and I thought that was what had caused him to fall. He said his governor had made his nose bleed. He used to call his employer in the city, his "governor." He showed me a watch and a ring. I had never seen him with a watch before. The watch had a chain to it; it was a chain that passed round the neck. It was a silver watch, and resembled that produced; the ring he showed me resembled that produced. He said he had purchased the watch that day, and I think he said he had given eight guineas for it. He took the ring out of his waistcoat pocket, and said that was the ring he had told me of. I asked him why he did not wear it. He said it was too large for him. I have seen his writing. He used to write to me, and I have seen him after his writing. He used to write sometimes with blue ink and sometimes black. I cannot say the letter produced is in his handwriting, but if I had received a letter in that hand, I should have believed it to be his.

Mrs. Maria Edwards: I was in charge of a house in Portland place last February. I allowed the last witness to sleep there. I know the prisoner, and have seen him often. I recollect his coming to Portland-place on the Friday before I heard of the murder at Hampstead. He had a macintosh on. He saw the last witness. He had a silver watch with a chain of a gold colour; he said he had bought it. He produced a ring which he said was too large.

Cross-examined by Mr. Ballantine: His macintosh lay on a chair during the whole time he was there—about two hours.

At half-past one o'clock the Court and Jury retired for refreshment.

Upon the return of the jury, James Hocker was called and examined by Mr. Chambers: I am brother of the prisoner. On the 21st of February I lived with my brother in Portland Town. On the evening of the 21st he left his home about a quarter before seven o'clock. My father's residence is about 20 minutes' walk from Haverstock Hill. In the afternoon of the 21st of February my brother told me that he was going to Bath-place to receive some money, as Mrs. Edwards had promised to lend him 10 or 12 sovereigns. The prisoner returned home about 12 or 1 o'clock. He told me that he had received 12 sovereigns. He then showed his shirt, the sleeve of which was torn off. He told me that he had been having a little squabble with Sarah Cox, in which his shirt was torn. I do not know Sarah Cox, but my brother I am aware corresponded with her. My brother then went to bed. On the following morning he gave my father a sovereign, and my mother a sovereign, and he paid me ten shillings which I had lent him some months ago. My brother had not had any regular employment for seven months previous to February. On the Saturday we were together at my father's lodgings, when Mr. Watson alluded to the subject of the murder, and said what a dreadful thing it was, in which I joined. My brother said, "Oh! that's a dreary subject; we have met here to enjoy ourselves—let it drop." I am well aware that my brother knew the late Mr. Delarue, and that he used to address letters to him under the signature of James Cooper, Esq. On the Sunday night I asked him if he knew who the murdered person at Hampstead was? He replied, he did not. I said, "It is poor Delarue." He seemed much affected, and I think he cried. On the same morning, my father said to the prisoner, "This is a sad thing about poor Delarue, and as you are so intimate with him you ought to go and recognise his body," He said that he would, but while he was putting his coat on my mother came home, and said the body had been recognised, when my brother observed, "that he was glad of it, for he thought if he had gone to see it he should have fainted." The prisoner appeared greatly agitated. I knew that my brother had pledged a watch for £3 some time since, and when he showed me one on Saturday night, I thought it was most likely the same. The watch now produced I am certain is the same. I remember policeman Sco ney coming to our lodgings on the Wednesday following the 21st of February, and asked if either me or my brother had a watch. The prisoner seemed confused and stammered in his answers. I said to him, "Tom, tell the policeman all about the watch." After some further conversation the watch was found under the pillow of his bed. I afterwards saw a duplicate of a watch in pawn, and I said, "How is this; I thought the pawnbroker would keep the duplicate?" He replied, "Yes, this is not the watch I pledged. Delarue gave it to me on Friday morning." My brother was very intimate with Mr. Delarue. In the summer time they used to walk in the fields together twice a day four days in the week. I remember, last summer, one day my brother brought home £3 or £4, and said Mr. Delarue had befriended him; had given him the money. My brother writes an excellent hand. He was brought up for a schoolmaster. He never held any situation in the City. I cannot think the letter produced is in his hand writing.

Cross-examined: My brother, when I was present, always called Mr. Delarue by the name of Cooper. I imagine that he thought at first that his name was Cooper. I knew Mr. Delarue was very fond of my brother, and frequently assisted him with money. He once gave him a ring.

Thomas Hocker: I am father of the prisoner. Live in Portland-town. Prisoner took tea with me on Friday, about hour o'clock. I remember his going out about half-past six. He had a macintosh on when he went out. He said he was going out to get a loan of £10 from Mrs. Edwards. He said he had a note from her, promising to lend him that sum; and he would go and get it. The macintosh now produced belonged to the prisoner, which he wore on the evening of Friday, the 21st of February. I believe it to be the same. The trousers produced belonged also to him. (Here the father shed tears, and could scarcely articulate.) I gave them to the officers, who came on Wednesday. The ring produced I found among cuttings of leather where I work. On the Saturday after the Friday of the murder, prisoner breakfasted at my house. I noticed his shirt sleeve to be torn, which he said was done in frolicking the overnight. He showed me some sovereigns the following morning. He said he got them from Mrs. Edwards. I never saw Delarue, but have heard my son speak of him under the name of Cooper. I asked why he went by two names; he said he was somewhat eccentric. I never saw a watch in my son's possession before the 22nd. We conversed about the murder, but my son never told us that he was near the spot on the night in question.

Mr. Watson: Am landlord of the house in Charles-street. On the 22nd I was there, and said there had been a shocking murder committed at Hampstead. The father said, "I wonder who did it?" I described how it was done, and said there were three strangers in the neighbourhood, and they were suspected, because they generally carried sticks. I said the brain was smashed. The father said, "Oh the cold blooded rascals. I wonder who did it." The prisoner said, "Let us talk about something else." Prisoner's brother then came in; he said a love-letter had been found in the gentleman's pocket. Prisoner offered to sing us a song. The two brothers then sang; after which I said I was glad they were now friends, because they had had a fall out. They then sang a duet. Before he sung the second song he showed me the wristband of his shirt. He held up his arm and I saw that his coat was torn under the arm-pit. I said he had been in some rough work. His father said he had been in some rough usage, when prisoner said he had only been romping with some girls. He then showed me a pair of new boots. I first heard of the name of the murdered person on Monday, Feb. 24. I knew that he had been intimate with prisoner. I then gave information to Scotney, the policeman.

Edward Scotney: Am a sergeant of police. On the Wednesday after the murder I went to Victoria-place, about one o'clock in the morning. Prisoner let me in. I asked if Thomas Hocker lived there. He said, "I am the person." I was in uniform. I walked inside. I asked him if he knew of the death of James Delarue. He said yes. He said he was an acquaintance. I then took him into custody. He did not say anything. I then desired to see his room. He told me to follow him. I told him I wished to search the room. He said, "Yes, certainly." I found his brother in bed. He desired his brother to get up and dress. I told him that I wished to search for a watch that I believed belonged to Mr. Delarue. He said I might. His brother told him to tell me all he knew about it. He then walked to the head of the bed, took the watch from under the pillow, which he gave me, and said it was Delarue's. He said Delarue gave it him to pledge for him. He said there was no chain to it. He then gave me some duplicates relating to other property belonging to Delarue, which he had pledged for him. One of the duplicates was for a ring.

Cross-examined: Am sure he said there was no chain to it. I believe I told this to the magistrate, but am not sure.

Francis Partridge: Am inspector of the A division. On the 25th of February I went to the prisoner's father's house. Scotney went with me. I told him he was apprehended on suspicion of causing the death of Delarue. I went to his lodgings, and found an old coat on the outside of the bed. I found also a pair of trousers between the bed and the sacking. On the 26th I went again with Haynes and Shackell to Victoria-place. I found a wristband of a shirt. It appeared to have been torn off. There are marks of blood on it. At 17, Charles-street, I got a pair of trousers and waistcoat, which are those now produced. There was a spot of blood on the waistcoat, but it is now worn off. There is a large stain of blood on the knees of the trousers. On the same day I found an ink-bottle containing blue ink. I also found note-paper; also some wafers, with the letter T on them. The note I now produce has a wafer on it, which is exactly corresponding to those I found at the father's. I compared the note-paper with the letter. They appeared to be the same. I received a sovereign from the father.

Joseph Shackell: I am an inspector of police. I produce a mackintosh, on the front of which there is blood, and on the back mud and blood. On February 26, I went to the prisoner's lodging, which we searched. I found a button there, which was taken by Haynes. I produce a shirt found at the father's house. I fitted the wristband, and found that it belongs to the same shirt. I perceive marks of blood on the other wristband. I also produce some stockings much stained with blood at the knees. I went to the deceased's apartments, where I found a bill for a watch. I also found some other papers, which Gray took. I produce the bill for the watch, which corresponds with the name and number on the watch.

John Haynes: Am inspector of the detective police. I went to prisoner's lodging, where I found a coat button. I then went to Clerkenwell prison, and desired prisoner to take off his coat, upon which I found some spots of blood in the front. There were also some on the cuffs; and on the outside of the lappel, on the right side, there appears a considerable quantity of blood, and the pocket appears as if a bloody hand had been put in. There are three buttons off the coat; the button I found corresponds exactly, and so does the button I found near the spot where the body of Delarue was found. I desired prisoner to take off his drawers and trousers. There were stains of blood on both of them. Attempts appeared to have been made to take out the stains of blood. On the prisoner's legs there was a wound to account for the blood.

Cross-examined: The button on my own coat does not correspond with those I found. They are common horn buttons, very common ones indeed. I have produced all the clothing I have. Mr. Delarue's coat is not here. The drawers appear to have been saturated with blood which I found at his father's house, but the bloody trousers I took off his person.

Daniel Delarue: I live at 55, Whittlebury-street. Am a compositor. My brother resided with me, and was a teacher of music. I saw his body at the inquest. I saw him on the Sunday previous to the 21st. He then had a watch, which is the one now produced. There was a gold chain to it, which he always wore round his neck. The ring produced belonged to my brother. On the same day I saw it on his finger on the right hand. He wore a brown coat outside, and a black one underneath.

Cross examined: My brother never went by the name of Curtis that I am aware of. I knew he went sometimes by the name of Cooper.

Susan Kitchener: Live at Whittlebury-street. In February last Mr. Delarue lived there. I saw him on the 21st. He went out at six o'clock on that day. He said he should be in in about an hour. He told me to keep his fire in. He never came back. I afterwards saw his dead body. He wore his watch in his waistcoat. It had a gold chain, which he wore round his neck. I saw that watch at nine o'clock on Friday morning. In the course of that day I noticed his waistcoat, and at two o'clock the watch appeared to be there.

By the Court: At two o'clock I saw the chain from one pocket to the other, and saw the shape of his watch in his waistcoat.

Re-examined: The watch now produced I believe to have been Mr. Delarue's.

Eleanor Edwards: I reside in Bath-place. I know the prisoner. I have known him about 10 weeks. He never applied to me to lend him money. I never promised him. Never lent him any.

By the Court: I know no other member of his family.

Mr. Fell: Am clerk at Marylebone Police Court. At the conclusion of the examination on the 26th of February the prisoner said, "I can get witnesses to prove I did not quit my home till a quarter or ten minutes to eight on Friday evening."

The letter found in the pocket of the deceased, signed "Caroline," was here read by Mr. Straight, and handed up to the Judges.

Mr. Bodkin: This is the case, my lord, for the prosecution.

Mr. Clarkson: Mr. Ballantine and myself have been retained by the Sheriffs on the part of the prisoner, who, however, wishes to make his own defence; and we, therefore, apply for permission for him to do so.

The Court: Prisoner at the bar, if you wish for five minutes to prepare yourself it shall be granted to you.

Prisoner: Thank you, my lord, I will avail myself of your indulgence.

Upon the return of the prisoner he addressed the Court from a written paper, of which the following is the substance:—

I wish, my lord, to make to you a few statements. He had carefully read the depositions, but found nothing in them against him. He had carefully considered them, and he wished not to allege anything against their truth. The two grand questions were, how his clothes came to be saturated with blood, and how he came into possession of the property. As regards the first, nothing on earth should induce him to say one word. He had urgent reasons for saying so. He should die a martyr, or live a traitor. After such an ignominious exposure as had been made of him, he would not say anything; but he was too much of an Englishman to fear death. The deceased had often offered him pecuniary assistance; and, about two months before his death he lent me £4. I did not afterwards acquaint him of my embarrassment. I have had a good deal of property belonging to deceased. The deceased entrusted me with a watch and ring. I had to dispose of them for £3 17s. The deceased was anxious to make up a certain amount. I pledged the property and gave the duplicates to the officer. His watch wanted some repairs, and he gave it me to get repaired. He also gave me the ring. He also said he would put me in a good situation. On the morning of the day he was murdered, he said he had got good news for me. He then lent me £12, which I falsely said I got from Mrs. Edwards. At seven o'clock I went to the Swiss Cottage, where I stopped three quarters of an hour. Another gentleman was there. It being a cold night, I stood at the fire, but no one saw his hands to be bloody. After he left, he went across the path where the deed was committed. A policeman there said to me, "Sir, there is a bad work here—here is a dead man." I felt the pulse of the deceased, and found he was dead. I stopped 40 minutes with him. I told Baldock that I always carried a stiletto with me because I often passed through the fields. I accompanied the policeman with the body. I had made an appointment at Portland place, and had stayed too late; so I left them. About a year ago I courted a young lady; we met and loved in secret, and I introduced her to a man I looked upon as my best friend. I had represented Delarue as a man of property and a gentleman. He afterwards betrayed me, and the father refused my suit; and Delarue became her lover and seduced her. Such was the man whom I hate, although he is now dead. I penned the note that was found on the person of the deceased. In that note the assignation was made on the very spot where he had become a seducer, and where he had met his fate. When I found it was Delarue, I wished to feel his pulse in order to ascertain whether he was dead, and thus my clothes became stained in some measure. He could not prove that he was not on the spot unless he produced witnesses whom he should betray, and it would involve others in addition to himself. The stick produced in evidence was not produced today.

Mr. Chambers then requested Baldock to be produced. He said, in answer to the Court, that he did not remember the prisoner to have shown a stiletto to him. He did not ask me whether it was lawful to carry a stiletto. He told me he frequently passed that way with property about him, but said nothing about a stiletto.

The learned Judge asked the prisoner if he had any witnesses?

Prisoner: No, my lord.

The learned Judge then summed up, and recapitulated the evidence at some length, pointing out the main bearings of the case.

The Jury retired, and shortly afterwards returned a verdict of "GUILTY."

The learned Judge (Coleridge) then pronounced, in a most impressive manner, SENTENCE OF DEATH ON THE PRISONER.

Return of the Court to Claremont.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert will leave Buckingham Palace to-day (Saturday), for Claremont, where they intend to remain in comparative retirement for a few days. The Queen, his Royal Highness, and the Royal Family, will afterwards proceed from Claremont to the Isle of Wight for a short period.

Return of Dr. Wolff.—Dr. Wolff has arrived in England from Bokhara, and is about to publish a narrative of his sufferings and dangers in that territory. Dr. Wolff intends to proceed to Bruges, where his family are residing. Dr. Wolff asserts positively that even the Ameer of Bokhara intended to have put him to death after his departure.

Ironmasters' Meeting at Birmingham.—On Thursday the ironmasters' quarterly meeting was held at the Town Hall. Those who speculated on a fall have been disappointed, at all events for the present. The trade met at Walsall on Tuesday last, and at Wolverhampton on Wednesday, when the prices were declared to be as follow:—Bar iron, £12; Hoops, £12 10s; with an advance of 5s. a ton on Shropshire pig iron, making the price of that article £6 10s.

Santa Anna.—The following is the postscript to a private letter, dated Vera Cruz, March 3:—"The Chamber have found Santa Anna guilty, but sentence is not yet passed upon him."

Suicide.—On Thursday afternoon James Goodwin, an unemployed butcher, lodging in the Blackfriars-road, proceeded to the Waterloo-bridge Pier, and paid his fare to London-bridge, in the Matrimony steam-boat; he went on board, but the vessel had scarcely got into motion, when he threw himself over the side into the river; he was in the water but a few minutes ere he was brought ashore and conveyed to the hospital, where he expired about two hours after. In his pocket was found a letter, showing that he was an out-patient of Bartholomew's.

Royal Visit.—His Royal Highness the Prince de Syracuse, brother to the King of Naples, intends shortly to visit this country, and his sojourn in England will be of some duration.

The Weather.—The weather still continues somewhat chilly and cold for the advanced period of the season. On Wednesday afternoon and evening there was a moderate fall of rain, which will do much good. The rain during the night was not heavy, but it fell gently the greater part of Thursday. Should it continue, vegetables will soon be both abundant and cheap. At present they are very dear.

A man was charged at the Preston intermediate sessions the other day, with stealing 10d. in copper and 1s. in silver; and the jury returned a verdict as follows:—"He's guilty of the 10d., at leeast we suppoose soa."

A few nights ago, at the close of the first evening's performance of "Antigone" in Dublin, a loud cry arose throughout the house, after the principal performers had appeared at the foot-lights, for the author. So unanimous was the call for Sophocles, that the manager had to explain to the impatient crowd that Sophocles had been dead two thousand years.

A miserably attenuated mendicant is daily to be seen standing near Blackfriars-bridge, with a piece of paper pinned on his breast, on which is written, "Remember the pur blind." Alas! how few of us are not pur blind! Self-interest and self-love, those ruling principles of action, affect the sight most lamentably.

FROM A SKETCH TAKEN IN HYDE-PARK.

Our artist's sketch pourtrays the Queen and Prince Albert and their attendants, the Hon. Miss Hamilton and Colonels Bouverie and Arbuthnot, taking equestrian exercise in Hyde-park for the first time this season. We are delighted to see that our gracious Sovereign has resumed this most healthful recreation; and we have no doubt that the illustrious example now afforded to the lady portion of the fashionable world will cause the Park to be unusually gay this season.

Any stranger visiting Hyde-park for the first time, while her Majesty is present, must be peculiarly struck by the excitement which prevails on her approach. The eagerness of his brother strangers to catch a passing glimpse, the quiet but respectful obeisance of the regular frequenters of the Park, the hurrying of carriages from the course which her Majesty may take, and the half-ejaculation of "Here's the Queen," are all heart-stirring as well as novel.

Our draughtsman obtained a most favourable view of the Royal group at one of the now less-frequented parts of the Park, near Grosvenor Gate; and in the background of the sketch may be seen the tops of the lofty houses which now flank the entrance at Albert Gate.

THE LATE PROFESSOR DANIELL.

The following additional particulars about the late Professor Daniell will serve o complete the short memoir which appeared in our columns on Saturday March 22, and will be read with interest by many of his pupils and friends. He was born in Essex-street, Strand, March 12, 1790, and had, therefore, entered upon his fifty-sixth year the day before his death. His father, George Daniell, Esq., of the Middle Temple, and of Westhumble, in the county of Surrey, was a barrister practising in the Court of Chancery, and one of the Commissioners appointed to investigate the state of Public Charities in England and Wales. The two sons were educated at home, under the care of an Oxford tutor, and, though well instructed in classical literature, the object of this memoir constantly regretted the want of that rigid training in mathematical analysis, which is so necessary in the study and pursuit of Physical Science. Perhaps, in few things were the powers of his vigorous mind more signally displayed than in the manner in which he overcame this defect in his early education. His fondness for scientific pursuits was displayed even in boyhood, and when quite a young man he remarked to a friend that he must one day get the Copley Medal. In after life he not only received this mark of distinction, but also the two other medals in the gift of the Royal Society. Disappointment met him in his first career. It was considered desirable to place him, as the eldest son, in a sugar-refining establishment, belonging to a German branch of the family; but the changes produced by the war in the manufacture of sugar having occasioned great losses, Mr. Daniell relinquished an occupation which was always uncongenial, but from which it was once hoped that he might derive great pecuniary advantages.

In 1816, associated with his valued friend, Professor Brande, he started the "Journal of the Royal Institution," which, for a long period, was published under their joint superintendence. In the following year he married the youngest daughter of the late Sir William Nolle Rule, surveyor of the navy, and upon his retirement from the sugar business, became managing director of the Continental Gas Company, and in that capacity visited many parts of France and Germany, with Colonel Landmann and Sir W. Congreve. At length an opening presented itself in which he might turn his eminent scientific attainments to good account. In 1831 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry in King's College, the duties of which office he discharged with the most unwearied zeal to the day of his death. Of Professor Daniell's labours in the cause of natural science we have already given an accurate account: his name will not be forgotten in the history of philosophy, and many have borne testimony to the worth and amiability of his private character, and to his entire freedom from selfishness. While his relations and familiar friends are able to reflect with honest pride on his intellectual powers, they have been comforted in their bereavement by the thought that this distinguished philosopher was, in thought, word, and deed, a sincere and humble-minded Christian. His death was sudden, but he was not unprepared for the stroke.

It is not generally known that a paper on Clerical Education in the "British Magazine" for February, 1844, was written by him; but many now will hear with pleasure the substance of his own emphatic words, that if he had only the slightest suspicion that there was anything in the study of Natural Philosophy to alienate the mind from the written Word of Revelation, he would unhesitatingly give up his curious arts, bring his books together, and burn them before all men, though the price of them were fifty thousand pieces of silver. Words like these must not be forgotten, for they express the deliberate sentiments and heart-felt convictions of one who was, in the best and truest sense of the words, a wise man.

Major-General John Bell, C.B., has had conferred on him, by the Commander-in-Chief, the pension for distinguished services of £200 per annum, which had reverted to his grace's patronage on the appointment of Major-General Sir Henry King to the Colonelcy of the Buffs.

The Command in Canada.—We understand that Lieutenant-General Sir Richard Downes Jackson, K.C.B., is about to be succeeded in the command of her Majesty's forces in Canada, by General the Earl Cathcart, K.T., and Governor of Hull.

Death of another Flag Officer.—Admiral of the Blue Henry Raper, Esq., of South Audley-street, Grosvenor-square, and of Ilmer, Bucks, died last week in the 78th year of his age. Admiral Raper was second on the list of admirals of the blue. He obtained his rank of rear-admiral at the general promotion of the 12th August, 1819, that of vice-admiral on the 22nd July, 1830, and admiral on the promotion in honour of the birth of the Prince of Wales on the 23d November, 1841.

LAUNCH OF "THE ALFRED."

On Tuesday afternoon, the Thames, at Blackwall, was a scene of much gaiety, a great concourse of persons, numbering some 20,000, having assembled to witness the launch of the Alfred Indiaman, a very fine frigate-built ship, upwards of 1200 tons burden, from the yard of Messrs. Green. Just at going off, the noble ship was "christened" in the usual manner by the lady of Sir G. Ryan, the Chief Justice of Bengal, who dashed the bottle of wine upon the bows, and gave the name Alfred, with great effect. The vessel glided into the water in magnificent style under a salute from Mr. Green's yacht; the Royal Marine band played the National Anthem; and the spectators cheered heartily. She was towed into the East India Dock for the purpose of being rigged, &c. About 500 ladies and gentlemen partook of a sumptuous entertainment in the yard, amongst whom were the Earl of Hardwicke, Sir G. and Lady Ryan, Sir W. and Lady Baynes, Sir J. Marshall, General Sir H. Sutherland, G.C.B., Sir F. Hamilton, Colonel Sykes, General Sandwich, Major Moore, G. F. Young, Esq., &c. All the arrangements were perfect, and not the slightest accident occurred.

NEWSPAPER

THE GAME OF CHESS PLAYED BETWEEN LONDON AND PORTSMOUTH, THROUGH THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH OF THE SOUTH WESTERN RAILWAY, 10TH APRIL.

ROOM OF THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH, NINE ELMS STATION.

The great game of Chess by the Electric Telegraph, was on Thursday played by Mr. Staunton and Major Kennedy at the Portsmouth terminus, and Mr. Walker, the celebrated player, and another gentleman, at the Vauxhall terminus, the distance between the two places being 88 miles. The extraordinary wonders of the Electric Telegraph have never been more positively confirmed than in the case of this game at Chess played on Thursday last by the four best players in the kingdom. The certainty and rapidity of communication by means of electricity were most strikingly exhibited in a recent case, where it materially forwarded the ends of justice. But in the present case we have seen the same wonder repeated during a whole day, over five times the distance, and without any appreciable difference in time. This game of Chess was simply suggested by Mr. Staunton, the Editor of the Chess Department of our Journal, as a trial of the Electric Telegraph; and the result has certainly been astonishing, exceeding, we believe, in precision and certainty, the anticipations of those who have had experience in this curious application.

We have already given several Illustrations of the Electric Telegraph; the most recent appeared in No. 141 of our journal, and conveys a complete analysis of the apparatus invented by Professor Wheatstone and Mr. Cooke since then other forms of apparatus have been invented by these gentlemen for the use of the Board of Admiralty. The form of apparatus applicable to the Electric Telegraph admits of variety, but the principle of communication must remain the same. It would be tedious to attempt a perfect explanation of the system; the power of galvanism or electricity in producing motion has been so frequently exhibited by lecturers on science and the various construction of apparatus to be met with at the Mechanics' Institute, will, we hope, render only a brief explanation necessary to our readers. The whole apparatus may, for the sake of simplifying the matter, be divided into four parts. 1st. The generation of the galvanic, or electric fluid. 2nd. The conducting wires. 3rd. The motive or electro-magnetic arrangement. 4th. The dial. The fluid is generated in the usual way, by the aid of a galvanic battery; and we must here remark our great surprise at the smallness of the battery used for generating a sufficient quantity of the "subtle fluid" to pass through four conducting wires a distance of 88 miles. We were informed by Professor Wheatstone that the quantity of fluid necessary varied with the different conditions of the atmosphere. The conducting wires are about one-eighth of an inch in thickness, and are kept separate from each other, along the whole line, by posts, placed at intervals of about one hundred yards; these conductors terminate in wires of less diameter, protected with a covering of cotton in the ordinary way, and so arranged as to form the coiled magnets, the source of the motive power: the property possessed by these wires, of rendering iron magnetic when subject to the galvanic currents, may be simply exhibited by passing copper wire a few times round a glass tube so as to form a coil like a bell-spring, taking care that the turns of the wire are nowhere in contact; if the ends of the coil are then connected with the poles of a battery, and a small sewing needle is placed in the glass tube, it will be immediately drawn to the centre, and if examined, will be found to be permanently magnetic. If, on the contrary, a piece of soft iron wire had been introduced into the glass tube, in the place of the steel needle, it would be found to be only magnetic so long as it remained under the influence of the exterior coil of wire; it is then to the magnetising property of the electric current, under a certain form of arrangement, that we owe our motive power, and it is to the varied motions or vibrations of the needles on the face of the dial plate, produced by this agent, that a form of alphabet has been adapted which shall rapidly explain what is intended to be communicated by a person operating at a distance of eighty, one hundred, or probably thousands of miles. Having thus far briefly explained the construction of the apparatus, and the mode of communication, we will proceed to the notice of the game of Chess; the communications about which were conducted with such precision and exactness as, from this interesting trial alone, to establish the extraordinary value and certainty of Electro-Telegraphic correspondence. To speak of rapidity in this experiment would be useless, since there is no perceptible time taken in transmitting the several moves or decisions of the players. The communications were indeed conducted with the same certainty, and the time occupied was apparently no more than would be experienced by two players seated at the same table. We annex the game.

The game was here abandoned as drawn, after a struggle of nearly nine hours' arduous study on both sides.

The game was concluded at so late an hour on Thursday that Mr. Staunton was not able to furnish a detail of it, but we now supply some interesting particulars connected with it, and next week we shall give a more copious account of the incidents that occurred.

The game commenced at eleven o'clock on Thursday, and was concluded at eight, it having thus lasted nine hours. It was played in a room where the electrical telegraph was worked, and the room at each terminus was crowded by numbers of persons, among whom were several of the most celebrated Chess-players. There were also several literary gentlemen, among whom we noticed Mr. R. Chambers, of Edinburgh, one of the proprietors of that meritorious work, Chambers's Edinburgh Journal. A long time was necessarily occupied on the game, because an interval of about 18 minutes sometimes elapsed between each move; although by means of this marvellous invention, the move itself was known at the other terminus, a distance of 88 miles, almost with the rapidity of thought.

The mode of playing was by numbering the squares of the Chess-board, and thus the moves were conveyed. This was done with such facility, that great admiration and astonishment were excited in the minds of all present. Professor Wheatstone himself seemed to be much gratified at the successful and novel application of his invention, the result of which was as gratifying as it was astonishing. Here was a game of Chess played by individuals nearly ninety miles apart from each other; and the mysterious messenger conveying the intelligence, must have travelled backwards and forwards during the game, upwards of 10,000 miles! Even in these days of rapidity, this seems startling.

The Telegraph was not solely devoted to the game, but throughout the day it conveyed various messages. For instance, a gentleman connected with the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, who was at the Gosport station, received a message from a friend who was at the Vauxhall terminus, desiring to know if he was there. The gentleman in question returned for answer, "Yes." A question was then asked, "When shall you come up to town?" The reply was, "I shall start by the half-past two o'clock train." So that the knowledge of the gentleman's intention was made known as if by magic instantly, and it was carried into effect within a few hours, as he had actually reached London soon after five.

It is only fair to say, that the persons who worked the Telegraph deserve praise for the intelligence and activity which they exhibited in developing this wonderful game. The Superintendent of the Gosport station also, we are bound to say, gave every possible facility. Indeed the novelty of the thing created such a sensation, that all concerned in it, whether as spectators or actors, seemed desirous of aiding the experiment as much as possible.

It may perhaps be as well to explain, that Gosport is only separated from Portsmouth by the river, the latter town being more familiarly known. The distance from the Gosport station to the Vauxhall terminus is eighty-eight miles, and when it is considered that the witnesses to the match at either station, became acquainted with the moves of the players almost instantly, we think we are justified in characterizing the circumstance as another wonder of the world. There is something calculated to excite serious reflection in the knowledge that men, separated by such a distance, may commune with each other as if they were in the same room.

But we must not be tempted to moralize upon this magical invention for the interchange of thought. Our forefathers would have ascribed much less astonishing effects to witchery. The invention is not astonishing only, however, for it is brought into most useful operation. It is employed to telegraph trains, and to convey messages to and from the servants of the company. On payment of a small sum the public may avail themselves of it for matters of business. It is hardly possible to contemplate all the purposes to which it may be applied, but it is at once evident that the Electrical Telegraph can be devoted to the conveyance of all sorts of important intelligence, and that it may hereafter, to a certain extent, supersede the present mode of Post-office communication.

The company at Gosport was very numerous. Many of the visitors repaired to the Royal Hotel, and we, at least, were well satisfied with the accommodation there.

We had almost forgotten to state that there was a trial of a telegraphic game of Chess on Wednesday, but it was a private one. Upon the whole, Thursday's experiment formed an important era in the game of Chess, connecting it, as it did, with that extraordinary and most useful application of galvanism, the Electrical Telegraph. To combine science with Chess was literally what is called "a good move."

The apartments at Vauxhall, devoted to the accommodation of the player and his friends, consisted of the signal-room and the board-room of the Company, in the latter of which Mr. Walker played his game—the numbers by which the "moves" were designated being sent to and fro by a messenger. Our engraving shows the signal-room, and the four telegraphs with which it is furnished—namely, two double-wire Electro-Magnetic Telegraphs, one for Portsmouth, and another for Southampton; and two single-wire instruments, of simpler construction, communicating with the same places, and destined for the private use of the Admiralty.

Most of our readers are aware that Mr. Staunton is the gentleman who conducts the Chess department of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. He is one of the finest players of the day. His match with M. St. Amant excited great interest at the time. No game was ever looked to with more attention.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Tuesday was a night of more than usual attraction at this great theatre. Not only did we witness the rentrée of two great and long-established favourites of the English public, who have, in addition to their acknowledged supremacy, all the charm of old acquaintance, but also the performance of a tenor of fame no less universal—although in England of more recent standing—in a part others of less transcendant merit have disdained, or more probably feared, to take. To these add the first appearance of the thirty-six little German fairies, who have come over, as if escaped from Elfland to cheer and astonish us sober folk, in this matter-of-fact and reasoning age, with an exhibition of their frolicking and gladsome pranks: such, indeed, was the effect produced by their first appearance on Tuesday night. The audience were still sighing in sympathy with Norma's wrongs, when suddenly the curtain rose, from either side rushed troops of tiny beings, forming themselves into graceful groups, which suddenly divided—dispersed like a company of sharpshooters in a skirmish—and then re-formed again with a precision and correctness the more wonderful as it offered such a contrast to their spontaneous and artless gaiety. So sudden was the surprise, so uncommon and unexpected the scene, that laughter mingled with the shouts of applause that rose on every side and shook the very walls.

The "Pas Hongroise" afterwards called for admiration of a different kind; the nimbleness of grace and ease of motion of these children are remarkable; such a characteristic graceful Polka (with the exception, perhaps, of the pas de deux, which partook more of a tour de force) has been seldom seen, although the greatest dancers have tried it. They again appeared, under another aspect, in the "Pas de Fleurs;" these clever children forming into groups, framed in, as it were, by the wreaths of flowers they bore, presented a charming picture; their blooming, happy faces looking like duplicates of the roses from amidst which they peeped; the applause given their performance was general and tumultuous throughout. At one moment a general laugh was raised by the eager scramble for a couple of bouquets which were thrown amongst them, and which in an instant dissolved their ranks, all other considerations being merged in their anxiety to obtain the prizes.

We have reversed the general order of things in speaking first of the choregraphic portion of Tuesday's entertainments, but, in truth, these little Viennese have as much disturbed our habitual equanimity, as they did that of the distinguished and fashionable audience present. It would be impossible, however, to lose the impression of the performance of "Norma" on that night. Most probably, none of the dilettanti present had witnessed its equal. Moriani, as Pollione, not only filled up the unsightly void in this fine opera which every one hitherto must have felt—not only presented a worthy object for Norma's tenderness and anger, and for Adalgisa's tears—but gave a specimen of acting which, even were not his extraordinary musical powers superadded, would rank him amongst the greatest ornaments of the drama. As to his singing, he hardly gave us reason to regret that the part was occasionally too low for his voice, so admirable was the consequent display of his artistic resources, especially in the duet with Adalgisa, where the passionate expression with which he gave forth his fine notes, covered completely to our ears the want of adaptation of the score. Norma has long been one of Grisi's finest characters, and though, perhaps, there might at first be detected a little indolence, and a slight huskiness in her singing, her feelings once roused, she surpassed herself. The magnificent attitudes of "La Diva" in that part of the famous trio, where Pollione seems to defy her reproaches, and owns before her his love for Adalgisa—her notes of thrilling intensity—her expression of mingled rage and pity, where she warns the unhappy girl, "Pria che costui conoscere era il morir mendanno" (Death were better than to know him), afforded equally a study for the artist or the musician. In the last duet, so fine on the stage, and so ineffective in a room, "Quel cor tradisti," we never heard this great cantatrice sing with truer pathos or more delicate feeling; whilst the answer of Moriani, struggling betwixt remorse and reviving tenderness, his admiration of Norma's heroism, and the shame and contrition which check the ebullitions of his heart, were of thrilling interest. Then the massive tones of Lablache peal forth; he is still Norma's judge, though his trembling hands and agitated movements betray the aged father's grief. Then follows Norma's prayer to her father—his relenting and his pardon, at the same time that, with Spartan firmness, he delivers her to the hands of the executioner. These three great artistes, rivalling one another in this splendid scene, produced on the audience an effect which will not easily be forgotten. As to Lablache, how did we not thank him for lending his superb and unrivalled voice of thunder to the execution of the fine choruses of "Norma," and his majestic and imposing figure to the dramatic effect of the whole. Signora Rosetti whom we already heard last season, took the part of Adalgisa. Her voice has much compass and flexibility; is generally correct, and her action good. One of her chromatic passages in the last scene of the first act surprised the audience by its brilliancy and rapidity. If we have a fault to find, it is that she has not yet acquired confidence to overstep the trammels of conventional art, and that her natural impulses are by her repressed with too cautious a hand.

The "Sonnambula" was performed on Saturday night to a brilliant audience. Madame Castellan's performance of Amina, more than confirmed her previous high favour; and, in the opinion of many, even surpassed her impersonation of Lucia. Her singing and her acting, in the last act, especially are beyond all praise. "Ah non quinge" was given by her with the most charming expression, and brought forth all the resources of her lyrical and melodious voice. Signor Mario, who made his rentrée at the Italian Opera-house that night, sang the part of Elvino with more than his wonted excellence. The beautiful air, "Il piu tristo dei Mortali," was given by him with great pathos; but it is to be regretted that the dramatic power which this artist, so liberally gifted by nature in every lyrical department, has shown himself from time to time to possess, should be so often garnered up for special occasions, and that he should also allow his voice to drop down to tones untenor-like. Frederic Lablache, who took the part of the Count, obtained his share of the honours of the evening.

On Tuesday, the two Queens, and the whole of the Royal Family were present. Her gracious Majesty, under the impression of feelings all mothers can explain, applauded the charming little Viennese with unusual warmth of manner.

FRENCH PLAYS.

On Monday evening last the announcement on the bills of "La Dame et La Demoiselle," was suddenly changed to that of "L'Ecole des Vieillards," by express desire of her Majesty, who, with Prince Albert, and their suite, visited the theatre. We gave our opinion of this comedy last week, and we question if some more entertaining piece might not have been selected for the amusement of the Royal party than M. Casimir Delavigne's somewhat wearying production. As it was, however, the charming acting of Mdlle. Plessy carried it through with evident satisfaction to the audience in general; indeed, so well entertained did the Queen and Prince appear to be, that they waited until the conclusion of the performances, which comprised, as well, the pleasant little interlude, "La Gageure Imprevue," in which Mdlle. Plessy also appeared. In spite of the counter-attraction of Duprez's rentrée at Drury Lane, the house was well filled, the boxes presenting a most brilliant array of rank and fashion.

LYCEUM.

A two act drama was represented here on Monday evening, which, although mentioned at the top of the bills as "never acted," we suspect to be an old favourite. "On Duty" is without doubt, an adaptation of Auber's opera "La Fiancée," produced some twelve or fourteen years ago at Covent Garden, under the name of "A Husband by Mistake," and at another house as "The National Guard" We question whether it be not the same piece as the former. We cannot exactly tell when or where the action of the piece passes, as there was nothing in the costume or scenery to help us in forming an idea, so we must presume it to belong to that remarkable era "once upon a time." Fritz (Mr. Keeley) an upholsterer and corporal in the militia, is about to be married to Henrietta (Miss Villars) a workwoman in the establishment of a fashionable milliner Madame Dentelle (Mrs. Woolidge.) At this time, Count Frederick Lowenstein (Mr. F. Vining) arrives at the unknown city, wherever it is, and is detected by Fritz, in escaping from the chamber of the Baroness Saldorf. The Baron (Mr. Frank Mathews) had made an appointment at the same spot with Henrietta, who was expected to visit the Baroness, that lady being her benefactress. Seeing the danger the Baroness is in, Henrietta determines to take the blame upon her own shoulders, and declares it was herself that the Count came to visit. This gives rise to the equivoque of the piece, which is amusingly sustained until Fritz, in a fit of jealous despair, marries Madame Dentelle, and Frederick bestows his hand and his title upon Henrietta, in reward for her devotion. The acting of the piece, by all parties concerned, was unexceptionable, and Miss Villars was much applauded in an introduced song: but we must protest against the anomalous manner in which it was put upon the stage, both as regards the scenery and dresses. We had a court suit of one country and reign, a soldier's dress of another, and a militia of none at all, with ladies' costumes of the present "Belle Assemblée," and a gardener's of the dark ages of melodrama, pertaining to the "Woodman's Hut" and the "Miller and his Men." This is the more to be regretted, as the most trifling expense and care would rectify the fault. The same remarks will apply to the burlesque of "Wittington," which owes but little of its success to the getting up, nearly all the appliances being old friends with which the habitués of the theatre are well acquainted. A hint, in this respect, might be taken another time, from the gorgeous manner, down to the most minute details, in which the Adelphi extravaganza has been produced: and the crowded first-price houses at this latter theatre also prove the advantage of attraction which a good original drama possesses over translations and adaptations, as a first piece.

OLYMPIC.

The announcement of several benefits at this house implies, we conceive, that it is about to close, after what cannot have proved a very successful career, although as good a one as might have been expected from its resources. It opened with a flourish about the "legitimate drama," and the determination of the management to afford a little indoor relief to Shakspeare. But the public did not appear to think so highly of this laudable intention as the lessee; and soon a melodrama made its appearance three times a week, but with little more effect. Then Shakspeare was turned out of doors altogether, and we heard "grand opera" was to be the leading feature; whereupon, the "Maid of Judah" was brought out, and after a time went quietly in again unobserved. All kinds of heterogeneous performances followed; deaths by poison, comic dancing, game cocks of the wilderness, and other marvels, and the comparative failure of the last burlesque, though cleverly constructed, proved the perfect incapacity of the company to do anything. We trust this will be the last of these rash speculations, which tend more than anything else to depreciate the theatrical profession. Good actors, besides—really good ones—are now so scarce, and so readily picked up, that theatres opened in this wild manner, become little more than "refuges for the destitute." Miss Davenport is certainly an actress of average merit, but no more: and the idea of her unaided talents drawing a house together is preposterous. Our readers will see by looking back to our number for Nov. 16, what we predicted respecting this house at its first opening; which augury has been now fulfilled.

The majority of the theatres continue to be doing well. The HAYMARKET and ADELPHI are nightly crowded, so as to render a change in the bill unnecessary. Mr. Jerrold's comedy will, we believe, be the next production at the former house, of which report speaks highly. At the latter "The Green Bushes" goes with as much effect as ever. We would, however, give a word of advice to Mr. Wright, with respect to his "gagging," which he is apt to carry to a very questionable degree. In speaking of Mr. Paul Bedford, for instance, he observed, the other night, that, "after he tried to fatten him upon various things, he tried oil-cake, but that would not do, it made him so very rank." We have not the play by us, but we are convinced that Mr. Buckstone never wrote this. Such an offensive remark may get a laugh from the gallery, but it is at the expense of disgusting every respectable person in the house. And Mr. Wright is so clever an actor, with such a fund of original drollery, that he need never resort to such reprehensible means to procure a laugh. The PRINCESS' promises a new play, by Mr. Kenney, and an adaptation of Auber's opera, "The Duc d'Olonne," which has been already presented to us in a melo-dramatic dress. We cannot speak so favourably of the acting in "As You Like It," lately produced here, as of the plays which preceded it. The LYCEUM has also underlined some novelties for speedy production; and SADLER'S WELLS announces the termination of its season, the management of which has conferred so much honour, and, we have no doubt, more substantial rewards, upon Mrs. Warner and Mr. Phelps.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

VAUXHALL GARDENS.—These gardens are likely to open at Whitsuntide with éclat, the lessee, Mr. R. Wardell, having determined upon introducing various novelties. M. Musard will, in the course of the season, make his first appearance at the gardens, with a band of a hundred performers, including all the leading musical talent of London and Paris. A magnificent diorama, in which some extraordinary pyrotechnic and hydraulic effects will be introduced, is being painted. The rejoicings in 1814 in St. James's-park, on the proclamation of peace, have suggested the idea of the grand pictorial illustration in the Waterloo Ground, in which will be introduced the giant tower of Honan at Canton, or the Temples of the three Golden Idols, typical of the past, the present, and the future, with illuminated Pagodas and Feast of Lanterns. The gardens, generally, are being re-decorated.

MR. HENRY BETTY.—This gentleman, who lately made a favourable impression in the metropolis, is now playing at Blackburn. The Blackburn Standard notices his performance of Hamlet, on Monday last, in these terms:—"Mr. Betty has studied his author's meaning deeply, and for himself. Except in the more prominent parts, which general opinion has long decided require a particular style of acting, Mr. Betty's Hamlet stands by itself. We detect no copying—no mannerisms—no attempts to catch undue applause, by sacrificing the true reading of the text to stage effect. We have a thoroughly original pourtrayal; and a splendid conception it is."—Captain Harvey Tuckett is also playing at Blackburn.

It is the intention of the Directors of the Southampton Railway that the speed of the mail trains on their line shall be increased, and a plan has been projected by which the distance between London and Southampton will be accomplished in two hours, instead of two hours and forty minutes, the time now occupied.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The days of thy boon woodcraft are numbered, lusty hunter! for lo, now is that anniversary—known to "the twice two thousand that the world is made for," as the season—

> "When the gay months of carnival resume
> Their annual round of glitter and perfume:
> When London hails thee to its splendid mart,
> Its hives of sweets and cabinets of art."

The sports of winter are over; there is a truce with reynard, and even the metropolitan persecutor of venison, albeit ruthless of sylvan customs and courtesies, hieth him to the tryst of the Royal Stag Hounds, with misgivings as to the correctness of the pursuit he is engaged in. Not that the chase has 'bated one jot of its olden caste—or fallen short of its glories of lang syne; for did not, even within this little week, dogs peculiar to it sell, at an average, over one hundred guineas a couple, on the occasion of Mr. Foljambe's celebrated pack of foxhounds being disposed of by auction at Tattersall's. But the sporting spirit is strong and instinctive among us, and the cruelest cockney is as regard to the seasons and their change, though on fire for the field under the double impulse of having mounted his own spurs and his friend's horse. Pass we, therefore, to the pastimes of spring which have been celebrated since last we prated of their whereabouts. On Monday the postponed meeting at Warwick took place, and it might have been an interesting affair but for the untoward position of Ironmaster's qualification. As things are, it is not likely that people will be found to back him. There is sufficient glorious uncertainty in racing without the chance of losing by being on the winner of a Derby—as the case was last year. There was also a vernal meeting at Hampton, and really an agreeable thing enough. Moulsey Hurst is a popular spot, despite some stringent set-offs—such, for example, as five shillings for the dry lodging of a one-horse chaise: it is much to be lamented that funds cannot be had without such a pis aller. Although it was considerably cold on Tuesday, the carriage company lunched al fresco, as if it had been June; and you had, in short, a duodecimo edition of Epsom or Ascot. The racing was all amateur, or thereabouts, and gallantly the gentlemen—or, according to Byron, "the chivalry of this dull age"—did their devoir. There was, indeed, a question as to the qualification of one of the cavaliers, which, for the sake of a precedent, ought to be submitted to the natural history section of the British Association on their next meeting. It will be the means of obviating a great deal of confusion if they will lay down specifically what is a gentleman. The genus is undetermined by naturalists, and the popular attempts to settle the difficulty have frequently ended in settling those who engaged in it. The opening event—a sweepstakes over the course—was fixed for one o'clock, and as only one of the lot entered was ready at that hour, there was a walk over; this, consequently, was a disappointment: and the rider of Donald Caird—(the broth of a bo-kicker)—being objected to, as aforesaid, for the Tally-ho Stakes, there was another cause of dissatisfaction. To be sure it was his own fault—his vaulting ambition—to ride in a hurdle race to which he was not entitled by his social status—but Mr. Symmonds is not to be dealt with by the ordinary modus in such matters, for if he was born with any dross in his clay it must be pretty well sifted by this time. One spill he got at the Hippodrome a few years ago, must have tolerably pulverized him. * * *

The preparations for the yachting season have commenced with great éclat, and in one important instance, on a principle likely to enhance considerably the popularity and prosperity of that truly national sport. We allude to a resolution adopted at the last monthly meeting of the Royal Thames Yacht Club, to the effect, that in future, the vessels of the club should sail their wager matches in ordinary sea-going trim, instead of having their bulk-heads knocked out, and their platforms ripped up—in short, instead of being "pulled to pieces," as heretofore. It is to be hoped this example may be generally followed, and that in future regattas shall exhibit bona fide yacht races, and not contests between shells, stuck together for the purpose, by rival yacht-building firms, as advertisements for their respective establishments. A gentleman's yacht is his floating summer-house, and it is not a pleasant alternative, either that he must turn it out o' windows a dozen times in the season, or forego all hope of competing for the prizes so alluring to his interest and his ambition. A month, however, must elapse before the regular business of our pleasure marine commences. In the meanwhile the legitimate turf season opens on Monday next at Newmarket. The Craven week this year promises to be the best that has occurred for many of its anniversaries. A formidable lot of Derby favourites are engaged, and will, no doubt, show. Our accounts from the town state that it fills rapidly with horses. Scott's string arrived on Wednesday. Any speculations as to the present state of the odds would be out of place, as premature. With the certainty of important alterations in all the issues now in the market taking place within a few hours of the date of our publication, we should neither serve the reader nor ourselves by any observations on the current rate of the betting.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The chief betting this afternoon, on the Chester Cup, was on Cataract, Obscurity, and Semiseria, the horse, by the superior "weight of metal," obtaining a decided call. Obscurity had many friends, but Semiseria's party was small, and the outlay "nil." Portrait, Winesour, Queen of Tyne, and Trueboy were in good demand. DERBY: Kedger, Clear-the-Way, the Cobweb colt, Weatherbit, and Pantasa, were prominently in demand; but, with the exception of Weatherbit against Pam, it was difficult to get an offer, even at 22 to 1, at the prices last quoted in this paper. Alarm (now at Newmarket), Idas, and the Miss Whip colt were not touched upon. Business, generally, was very flat.

THURSDAY.—Nothing presenting the slightest novelty occurred in the business transacted in the Newmarket Handicap; and the 2000 Guineas' Stakes would not require a notice but for a momentary decline in Idas, followed by a reaction so powerful, that he became a greater favourite than ever. A similar movement distinguished the Derby betting which also shook the confidence of the Alarmites; at present he is most unequivocally out of favour. The Chester Cup speculations were tolerably spirited, as far as it affected Cataract, Winesour, Queen of Tyne, Trueboy, and Yhouman ac Knuc; Obscurity and Semiseria were not in good odour.

AQUATICS.

The list of the yachts connected with the Royal Thames Club has just been issued, and it shows a larger number than any other aquatic club in the United Kingdom, the total amounting to nearly 130. Amongst the owners are Lord A. Paget, Lord W. Lennox, Sir B. Graham, Viscount Seaham, the Earl of Fitzhardinge, the Earl of Yarborough, Lord de Ros, the Marquis of Anglesey, Lord C. Paget, Lord Wharncliffe, and several others. The splendid cutter the Mystery, the successful competitor for the principal prize of last year, then the property of Lord A. Paget, now appears in the name of Viscount Seaham. An engraving of this vessel has appeared in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Her Majesty the Queen Dowager has become a patron of the Norfolk Aquatic Sports, and the club at Harwich will for the future be honoured with the presence of Royalty.

ROYAL THAMES REGATTA.—The grand summer aquatic festival, for 1845, will commence on Tuesday, the 10th of June, and will continue to Thursday, so that the Metropolitans will have three days' sport, as usual. The prizes will be similar, in most respects, to those of last year.

ROYAL THAMES YACHT SQUADRON.—The opening match for the season is fixed for May 3rd, the course being from Erith, sailing down round a flag boat near the Chapman's Head, and back again to Greenwich. The following yachts are entered:—Enigma, 25; Gazelle, 25; Ino, 25; Antagonist, 25; Vixen, 25; Widgeon, 24; Cygnet, 10; Exquisite, 15; Prima Donna, 25; Belvidere, 25; Blue Bell, 25; Champion, 25; Mystery, 25; Leveret, 25. Six of these are new yachts. The following matches are already fixed:—May 17—First club match of the season; from Greenwich to Coal-house Point and back to the Hospital. May 31—A splendid silver cup, presented by Alderman Johnson; from Erith down round the Nore light and back again to Erith. June 16—The grand challenge cup, open to all.

FOOT RACE.—On Monday last the long-looked-for contest between Hopewell, of Nottingham, and Mallatratt, of Mansfield, came off, within two miles of the latter place. The stake was £20 a-side, and the distance 110 yards. The interest which was excited was immense, and the throng of people who assembled to witness the race was greater than any event has excited in that neighbourhood for many years. The Mansfield people sported their money freely, but Hopewell was the favourite, having been in training for a considerable length of time at Kegworth, in Leicestershire. Hopewell went off with the lead, but never looked like a winner, his opponent catching him almost immediately, and winning cleverly by three yards. Much money changed hands on the affair, and Mallatratt has proved himself a good one, to beat so renowned a runner as Hopewell. After the race, the boy Mountjoy performed the same feat as described in our paper of last week, and completed his task within six minutes and a half of his time. The friends of the youngster, were, however, too wide awake to trust again to a collection, and had the exhibition upon the bowling-green, in the town of Mansfield, which being walled in, they charged sixpence admission, and thus netted a considerable sum. We believe, however, all went away perfectly satisfied of the power and skill of the boy.

THE SPORTING CAUSE OF WOOD V. GLEN.—This case is to be defended; the defendant has paid £1500 into court, and a commission has issued to Boulogne. Mr. E. James has been retained as counsel to proceed to Boulogne, to cross-examine Levy Goodman.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Dr. Wolff was to start from Malta on the 28th ult. On his arrival in London, he will probably give an account of his dangerous journey to Bokhara. At Constantinople Dr. Wolff was received most kindly by Sir Stratford Canning, and during the whole of his journey he has experienced the greatest kindness and assistance from every one in the service of her Majesty.

Accounts from Copenhagen announce the decease there of Admiral de Bille, father of the Danish Minister to the Hanse cities. Admiral de Bille saw a great deal of service during the late war, but he more particularly distinguished himself in the civil department connected with the Danish navy, and is understood to have been a scientific and ingenious man, and to have rendered considerable service to his country.

A Belgian paper states that the Emperor Nicholas will this year make a tour in Austria and Germany, after having inspected the army of the Caucasus and several Russian corps cantoned in the heart of the empire. The army of the Caucasus has received, in accordance with a plan of operations submitted to the Emperor by General Count Woronzoff, a considerable reinforcement. The extraordinary levee of recruits in Russia amounts this year, to more than 100,000.

The crime of murder is carried to an appalling extent in France. The Court of Cassation lately rejected the appeals of four individuals capitally convicted by as many different Courts of Assize—namely, of Lachanelle, sentenced to death at Lons le Saulnier for the murder of a young woman; of Coste, convicted in the Ardeche of a similar crime; of Ducoudray, condemned to death in Paris, for attempting to kill his wife; and of a woman named Leclerc, sentenced at Amiens for parricide. The appeal of another parricide, named Lacome, is under consideration.

A letter from Palermo, dated March 6, states that M. de Montebello was on the point of concluding a treaty between Naples and France, and that he had obtained morethan England, who, in the interest of her manufactures, had made large concessions. The ratifications of the treaty concluded with England depend, it is added, on the conclusion of the treaty with France.

The sword of honour voted to Marshal Bugeaud by the colonists of Algeria, was presented to him with great ceremony immediately after his arrival at Algiers. A letter from Algiers of the 31st ult., states that the Marshal had embarked for Oran, in order to confer with General Lamoriciere on future operations.

The Great Western Railway will, it is said, be open to Gloucester in the course of a fortnight from the present time, the works between that city and Kemble being now complete.

A letter from Smyrna of the 19th ult., informs us that the Ottoman steamer Esseri-Djeddid, from Jaffa, with 25 passengers, arrived there on the 10th with the plague on board. On the following day one of the passengers died and all the others were taken to the lazaretto. Another died on the 12th, and three were ill, but at the date of this letter there had been no other death, and in Smyrna itself there had been no case of plague.

We learn from Rome that the King of Naples, during his residence in that city, has entered into negociation with the Government of the Holy See for the formation of a railroad between the two capitals.

A Paris paper says that the Pope intends this year to send the golden rose to the King of the Belgians. That rose is blessed by the Sovereign Pontiff, on the Sunday of Lætare, at the mass celebrated in the church of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem. On leaving the church, the Pope holds the rose in his hand and shows it to the people. It is afterwards sent as a present to a member of some of the reigning families distinguished for their piety and attachment to the church, or to some illustrious personage who has rendered eminent services to religion.

The election for Greenock in the room of Mr. Wallace, is to take place on Tuesday next, the 15th inst. Mr. Walter Baine, latter provost of the town, is the Whig candidate, and it is said the Marquis of Lorne will offer himself in the Conservative interest.

Mr. William Boyce, B.A., of this college, has just been appointed to a mastership in the Cheltenham College.

SIDNEY COLLEGE.—Mr. J. Yates, B.A., of Pembroke College, who was tenth Wrangler, last year, has just commenced Mathematical Lecturer to this society.

OXFORD. April 8.

BAMPTON LECTURER.—In accordance with the will of John Bampton, M.A., Canon of Salisbury, the founder of these lectureships, a meeting of the heads of houses took place this morning to appoint a lecturer in the room of the Rev. Charles Abel Heurtly, B.D., of Corpus Christi College, whose term of office expires in October Term, when the Rev. Augustus Short, M.A., formerly Student of Christ Church, Vicar of Ravensthorpe, Northamptonshire, was unanimously elected.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

A WOMAN CONVICTED OF POISONING HER BROTHER.—At the Taunton Assizes, on Saturday, Sarah Freeman was indicted for the wilful murder of Charles Dimond the younger (her brother), at Shapwick, by administering to him arsenic. The crime was committed in December last, and our readers will recollect that we published the particulars of it. The Jury having found the prisoner guilty, Mr. Justice Coleridge placed the black cap on his head, and, assuring the prisoner that all hope of mercy in this life was past, and that her days were now numbered and few, he passed upon her the awful sentence of death. During this time, the prisoner was supported by a policeman in the dock, and appeared several times as if she wished to speak. When the sentence was over, as they were leading her away, she turned towards the judge, and said, "Justice has not been done me; my life has been unfairly taken away." She was then led from the dock. Four charges of murder were made against this wretched woman, one of which was for the murder of her own mother, on which a true bill was found by the grand jury. The other two bills were ignored.

THE MURDER AT YARMOUTH.—At Norwich, on Monday, Robert Michael Royal, aged 24, James Barnard Hall, 24, and James Mapes, 21, were tried on a charge of having, on the 18th of November last, or early the following morning, at Great Yarmouth, murdered Harriet Candler, of the same place. We gave an account of the occurrence at the time, but it may be as well to recapitulate the facts as they appeared in evidence. One of the persons first accused, named Yarham, volunteered to give evidence against his associates while in Norwich Castle awaiting his trial, and upon his testimony chiefly, corroborated by a few other, but not important circumstances, the grand jury found a true bill against the remaining three. The unfortunate deceased was a widow, residing in Howard-street, in the borough of Yarmouth, and kept a small shop, in which she had for many years obtained a livelihood, for the sale of flour, tea, grocery, and other provisions. This shop opened with half doors into Howard-street, and was situate close to Gaol-street, a considerable thoroughfare, and one of the principal streets in the town. The deceased woman lived extremely quietly, having no female attendant, with the exception of a woman who attended to her household affairs. She was generally supposed to be a person of some property, and a few days prior to her decease had received a sum of £150, her share of a legacy left by a relative. This amount was paid by a check and five £10 notes. On the evening of Monday, the 18th of November, about half-past ten o'clock, the deceased went, as was her usual habit, to the Black Swan public-house, nearly opposite, for half a pint of half-and-half, and, on purchasing it, remarked, in a jocund manner, that she had better not remain conversing, as "Spring-heeled Jack might pay a visit to her shop during her absence." At that time she was in good health and spirits, but never afterwards was seen alive. At two on the following morning the night constable on duty, while going his round, pushed at the door of the shop, and was surprised to find it give way. He knocked with his truncheon against the counter, in the expectation of rousing the inmates, but no response being made, or any person appearing, he passed round the counter with a view to enter a room behind the shop where he knew the deceased slept, and then for the first time beheld the woman in a sitting posture behind her counter, with her skull fractured, evidently from the blow of some blunt instrument, and also her throat cut, probably with a table-knife used for cutting lard, which lay all bloody on the counter. The constable called assistance, and the inmates of the adjoining house, divided only by a thin boarded partition, consisting of a Mr. Catchpole, a solicitor, the man Yarham, employed partly as his servant, and his wife, instantly attended, and visited the scene of the horrid tragedy. A more minute examination of the premises then took place, and it was found the bed had not been disturbed, and the vessel containing the porter remained untouched. Yarham, who had been sitting up for his master till one o'clock, in a room, merely divided from the shop of the deceased, on being interrogated as to whether he heard any sound, replied he did not, but nothing suspicious was discernible in his manner during the entire of his examination, which ensued that night, the following and subsequent days. It appeared, on a further search having been made, that the murderers had not succeeded in obtaining the money for which the offence was doubtlessly committed, as a quantity of copper, together with some gold and silver, amounting to about £9, was the only booty carried away. An investigation into the circumstances took place before the magistrates of the borough the following day, and during it, a canvas bag, directed to "Mrs. Harriet Candler, Yarmouth, by rail," was discovered by two females on the sands, while hanging out linen, and brought to the court. These women, it seems, had their attention directed to a place where the sand appeared to have been recently disturbed, and one of them remarked, "Perhaps we shall find Mrs. Candler's money here," and strange enough, on removing the sand, they encountered a substance which, upon further examination, turned out to be the bag supposed to have been stolen from the house of the deceased. The prisoner Royal, who was seen by the women lurking about in the vicinity, approached them and said, stooping down, "There ought to be a check here," putting at the same time his hand into the bag. In consequence of some information afterwards received, all the prisoners were arrested, and after numerous examinations before the magistrates they were fully committed upon the charge, Yarham confessing sufficient to warrant his being indicted as an accessory after the fact. Royal was an itinerant dealer in fish; Hall was also connected with the fishing trade, and intimate with the affairs of the deceased; and Mapes and Yarham, both shoemakers; and all of them resided at Yarmouth. The case lasted throughout the whole of Monday, and was resumed on Tuesday morning, when Mr. Crouch addressed the jury for the prisoner Mapes, on whose behalf, as had been done with respect to the other prisoners, an alibi was opened. At the close of the learned gentleman's address a great number of witnesses were called, with the view of establishing no less than three alibis. The examination and cross-examination of these parties went to considerable length, but the details of their testimony may be dismissed by the statement that they showed all the prisoners to have been at different public-houses in Yarmouth at the time the murder was perpetrated; no two of them having ever been seen together, on the night in question, by any of the deponents.—At the close of the case Mr. O'Malley replied on the part of the prosecution. Mr. Justice Patteson summed up the evidence, and the jury having consulted together for nearly ten minutes, returned a verdict of "Not Guilty," generally, a result which elicited some demonstrations of applause from the gallery.

POLICE.

AN INGENIOUS SWINDLER.—An individual, named Henry Pratt, styling himself a captain, has been examined several times at the MANSION-HOUSE, before the Lord Mayor, upon charges of fraud, practised with remarkable ingenuity and success. The depositions in a case in which Pratt was charged with having committed a forgery upon the banking-house of Messrs. Herries and Co., in a cheque for ten guineas, purporting to be drawn by Major Herries, an officer in India, whom the prisoner personated with astonishing audacity, were read over on Monday. Pratt had managed to impose so completely upon Mr. Williams, of No. 4, Albemarle-street, hotel and tavern-keeper, who knew the family of the Right Hon. Mr. Herries, by stating that he was Major Herries, just arrived from India, that Mr. Williams actually went to the banking-house, in which he was known, and stated that he had seen the major sign the check, which was for a gold watch procured from Mr. Dent, watchmaker, in the Strand. It appeared that the prisoner was either a very accomplished impostor, or that he was lucky enough to find people who could be easily duped. Amongst the statements, which did not form evidence in any case which is to be prosecuted, where several, exhibiting what the Lord Mayor considered to be curious instances of gullibility. A publican, who resides in the "wide-awake" locality of Drury-lane, was visited last December by the captain, who not only (although a total stranger) contrived to run up a score for several glasses of brandy and water, but borrowed 5s. from the publican, and 5s. more from a friend of the publican, who lent a willing ear to the captain's adventures, his rank, and his expectations. Upon that interesting occasion the captain solicited a visit to his vessel from the publican, his wife, and daughter, to the latter of whom he promised a beautiful parrot. Three or four months ago the captain called upon a tailor in Red Lion-passage, and asked him how he did. "I don't know you, sir," said the tailor, "Oh yes, you do," cried the captain; "I know you and many of your friends. Come over the way and have a bit of a lunch." The tailor refused, and suspected that the captain was a bad one, but his suspicion was removed by a publican in the neighbourhood, who said it was all right, and he sold a waistcoat to his customer for 15s., which he was never to see. It was soon found that the publican himself had been done, and that they had received invitations to the ship, and promises of parrots. A gentleman who resides near Berkeley-square was, it appeared, introduced by his solicitor to the captain, who, believing that the gentleman had been educated as a surgeon, said, without hesitation, that he had himself walked Guy's Hospital. They agreed to sup together at a party, of which the captain was to be chairman. The captain, however, imparted to his new acquaintance that he wanted the loan of a suit of private clothes for the occasion, as he had no clothes within his immediate reach except naval uniforms. By his off-hand address the captain succeeded in getting a new coat, value four guineas, and a pair of boots, from this victim, and he easily supplied the other deficiences of his dress from the wardrobe of another. To the supper the captain brought a soldier or a corporal of the Guards, to the surprise of all, but he managed to make a satisfactory apology. The clothes were, as might be expected, never returned; the gentleman had looked everywhere about the Docks for the captain, but he despaired of ever catching him until he saw an account of his adventures in the newspapers.—The prisoner was committed upon the charge of forgery upon the house of Herries and Co., and upon separate charges of fraud committed upon Mr. Gowland, Mr. Stammers, Mr. Robson, and Mr. Howard.—It was considered unnecessary to take the depositions in any other case, but it was stated that since the 19th of last month upwards of fifty clear cases could be established.

THE LATE BILL-DISCOUNTING TRANSACTION.—AT MARLBOROUGH-STREET, on Tuesday, Mr. B. C. Willis, agent, of the Quadrant, who, as we stated last week, was charged with having obtained from Mr. Hearne, parliamentary agent, Pall-mall, two bills for £1100, by fraudulent pretences, alleged to amount to the offence of larceny, appeared before Mr. Maltby for the adjudication of the court on the evidence produced at the previous investigation. Mr. Maltby, after citing several authorities in support of his decision, said that to establish the charge, it is necessary to prove that the accused "knowingly and without any claim or pretence of right took and carried away" the two promissory notes from Mr. Hearne, for the purpose of converting them to his own use. The taking may have been fraudulent and wrongful and unlawful, so as to render him liable to an action of trespass or trover; still, if the prisoner acted under a claim, or a bonâ fide supposed claim, of right, the taking was not felonious. There is little or no dispute about the facts of the case, and I think I may take it as granted that, throughout this matter, Willis acted not on his own account, but as the authorised agent of Mr. Mytton, who had instructed him to regain, by any means in his power, the possession of the notes, of which he conceived he had been robbed. It is not necessary for me to decide whether the mode in which the gentleman in question obtained the notes amounted to a larceny; but their case is distinguishable from Minter Hart's, inasmuch as in Hart's case the stamp was on blank and consequently not complete bills of exchange, and upon that ground it was that Hart was acquitted. Neither is it necessary for me to determine whether Mr. Hearne was a bonâ fide holder for value. I will concede for the sake of the argument that he was, and I am also ready to admit that Willis had recourse to artifice and falsehood in obtaining the notes from Mr. Hearne; still, I say that if he acted under the belief that he was only regaining for Mr. Mytton the possession of the notes which had been stolen from him, then he was acting under a supposed claim of right, and the taking was not felonious. Such being my opinion, I shall neither commit nor hold the prisoner to bail upon the charge of larceny The complainant, by this decision, is not precluded from taking the opinion of the grand jury (now sitting) upon this question, if his counsel should so advise him; but I must now order the prisoner to be discharged from further custody. The bills were handed over to Mr. Turner, the solicitor interested for Mr. Mytton.

THE MAGAZINES FOR APRIL.—Last week, we omitted to notice the following:—"The New Sporting Magazine" is embellished with two finely-engraved plates from paintings by Herring and Thomson. The fox-hunt, the steeple-chase, and angling are the seasonable staple papers; the Editor's Experiences are as vivid as ever, and the spirit of the work is well sustained.——"The Farmer's Magazine" has two clever plates from pictures by Davis and Herring. Among the papers are some practical articles on Manures, with a valuable Report on Special Manures in 1843. The details of improved Implements, proceedings of Societies, &c., comprise much valuable information.——"La Belle Assemblée" is embellished with a fine plate—Olympia, Fashions for the Month, &c. The serial tales maintain their interest; and the poetry, and sentimental and anecdotic minor pieces are attractive.——"The Church of England Magazine," with its engravings of ecclesiastical antiquities, views in the colonies, sketches in natural history, &c., and its biographies, sermon sketches, Sabbath readings, and poetic musings, continues to be as instructive as it is interesting throughout.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED

THE EARL OF EGREMONT.

George Wyndham, Earl of Egremont, Baron of Cockermouth, and a Baronet, was born in October, 1786. He was the son of the Honourable William Frederick Wyndham, and grandson of Charles, second Earl of Egremont. He succeeded to the family honours on the demise of his uncle, George O'Brien, the third Earl, so well known as an enlightened and liberal patron of painting and sculpture, and as the proprietor of "The Princely Petworth," the model of a noble's seat, now possessed by his son, Colonel Wyndham, M.P. for the Western Division of Sussex.

George, fourth Earl of Egremont, the subject of this notice, adopted the naval profession early in life, and pursued it with more than ordinary credit. He entered the service at fourteen years of age; was made a Lieutenant in 1806, a Commander in 1810, and a Captain in 1811. While midshipman on board the Canopus, he was present at Sir John Duckworth's action off St. Domingo, in February, 1806. He held the command of H.M. sloop Hawke, from 1810 to 1812; and also the command of H.M. ship Bristol, from 1810 to 1814.

His Lordship married, the 14th of November, 1820, Jane, third daughter of the Rev. William Roberts, Vice-Provost of Eton College, but has had no children. He died at his seat, Silverton Park, Devonshire, on the 2d inst., after an illness of only eight days.

Of the legitimate near relatives of the Earl, only two sisters survive—Frances, wife of William Miller, Esq., of Ozleworth Park, Gloucestershire, and Laura, widow of the Rev. Charles Boultbee; consequently his death terminates the dignities of the house of Wyndham, a family of Saxon descent, ranking with the oldest in the realm. The pedigree of the Wyndhams exhibits in its course more than one distinguished name. Among the earlier ancestors we find warriors with the Plantagenets in France, and in the battles of the Roses; and loyal and gallant Cavaliers at the period of the great Rebellion. The third baronet, the great grandfather of the Earl now dead, was the Right Hon. Sir William Wyndham, Secretary at War, and Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the reign of Queen Anne, an eminent statesman and orator, of whom Pope wrote thus:—

> How can I Pulteney, Chesterfield forget,
> While Roman spirit charms, and Attic wit;
> Or Wyndham—just to freedom and the throne—
> The master of our passions and his own?

Of this family was also the William Windham of the reign of George III., the manly and eloquent contemporary of Burke, Pitt, and Fox, and, as a politician, but little their inferior. One must, then, view with some regret the extinction of honours so worthily acquired, and so creditably borne.

MRS. HARRIET DOWNING.

This lady, a writer of much taste, and some genius, was a well-known contributor to the Magazines. "The Remembrances of a Monthly Nurse," in "Fraser's" and the "Monthly," was a popular production of her pen. She also frequently inserted in the Annuals poetical pieces, and stories of more than ordinary merit. One faculty she possessed to a remarkable degree, that of vividly depicting the most melancholy of human afflictions, insanity. Of this her tale "Touched in the Head" is a striking example. Mrs. Downing commenced her literary career about the same period as Mrs. Hemans, and resembled that lady in her mental accomplishments. In private life Mrs. Downing was much respected. For the last few years she retired, worn out by age and the fatigues of authorship, to Chipping Norton, in Oxfordshire, and died there on the 17th ult.

SIR JOHN CHAMBERS WHITE, K.C.B.

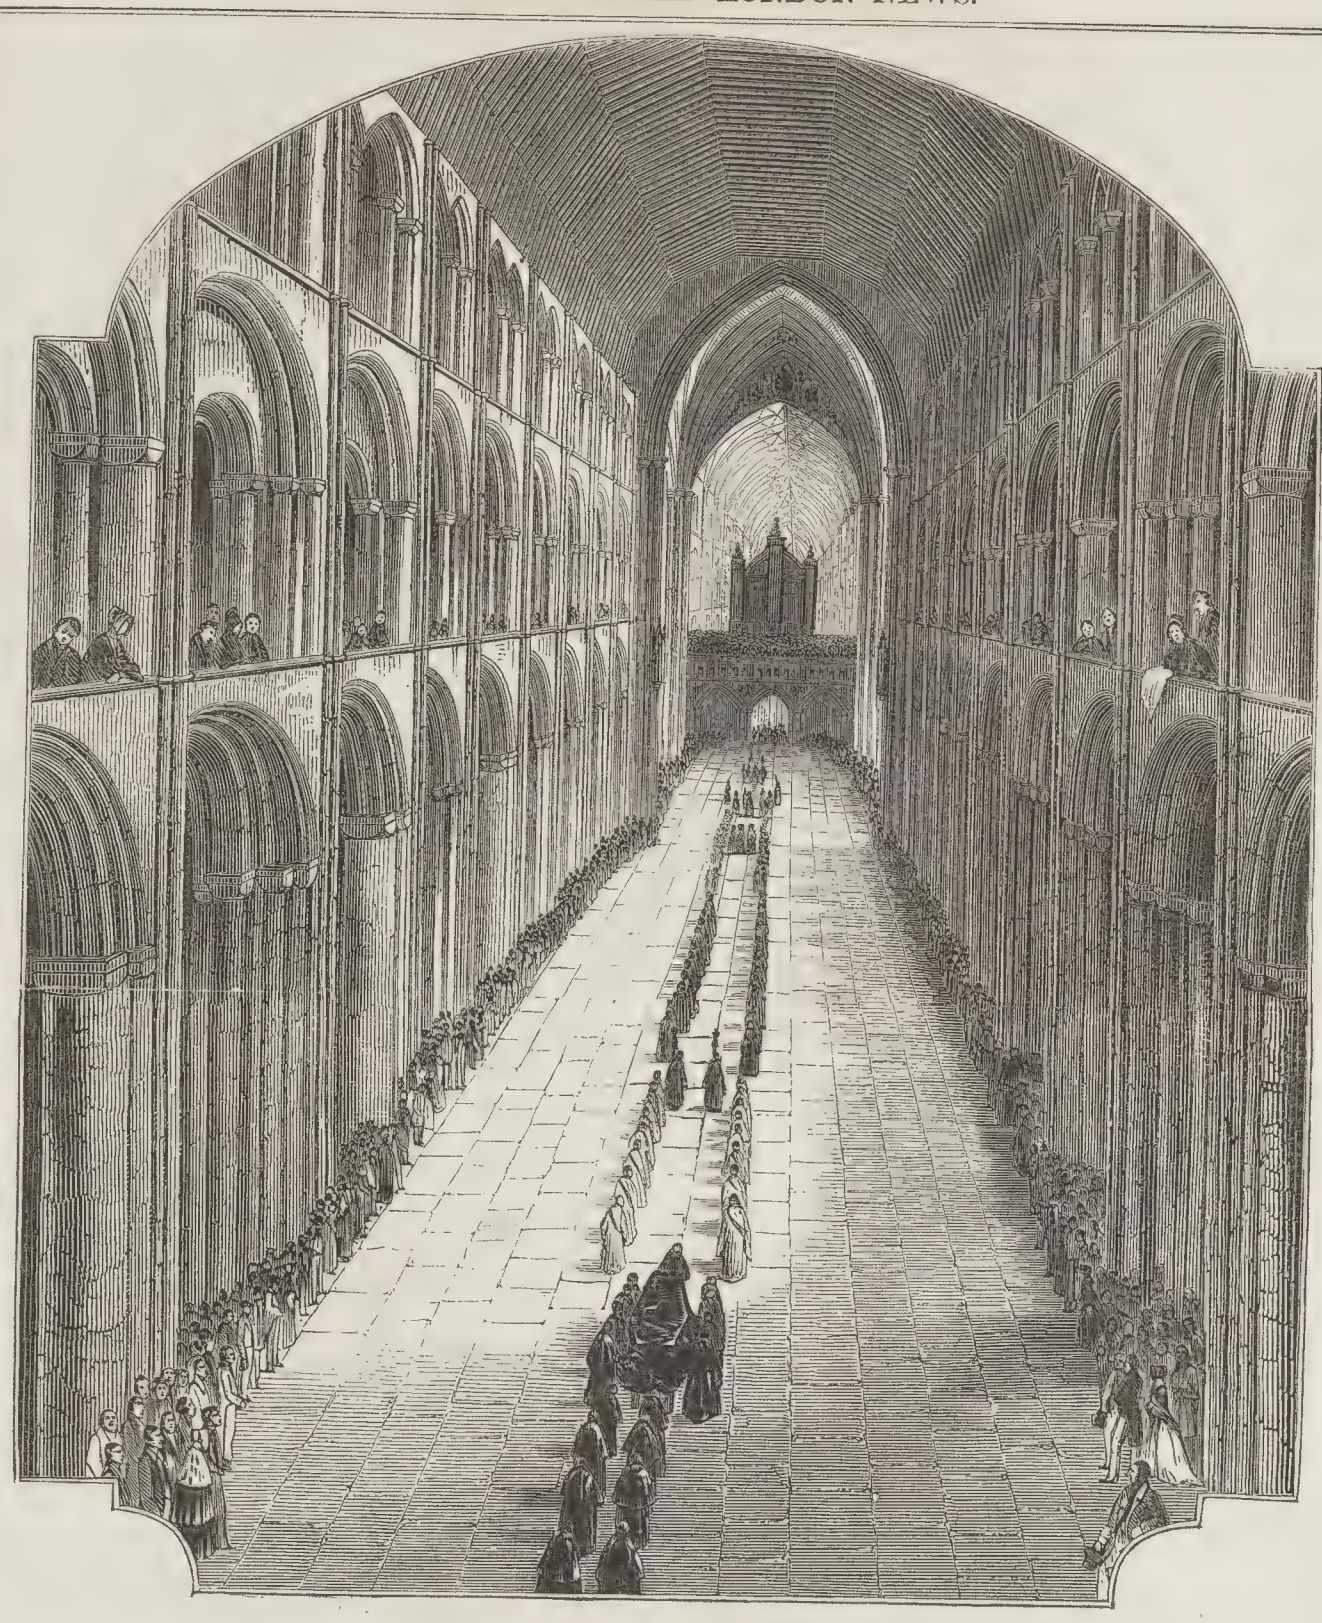
Sir John Chambers White was the third son of Henry White Esq by his wife, a daughter of Governor Van Cortlandt, of New York. Sir John was born in 1770, and entered the Royal navy in 1781; he was made a Lieutenant in 1790, Commander in 1795, Captain in 1799, Rear Admiral in 1830, Vice Admiral of the White in 1837. This gallant officer commanded the Sylph sloop from 1795 to 1798, in which he repeatedly distinguished himself, having captured several of the enemy's vessels of war and convoys, and having assisted at the destruction of the French frigate Andromache. He served at the taking of the Linois squadron in 1806, and co-operated in the defence of Tarragona in 1811. He was subsequently Commodore of the Woolwich Station; and was, on the 15th Jan., 1844, appointed Chief Commodore of the Nore.

The death of Sir John White, which occurred at Sheerness, was lamentably sudden. On the morning of the 6th instant, the Trafalgar, 120 guns, Capt. Meede, with Vice-Admiral White's flag, left the bason for moorings at the mouth of the harbour; the Admiral himself was watching, with some pride, from the window of his official residence adjacent, the stately progress of this, his new ship, as she left the bason, when he was seized with a fit, of, it is supposed, an apoplectic nature, and expired before medical assistance could arrive. The event threw a gloom over the town, the flags of all ships in the port being lowered to half-mast Sir John White had married twice: first, a daughter of the late Robert Fanshawe, Esq.; and, secondly, a daughter of the late General Sir H. Dalrymple, Bart. He was a widower at the period of his decease.

SIR WILLIAM W. F. LYNAR.

Sir William Wainright Fawcit Lynar, was the second son of the late Rev. William Fawcit, rector of St. Peter's, Dublin. He was born in 1798, and married, in 1819, a daughter of John Semple, Esq., of Dublin. He assumed the name of Lynar on succeeding to the property of an uncle. Sir William entered the army as an ensign in the 103rd Foot, with which regiment he proceeded to Quebec, and was present in almost every action fought in the Canadas up to the storming of Fort Erie, earning his promotion by repeated acts of valour. He was at the taking of Platsburgh, and was wounded and made prisoner at Lundy's Lane. He obtained a company in the 13th Royal Irish in 1825, and served in the Mediterranean till 1832.

In 1833 he was appointed High Sheriff of Dublin; for his exertions during his year of office, he was presented with a piece of plate by the merchants of that city; and on his retirement he received the honour of Knighthood from the Marquis of Anglesey. Subsequent to his quitting the 18th Foot, in 1835, he was nominated to the Irish Stipendiary Magistracy; he was the Magistrate who succeeded at Ballinamore, the ill-fated Captain M'Leod, whose brutal assassination has caused such recent dismay in Ireland. Sir William was on the point, within the last week, of relinquishing his office in that district, when his death occurred.



GENERAL BROWNE CLAYTON.

General Robert Browne Clayton, K.C., of Adlington Hall, Lancashire, and of Carrickburn, in the county of Wexford, entered the army at the early age of 14, rose during sixty years service through every gradation of rank, and achieved a well-earned fame by the side of many of the heroes of the late war. He was Lieut.-Colonel of the 12th Light Dragoons, or Royal Lancers; with that regiment he fought in Egypt, under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, taking part there in the actions of the 8th, 13th, and 21st March, 1801. He served in Walcheren in 1809, and was present at the siege of Flushing; he shared also the laurels won in Portugal and Italy. General Browne Clayton was the third son of Robert Browne, Esq., of Browne's Hill, county Carlow; he married the 1st of Dec., 1803, Henrietta, only daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Clayton, Bart., and assumed the additional surname of Clayton on succeeding to the Clayton estates in right of his wife.

By this lady he has left one son, the present Richard Clayton Browne Clayton, Esq., of Adlington and Carrickburn, and one daughter, Eleanor, the wife of the Rev. James Daubéney. General Browne Clayton died on the 16th ult., in his 74th year.

The General's patriotic services in the campaign under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, have obtained a lasting testimonial in the erection of a lofty column, on the rock of Carrick-a-Daggon, County of Wexford. It is a fac-simile of Pompey's Pillar, but not monolithic; it consists of Carlow granite, and has a staircase in the shaft: its total height rises to 94 ft. 4 in.; the architect is Mr. Cobden. Placed considerably above the sea-level, it stands a conspicuous landmark for mariners. The events of the campaign are further to be commemorated, by the appointment of trustees under the will of General Browne Clayton, who shall, annually, at sunrise, on the morning of the 21st of March (the anniversary of the French attack of the British encampment before Alexandria), hoist the tri-colour French flag on the column, which shall remain until ten o'clock, when the British flag is to be fixed and kept up till sunset. On the 28th of March, annually, the British flag is to be raised half-standard high, as a memorial of the death of Sir Ralph Abercrombie. The first commemoration took place in March, 1842, General Browne Clayton himself superintending the ceremony.

FUNERAL OF THE BISHOP OF ELY, IN ELY CATHEDRAL.

FUNERAL OF THE BISHOP OF ELY.

The solemn ceremony of interring the mortal remains of the late Bishop Allen, of Ely took place on Tuesday se'nnight, in the Cathedral of his Diocese, in the presence of a very large concourse of spectators. The body of the deceased prelate lay in state in the private chapel of the palace at Ely, which was hung with black, and lighted with tapers. The outer coffin was covered with rich purple velvet, and at the sides and ends were gilt mitres, denoting the rank of the departed inmate. On a gilt plate upon the lid was engraven the following inscription:—

JOSEPHUS ALLEN,
S.T.P.
Præs-vi. Eliens.
[Ob. XII. Kal. Mart.
[An. Salvt. M.DCCC.XLV.
Ætat. Svæ. LXXV.

Above this was another gilt plate, with the arms of his lordship and the see engraven thereon; and below it, a mitre.

In the Cathedral, extensive preparations were made for the imposing ceremony. The vault was prepared in the choir, immediately in front of the altar; and throughout the entire length of the nave were arranged rows of seats on either side, for the accommodation of persons to witness the procession. The trigorium and stone galleries, and every part from whence a view could be obtained, were appropriated to a similar purpose.

At about one o'clock, the hour appointed for the ceremony, the Dean and Members of the Chapter, followed by the choristers and lay clerks, entered the cathedral by the south door, and walked slowly down the nave, to the west door, there to await the arrival of the body from the Palace; and here, at about 20 minutes past one, the procession formed as follows:—

Two Mutes.
Page. Plume. Page.
Four Beadsmen.
Bricklayer and Carpenter.
Gentlemen of the County.
Clergy of the Diocese, preceded by Mr. Twiss, the Registrary.
Two Vergers.
Eight Choristers, two and two.
Eight Lay-Clerks, two and two.
Five Minor Canons.
Six Canons.
THE DEAN.
Four Pall Bearers. THE COFFIN. Four Pall Bearers.
Mourners,
(The three sons, daughter, and four nephews of the deceased).
Friends.
Secretary. (Mr. Burder).
Medical Gentlemen.
(Professors Haviland and Fisher, o Cambridge; and Mr. Stevens, of Ely).

As the body reached the entrance of the cathedral, the solemn notes of the organ pealed upon the ear, and the opening sentences of our sublime burial service were sung to the music of Raylton. The procession then wended its way slowly along the nave, to the "Dead March in Saul." Upon reaching the choir, the body was rested in the centre; and the mourners having taken their places, the Psalms were chanted to Purcell's chant, and the Lesson was impressively read by the Dean. Again the body was moved; the Dean and Chapter stood within the altar rails at the foot of the grave, the pall-bearers on either side, and the afflicted family at the head of the Bishop's narrow home. The body was then lowered into its resting-place, the solemn service was read by the Dean, the organ again pealed its mournful music, and the mourners quitted the grave.

In the cathedral there could not have been fewer than 2000 spectators. The shops were closed in the city, mourning was generally worn, and there was every outward mark of respect shown to the memory of one who held so high a rank in the Church, and who had endeared himself to those among whom he lived, by his invariable kindness and affability.

The preceding details are abridged from the Cambridge Advertiser. Our artist has sketched the mournful pageant passing up the nave of the Cathedral, perhaps, the finest specimen of Anglo-Norman architecture in the kingdom. In the distance are seen the octagonal anti-choir, organ-loft, choir, &c.

Our informant states that the body, in full episcopal costume, was placed in a cedar shell; this was inclosed in a leaden coffin, which was then placed in the superb outer coffin, covered with dark purple velvet, and finished with several lines of gilt nails, massive gilt furniture, &c.

THE CLAYTON COLUMN.

TABLEAU VIVANT FROM "THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL."—MR. BYRNE, THE IRISH HARPER.

MEG MERRILIES.

WAVERLEY BALL, EDINBURGH.—STATUES FOR THE SCOTT MONUMENT.

On Tuesday se'nnight, a second "Waverley Ball" was given in the Assembly Rooms, George-street, for the purpose of increasing the fund for laying out the grounds around the Scott Monument in an appropriate and ornamental manner. Last year, a similar fête took place, for the purpose of aiding the fund generally, which exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the directors. The ball of Tuesday night was still more brilliant and triumphant. In point of numbers it surpassed all similar entertainments witnessed in Edinburgh for many years. About 1700 of the elite of society were present on the occasion, comprising members of every family of distinction in town, as well as many from the country.

Although on Saturday the tickets were charged double, after 1300 were disposed of, the demand, even at this increase of price, still continued on Monday, so that at four o'clock the committee determined to apply the additional sum received by the increased charge to procure additional accommodation; and issued orders to Mr. Scrymgeour to fit up all the corridors, dressing-rooms, and even the housekeeper's apartments, in a style similar to the Assembly Rooms and the Music Hall.

Parties begun to assemble about nine o'clock, after which a complete stream of company continued to pour into the rooms for some hours. The lobbies and staircase were decorated with evergreens, and brilliantly illuminated. The entire suite of apartments were thrown open. The large assembly room was splendidly illuminated—the centre window being tastefully formed into a niche, formed of white satin trimmed with pink, in the centre of which is Chantrey's bust of the author of Waverley on which a flood of light was thrown from a range of gas burners behind. This device had a pleasing and characteristic effect, and gave a peculiarly tasteful character to the arrangements. This room formed the principal resort of the dancers throughout the evening.

Dancing commenced immediately after the first arrivals, to the inspiring strains of Mackenzie's band, which was stationed in the ball room, whilst the fine band of the Scots Greys lent animation to the promenade in the Music Hall.

It were in vain to attempt to convey, by any verbal description, the effect of the scene presented by the ball-room and the adjacent promenades, crowded as they were by such a rich array of the beauty and chivalry of the land. The mingling of the rich and varied costumes under the flood of light, produced a most gorgeous effect.

The Music-hall, fitted up by Mr. Scrymgeour, was most admired. In the centre of the orchestra was a sort of stage for the exhibition of a series of groups from the Waverley romances; after paintings by Wilkie, Duncan, Lauder, and other artists. These consisted of the following:—

The Betrothed, arranged by Mr. Johnstone.
The Chevalier, arranged by Mr. Christie.
The Glee Maiden, arranged by Mr. Lauder.
Balfour and Morton, arranged by John Ballantine.
Lay of the Last Minstrel, arranged by James Ballantine.

The pillars of the hall were covered with pink and white cloth, over which were tastefully hung festoons of beautiful flowers. The frame of the tableaux was surmounted with an ornamental arch, supported with large panels containing the figures on a white ground, surrounded with rich wreaths and borders; while over the whole were placed flags and banners of various descriptions. The front of the gallery was paneled, and contained ancient armour. A series of banners, designed and executed by Messrs. Ballantine and Allan, consisting of devices emblematical of points of character in the writings of Scott, were highly appropriate, and ably executed. Those of the Pirate, Rob Roy, My Conscience, the Chevalier, the Antiquary, and the Buccleuch crest were placed over the orchestra; and over the front of the gallery were suspended the others, from "Old Mortality," "The Fortunes of Nigel," "The Abbot," and "Guy Mannering." Over the orchestra was also placed a harp between a scroll and pens, surrounded by wreaths indicative of Scott's fame, whose crest, supported by the Scottish banner and the Edinburgh arms, was likewise placed in this part of the room.

At twelve o'clock, the ringing of a bell announced the exhibition of the tableaux vivans in the Music Hall, which thereupon became the centre of attraction to the company. The various scenes depicted were admirably managed, and formed a pleasing variety and novelty in such an entertainment.

Supper, furnished by that experienced and successful purveyor, Mr. Stewart, Hanover-street, followed after the exhibition of the tableaux. It was laid out in the Music Hall, and gave every satisfaction. Dancing again commenced after supper, and continued until the morning was far advanced.

We regret not to have room for the list of the general company. A great number of the gentlemen appeared in uniform, naval and military, artillery, Royal Archers, yeomen, and foreign uniforms, or in court or ball dresses. The ladies generally wore ball dresses. Among the fancy costumes were—

The Chevalier John Sobieski Stuart—Highland full dress, from the portrait of Charles Edward in the dress which he wore at the grand ball at Holyrood, in 1745.

Mr. Donaldson, Albion Cloth Company—"Oliver Proudfoot," the slashing bonnet-maker; afterwards as "Hal o' the Wynd," in the "Fair Maid of Perth." (The first dress, perhaps the most unique which appeared in the rooms, was obligingly lent for the occasion by the Glover's Incorporation of Perth, whose property it is. It is the identical dress worn, as a morris-dancer, by the "Oliver Proudfoot" of Sir Walter Scott, and so graphically described by the great novelist in one of the notes to the "Fair Maid of Perth.")

Mr. G. A. Donaldson—"David de Rothsay," in "Fair Maid of Perth," disguised as a morris-dancer; afterwards as "Rolland Graham."

About 1700 tickets for this splendid ball were, as we have already stated, sold, producing upwards of £800, which, after liberally paying expenses, is expected to leave for the funds of the monument between £400 and £500.

Our Edinburgh artist has sketched one of the most interesting portraitures from the Ball—Mr. Byrne, the celebrated harper, in the character of the "Last Minstrel," as he appeared in the tableau vivant from that heart-stirring poem. At the conclusion of the tableau, Mr. Byrne played a national melody; and, subsequently, in one of the ante-rooms, attracted around him groups of the company, whose picturesque dresses rendered the scene peculiarly interesting.

As a fitting pendent to the details of the Waverley fête, we are happy to illustrate the addition to the Memorial of the Genius of Scott, by the execution of four beautiful statues, or rather sculptural impersonations from his most celebrated works. The Memorial has already been engraved in our journal (see No. 46), but unaccompanied by any account of the origin of this beautiful testimonial: we shall, therefore, briefly relate the particulars, previously to our describing the recent additions, engraved above.

Within three days from the lamented death of Sir Walter Scott, which took place on the 21st of September, 1832, a meeting of thirty of Sir Walter's friends was held in the Royal Society's Rooms, at the Royal Institution, Edinburgh, for the purpose of appointing a committee to call a public meeting, to consider the propriety of erecting a National Testimonial to his memory, in Edinburgh, his native city. Such meeting was held on October 5, in the Assembly Rooms, when, on the motion of the Duke of Buccleuch, the Lord Provost was called to the chair. It was then resolved to erect a public Memorial on a scale worthy of Scott's great name, and fitted to convey to future times an adequate testimony of the estimation in which he was held by his contemporaries. Sir John Forbes, Bart., then stated that he was deputed by the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank, the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank, and Sir W. Forbes and Co., creditors of Sir Walter Scott, to subscribe, in their names, £500 towards the object of the meeting; and this they did in token of their approbation of the honourable feeling which induced him, after his embarrassments in 1826, to dedicate his talents during the remainder of his life to insure the full payment of his debts.

A Committee of one hundred noblemen and gentlemen was then appointed to take charge of the subscriptions; a Sub-Committee of eighteen of their number was formed on the 9th of October, who reported to a general meeting of the subscribers, held on May 22, 1833, that the subscriptions then amounted to £5752 14s., which sum, with the exception of a donation of £300 by King William IV., and £250 from other sources, was wholly raised in the city of Edinburgh.

On Nov. 25, 1835, the Treasurer, (George Forbes, Esq.) reported to a general meeting of the subscribers, that the subscriptions had then reached £6873 11s. 8d. On the 11th of December following, at another general meeting, it was moved by Sir John Hope, "That it be an instruction to the Sub-Committee that no architectural monument should be adopted, of which a statue cannot form a part;" which, on being seconded by Lord Meadowbank, was put to the vote, when 31 voted in the affirmative, and 19 in the negative, giving a majority of 12 in favour of the motion. In March, 1836, the Sub-Committee advertised for designs for the Monument, to combine a statue with architecture, the cost not to exceed £5000; and they offered 50 guineas to each of the three designs, which they should consider highest in merit. There were, in consequence, 45 competing artists and architects who sent in plans, amounting to 54 in number, and consisting of 22 Gothic structures, 11 statues 14 Grecian temples, 5 pillars, 1 obelisk, and 1 fountain. On the 21st of December, the Sub-Committee awarded the premiums as follows:—

1. To Mr. Rickman's Design for a Gothic Cross.
2. To a Model of a Gothic Cross, (marked N. N.) by Mr. Charles Fowler, Architect, and Mr. R. W. Sievier, Sculptor, London.
3. To a Design for a Gothic Cross, (marked John Morvo,) by Mr. G. M. Kemp, Canning-place, Edinburgh.

The Sub-Committee next held several meetings, and corresponded with many eminent architects and sculptors on the subject; and, it was not until March 28, 1838, that the Sub-Committee recommended the General Committee to adopt Mr. Kemp's design, which the report described as "an imposing structure, 135 feet in height, of beautiful proportions, in strict conformity with the purity in taste and style of Melrose Abbey, from which it is, in all its details, derived." The statues, according to this plan, will occupy a conspicuous position, at such a height from the eye of the spectator, that its excellence as a work of art, as well as its resemblance to the original, may be fully appreciated." The Sub-Committee then recommended that the statue should be of marble, and its execution confided to Mr. Steele. These two recommendations were not, however, carried until after an adjourned debate on April 6, when the motion was carried in the General Committee by a majority of 11. An Executive Committee was then appointed, who, on April 2, 1839, contracted with Mr. Steele, for an Italian marble statue of Sir Walter Scott, for the sum of £2000; such statue to be not less than 9 feet in height, measuring from the pedestal on which it was to be placed.

On January 8, 1840, the Treasurer reported there to be a disposable balance in the Bank, of £7350; and it was then resolved to re-open the subscription lists to the public. The site was, however, as yet undetermined; although, between 1836 and 1840, the Committees had under their consideration no fewer than seven different sites; and it was not until the 30th of April in the latter year, that the General Committee, on the motion of Sir W. Rae, Bart., determined on erecting the Monument within the inclosure of Prince's-street Gardens, immediately opposite to the foot of South Saint David-street

The architectural portion of the Memorial has now been some time completed; so that, on the present occasion, we have but to speak of the Statues.

To explain their location, it should be mentioned that in each front of the Monument, above the main arch, there are six small niches, making a total of twenty-four in the main structure, besides thirty-two other niches in the piers and abutment towers.

The above four statues fill the four main niches, one in the centre of each front, surmounted by a richly-carved canopy, terminating in a cross.

In the northern niche, towards Prince's-street, is placed "Prince Charles Stuart" (from "Waverley,") who is in the act of drawing his sword.

In the eastern niche is "Meg Merrilies" (from "Guy Mannering,") breaking the sapling over the head of Lucy Bertram: the figure of Meg is about 7 feet in height.

These two statues have been executed in sand or free-stone, from Benny Quarry; and modelled and sculptured by A. H. Ritchie, Esq.

The southern niche is occupied by a lovely figure of the "Lady of the Lake," stepping from a boat to the shore; modelled by Peter Slater, Esq., and executed by his relative, of the same name.

In the western niche is the "Last Minstrel" playing on his harp: this is the work of James Ritchie, Esq., of Lothian-road, and is, by many persons, esteemed the finest of the four statues.

The stone for the statues is from the same quarry as the material for the Monument; and the four figures cost together somewhat above £80.

It is proposed that a portion of the receipts at the late Waverley Ball shall be appropriated to the purchase of statues for the niches at present unoccupied.

THE MURDER IN ST. GILES'S.

In our late impression last week we gave an account of the apprehension and examination of a man named Joseph Connor, charged with the murder of Mary Brothers, in George-street, St. Giles's. The examination took place at Bow-street, and the prisoner was identified by Mr. Oldham, the cutler, as the person to whom he sold the knife which was found in the neck of the deceased. He was also identified by a woman living at the house in George-street. Mr. Fitzgerald, a surgeon, stated that there were 16 wounds upon the deceased's body. The first was five inches long, a superficial incision on the lower part of the cheek-bone to the centre of the neck. The second was a penetrating wound five inches long, passing over the ledge of the first rib near the spine, wounding the bone and extending downwards between the ribs and the shoulder blade. There was no important part divided there. The third penetrating wound was an inch and a half long, in a perpendicular direction on the left side of the breast bone, dividing the cartilages of the second and third ribs, piercing the edge of the left lung, and the pericardium, and piercing the pulmonary artery. There were in the pericardium about 40 ounces of blood, fluid and coagulated, by measure. The fourth wound penetrated the chest between the third and fourth ribs, breaking off a piece of the fourth rib, and entering the left lung the depth of an inch. The last wound, as well as this, was a mortal one. The fifth wound was a penetrating one, about an inch and a half long, on the fore part of the left arm, near the shoulder. The sixth wound was three inches long, three inches below the last named, of smaller size; both these wounds communicated to the bone of the left arm, dividing completely in an oblique direction, by a clean smooth cut, five inches in length, the great blood vessels and veins. Seventh wound, an incised wound about an inch and a half in length, about an inch and a half above the right collar-bone. The eighth, a penetrating wound, on the back part of the neck; the ninth a superficial penetrating wound; the tenth, an incised wound on the back of the neck; the eleventh, an incised wound above the left shoulder blade, about six inches long: these last four are superficial wounds. The twelfth, a wound on the back part of the left hand an inch long. The thirteenth, an incised wound extending from the first joint of the fore finger to the end of the second joint of the left hand. The fourteenth, an incised wound on the back of the right hand, three inches in length. Fifteenth, a penetrating wound on the left arm pit, going towards the direction of the arm. Sixteenth, a penetrating wound in the left arm, about an inch from the last wound, passing downwards, backwards, between the ribs and the shoulder blade.

On Saturday last Mr. Wakley resumed the inquest on the murdered woman. Only two witnesses were examined: Dr. Fitzgerald and the woman, Rohan, whose statements were merely a repetition of those made at Bow street. The Coroner, not having the prisoner brought before him, further adjourned the proceedings to Wednesday evening at 6 o'clock.

On that day the jury again met, when a conversation ensued as to the non-production of the prisoner before the jury. A letter was read from Sir James Graham, which stated that the honourable baronet declined to interfere in the matter. Mr. Wakley talked of bringing the matter before the Judges. As the suspected person was not allowed to be brought before the jury, they declined to return a verdict, and the inquiry was adjourned to the 30th inst. Mr. Wakley applied to Mr. Baron Rolfe, at chambers, on Wednesday, for a habeas corpus to bring up the body of Connor, but that learned judge refused the application, as without precedent.

The Grand Jury have found a true bill against Connor for wilful murder. Yesterday morning he was placed in the dock, and arraigned on the charge of murdering Mary Brothers, in St. Giles's. On being called upon to plead, he said in a cool and firm manner, "Not guilty, my lord."

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The returns for the present week show but moderate arrivals of English wheat, coastwise as well as by land carriage and sample, yet the supply of that grain on offer this morning was fully adequate to meet the wants of the dealers. The best parcels of both red and white were in fair request, at full prices; but all other kinds, though not cheaper, were extremely inactive. Free foreign wheat, as well as corn under lock, was a mere drug, at late rates. The barley and malt trade was again dull, yet Monday's quotations were pretty generally supported. Oats, beans, peas, and flour moved off slowly, at unaltered figures.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 2610; barley, 3580; oats, 880 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 1810 quarters. Foreign; wheat, —; barley, 800; oats, 6370 quarters, Flour, 4660 sacks; malt, 7480 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 52s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s, potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 43s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to—, per barrel

The Seed Market.—The imports of clover seed having been somewhat considerable, the demand for that article is in a very depressed state, and the quotations have still a downward tendency. All other kinds of seeds move off slowly, at late rates.

The following are the present rates:—Linseed English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa —s to —s. Hempseed, 35s to 38s, per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s, per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 14s; white ditto, 10s to 13s. Tares, 6s to 7s 6d, per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £24 to £26, per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £13 to £13 5s. per 1000: Rapeseed cakes £6 15s to £7, per ton. Canary, 42s to 48s, per quarter.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 46s 5d; barley, 32s 5d; oats, 21s 4d; rye, 29s 6d; beans, 35s 0d; peas, 35s 7d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 45s 5d; barley, 32s 3d; oats, 21s 6d; rye, 30s 8d; beans, 34s 9d; peas, 35s 5d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 6s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 8s 6d; peas, 7s 6d.

Tea.—Since our last report the demand for all kinds of tea has been in a very sluggish state, and prices have not been supported. Common congou has sold at 8½d to 9d, and ordinary twankay 1s 2d to 1s 2½d per lb. The imports continue very large—upwards of 3,000,000 lb having come in direct from China during the last ten days.

Sugar.—The importers having submitted to further reduced rates, a full average amount of business has been transacted in West India Sugar; brown, at 35s to 40s; yellow, low to middling, 41s to 44s; and good to fine, 45s to 56s per cwt. Bengal and Mauritius kinds have gone off slowly, at somewhat lower figures

Coffee.—Comparatively little has been doing in this market, yet the only actual alteration in prices has been a decline of 1s per cwt. in those of Ceylon.

Rice.—The market has been better supplied with Bengal, yet the inquiry for it has ruled steady, at fully the late improvement in the quotations.

Fruit.—Currants have slightly declined, yet Patras are held at 47s to 50s; Cephalonia, 46s to 47s per cwt. In other kinds of fruit only a limited business is doing.

Tallow.—This market is still very flat, and prices are not supported. P.Y.C., on the spot, is selling at 38s to 38s 6d per cwt. Town tallow is plentiful.

Oils.—Linseed oil is in fair request, but most other kinds of oil are rather inactive

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 10s to £4 10s; useful ditto, £4 12s to £5 4s: fine upland ditto, £5 5s to £5 10s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6; oat straw, £1 18s to £2; wheat straw, £2 to £2 3s, per load.

Hops (Friday).—There is a fair average amount of business doing in the finest hops, in bags of last year's growth, and prices are well supported. In all other kinds of hops, we have very few transactions to report. 1844's: Sussex Pockets, £7 0s to £8 4s; Wealds, £7 8s to £8 8s; Mid Kent, £8 0s to £11 14s; East Kent, £8 0s to £9 10s; Choice ditto, £10 0s to £12 12s; East Kent bags, £7 15s to £8 10s; Mid Kent ditto, £11 0s to £12 5s.

Coals (Friday).—Carr's Hartley, 16s; Chester Main, 15s 6d; New Tanfield, 14s 6d; Ord's Redhugh, 14s 0d; Killingworth, 15s 6d: Adelaide, 18s; Tees, 18s; per ton.

Wool.—Selected parcels of English and foreign, as well as colonial wools, are in fair request, at full prices. In other kinds of wool only a limited business is doing.

Potatoes.—The arrivals of potatoes at the water-side continue large, owing to which the trade with all descriptions is heavy, at from £2 10s to £4 per ton.

Provisions.—The supply of Irish butter on offer being somewhat extensive, that article is heavy, on some what easier terms. The same may be said of foreign butter. Selected parcels of bacon are in request, at full prices, but all other kinds of provisions are a dull sale.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on offer here this morning being only moderate, viz. 470 head, and the attendance of buyers rather numerous, the demand for beef was steady and in some instances the quotations had an upward tendency. From Holland we have received 35 beasts this week, the whole of which were brought forward to-day, in excellent condition. The numbers of sheep were small, while the sale for them was rather active, at prices fully equal to those obtained on Monday. In lambs—the supply of which was by no means large—rather more business was doing, at previous currencies. The veal trade was very dull, yet the rates were supported. Milch cows sold heavily, at from £16 to £19 each.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; second quality ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime Southdowns out of wool, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; ditto in the wool, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; large coarse calves, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; large hogs, 3s 4d to 3s 10d; neat small porkers, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; lambs, 4s 8d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s 0d to 30s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 20s 0d each. Beasts, 479; cows, 161; sheep and lambs, 5450; calves, 181; pigs, 325.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a full average supply of meat on offer to-day, yet the demand was steady, at our quotations:—

Per 8lbs, by the carcass—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; prime small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; large pork, 2s 10d to 3s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 10d; veal, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 4s 8d to 6s. ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Market has been very flat during the week, much anxiety still continuing as to the final adjustment of the Oregon boundary question. The speculators for the fall have consequently availed themselves of this event to make heavy sales, and Consols have gradually receded since Monday from 99⅜ to 99⅛ to ¼, closing at the latter price. The transfer books in Reduced opened on Monday, and the dividends upon that stock and new Three and-a Quarter per Cents are now in course of payment. Reduced closes at 98¾; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, 101⅜ to ⅜; Bank Stock has slightly advanced, closing at 210 to 211; India Stock is 279; India Bonds, 71; and Exchequer Bills, 62, 60.

The news from America by the last mail is favourable to the arrangement of the overdue dividends on the state debts of Illinois, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. The precise terms are not yet decided on, but entertaining the question is alone a great advance towards honesty. The absence of business in Spanish has not tended to improve the Stock, which has scarcely fluctuated during the week, the Actives closing about 30½ to ⅝, Three per Cents., 40⅞. Mexican on Wednesday made an advance of nearly 1 per cent., the last mail not only bringing specie but also advices that a large amount was awaiting shipment. The improvement, however, has been since barely supported, 36½ to ½ being the final quotation. Columbian remains at 15¾; Portuguese, 65¼; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents., 63¼; Four per Cent. Certificates, 97⅜.

The Railway Market has been very animated during the week, extensive fluctuations having occurred in Churnet Valley's, Rugby's, London and York, Direct Northern and Cambridge, and Lincoln. Chester and Holyhead have advanced considerably, and the Irish lines continue in great request. The Scotch lines maintain their prices tolerably firmly, and French shares have been in better demand than during the previous week. The competing line for the Great Northern Railway of France, called Rosamels, had been sold in the market at about ⅞ premium. The Eastern Counties Railway meeting on Thursday unanimously adopted the proposition of the Directors, to augment the capital stock of the Company by issuing 4,800 new shares at £14 16s. per share; but it appears that the proposed Farringdon-street extension, which has been taken up by the Cambridge and Lincoln Line, is not viewed favourably by the Eastern Counties Company. The closing quotation of the shares is about 21½; Aberdeen close at 5; Birmingham and Gloucester (new), 6½; Caledonian, 13; Cambridge and Lincoln, 10¼; Churnet Valley, 9⅜; Coventry and Leicester, 3⅜; Cornwall, 6; Direct Northern, 5½; Dublin and Belfast, 10; Dublin and Galway, 5½; Dublin and Mullingar, 4; Eastern Union (Extension), 3⅜; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 17⅜; Ditto (Extension), 11; Great Western, 187; Harwich, 2⅜; Birmingham Stock, 237; Blackwall's, 8⅜; Brighton's, 63½; Croydon's, 17⅜; Greenwich, 10⅜; London and York, 3½; Lynn and Ely, 7; Newcastle and Berwick, 15; Norwich and Brandon, 17⅜; Rugby's, 4⅜; Scottish Midland, 4½; South Devon, 21½; Dover's, 42; South Wales, 7½; Trent Valley, 20; Waterford and Kilkenny, 4½; West Cornwall, 4⅜; Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Cette, 2⅜; Great Northern of France, 6; Ditto, Rosamel, 2⅜; Lyons and Avignon, 3; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's), 3; Ditto (Gannerin's), 2⅜; Rouen and Havre, 30; Sambre and Meuse, 7⅜; Tours and Nantes (Mackenzie), 3; Orleans and Bordeaux, 12⅜; Paris and Orleans, 48¼; Paris and Rouen, 42½

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols receded to 98⅝ ¾ yesterday, closing very heavily. Prices in the Foreign Market yielded in all descriptions of Securities. The Railway Market was heavy, and all the proposed lines receded in price, with few exceptions. The French lines were also worse.

GREAT NOVELTY IN PERIODICAL LITERATURE.
On the First of May next,
THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE
WILL BE ISSUED AS
A BOUND VOLUME,
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.
The issuing of a Magazine in bound volumes monthly, will remove the great objection to periodical publications when sent out in paper covers. They are always unsightly, are frequently lost by being scattered about, and give an appearance of carelessness and neglect to the drawing-room, or library table, where neatness and elegance of arrangement are sodesirable. The plan on which the New Series of the ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE will be issued will obviate these objections; it will furnish every month, to the book-case or library,
A HANDSOME BOUND VOLUME,
(PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE)
in small 8vo., which will be enriched with the best ARTISTIC and LITERARY talent of the day.
VOLUME IV. of the OLD SERIES, containing the last Six Months' Parts, is Now Ready, handsomely bound in cloth, gilt. Price 11s. Sets may be perfected, and Covers to bind vols. had at the Office. Office, No. 1, Crane court, Fleet-street, London

THE POPULAR RECORD OF MODERN SCIENCE,
A JOURNAL OF PHILOSOPHY AND GENERAL INFORMATION.
ADDRESS.
The new periodical, entitled "The Popular Record of Modern Science," will embrace all points of philosophical inquiry, and it is believed that the following detail of what are intended to be its leading characteristics, will insure for it a wide reception.
It will afford assistance to Parents and heads of families, by treating of Moral and Physical Education; and to those engaged in the duties of Instruction it will yield information concerning all subjects peculiarly connected with their labours. The same qualities will make it acceptable to Clergymen, for whom it will also form a Treatise of Medicine applicable to the relief of their suffering parishioners. To the Traveller, so frequently beyond the reach of medical aid, it will supply notices respecting climates, seasons, local influences; and be a guide in many unforeseen and unavoidable difficulties. It will place before Philanthropists and men of science all the subjects which particularly engage their attention. By containing a clear account of those discoveries of science which bear upon Arts and Manufactures, it will be of interest to persons engaged in commerce; and the Operative Classes will find in it those hints which will lead to a preservation of health in the midst of their respective callings. It will offer information to the Statesman by registering facts and daily occurrences which refer to the sanatory condition of Towns, Prisons, Hospitals, &c. The proprietors of animals will receive an insight into Veterinary Medicine, by records of all valuable discoveries and observations on this head.—It is published every Saturday, at the Office, 344, Strand.

CURE of a CASE of INDIGESTION, with CONSTIPATED BOWELS, by HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Extract of a Letter from G. Baxter, Esq., author of "The Book of the Bastiles," &c., dated "The Bryn, Newtown, Montgomeryshire, the 13th March, 1845.—To Professor Holloway. Sir,—I consider it my duty to inform you that a few boxes of your pills, which I purchased at Mr. Morris's, druggist, of Newtown, have cured me of constant indigestion and constipation of the bowels, which application to literary pursuits had entailed upon me. I should strongly recommend authors and studiously disposed persons generally, to use your valuable pills.—Signed, G. R. W. BAXTER."—Sold by all respectable Venders of Medicines, and at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, where advice may be had gratis.

NEW PATENT CARRIAGE—the CURRICLE TRIBUS.—This elegant and useful vehicle offers advantages never before combined—convenient seats for three persons, an open or close carriage at pleasure, and so extremely light in draught, that even a slight horse will work well in it. The shafts are made to shift with ease, to give place to a pole, when it becomes an elegant Curricle for a pair of horses. The body hangs low, particularly safe, and the coachman's seat is so placed as to give him command of the reins, and enable him, at the same time, to open and shut the door. Those who seek a comfortable and elegant Carriage, with an eye to economy, and particularly in horsefleah, ought to see the Curricle Tribus. The Patentee respectfully solicits the Nobility, Members of Parliament, Professional and Country Gentlemen, to inspect his Carriage, the only one at present finished, at the Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square

MR. THOMAS'S SUCCEDANEUM, FOR STOPPING DECAYED TEETH. Price 4s 6d. Patronised by her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.—The Succedaneum will remain firm in the tooth for many years, arresting the further progress of decay, and rendering extraction unnecessary. All persons can use Mr. Thomas's Succedaneum themselves with ease, as full directions are enclosed. Price 4s. 6d. It can be sent by post, free Sold by Savory, 220, Regent-street; Sanger, 150, Oxford-street; Butler, 4, Cheapside; Prout, 229, Strand; Johnston, 68 Cornhill; and all Medicine vendors.—Mr. Thomas continues to supply the loss of Teeth on his new system of self-adhesion, without springs or wires. This method does not require the extraction of any teeth or roots, or any painful operation whatever. At home from 11 till 4. Mr. THOMAS, Surgeon-Dentist, 64, Berners-street, Oxford-street.

MOURNING—Court, Family, and Complimentary.—The Proprietors of the London General Mourning Warehouse, Nos. 247 and 249, Regent-street, beg respectfully to remind families requiring mourning attire, that every article of the very best description, requisite for a complete outfit of Mourning, may be procured from this Establishment at a moment's notice. Widows' and Family Mourning is always kept made up, and a note particularizing the mourning required, will insure immediate attention either in town or country. Ladies requiring Silks or Velvets for Dresses, Mantles, Cloaks, &c., are particularly invited to a trial of the new Corbeau Silks and Velvets introduced at this house. They will be found not only more durable, but the colour very superior, unaffected by the strongest acid, or even sea-water. Black and Grey, and Fancy Mourning Silks, Cashmeres, Plaids, and Merinoes, of every description. The Show Rooms are replete with every novelty for Mourning in millinery, flowers, Tulle and Nett Sleeves, Collars, Berthes, Head-dresses, trimmings, &c &c.—W. C. JAY and Co.

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—THE ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA FELT CARPETING, made without spinning and weaving, having successfully overcome the prejudice created by competitors in other descriptions of Carpeting, and being now honoured with the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty for its use in the Royal Palaces, the Patent Woollen Cloth Company, who are the sole manufacturers, inform the Trade that their new and beautiful Patterns in Carpetings for the present season are now ready for inspection at the Company's Warehouses, 8, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside, where the Company have also a large assortment of elegantly-printed and embossed Table Covers, Window Curtains, Cloths for Coach-linings, Waistcoatings, Thick Felt for Polishing and Gun Waddings, D'Oyleys, &c. &c., manufactured by the same process. The public, in patronising the Felt Carpeting, will obtain, and for one half the price, an article superior in strength and durability to either Kidderminster or Brussels.—Manufactories—Elmwood Mills, Leeds; and Borough-road, London.

NEW ENVELOPE.—In consequence of the great variety of Counterfeit Envelopes of ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, and other disreputable means resorted to by unprincipled individuals for imposing on the public their highly pernicious compounds under the title of "KALYDOR," the Proprietors and sole Preparers of the Original and Genuine Preparation, acting under a sense of duty, and regardless of expense in the attainment of their object—the protection of the Public from Fraud and Imposition—have employed those celebrated artists, Messrs. Perkins, Bacon and Co., who have succeeded, at great cost, in producing from a steel plate a New Envelope of exquisite beauty. It comprises a highly-finished engraving of the Grecian Graces standing on a classic pedestal, on each side of which is a rich profusion of flowers springing from an elegant cornucopia: these tastefully blending with Arabesque scrolls and wreaths, encircle the Royal Arms of Great Britain, surmounting the words, "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," &c., &c., whilst a plinth at the foot displays the Signature of the Proprietors, in red, thus—
A. ROWLAND & SON.
20, Hatton Garden, London, Jan 1, 1845.
ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Discovery, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It purifies the skin from all Eruptive Maladies, Freckles, Discolourations, &c. To the Complexion it imparts a radiant bloom, and a softness and delicacy to the Hands, Arms, and Neck.—Price 4s. 6d and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. Sold by the Proprietors as above, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

PATRONISED BY THE QUEEN AND ROYAL FAMILY OF GREAT BRITAIN, AND THE SEVERAL SOVEREIGNS AND COURTS OF EUROPE.
ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—This ELEGANT, FRAGRANT, and TRANSPARENT OIL, in its preservative, restorative, and beautifying qualities, for the Human Hair, is unequalled throughout the whole world. For Children, it is especially recommended as forming the basis of A Beautiful Head of Hair!!! Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.
CAUTION.—Each genuine bottle has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the Wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a fragrant white powder, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for preserving and beautifying the TEETH and strengthening the GUMS. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, imparting the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; and gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Scurvy is by its means eradicated from the gums, and a healthy action and redness are induced, so that the teeth, if loose, are thus rendered firm in their sockets. Price 2s. 9d. per box.
CAUTION.—As a protection from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden—to be engraved on the Government Stamp, which is affixed on each box.  All other articles under the same names are Fraudulent Imitations.

themselves on each side in front of the men who were the recipients of the bounty. The distribution was then commenced, as we have already described.

We annex a portrait and brief memoir of the distinguished Governor of the Hospital.

This gallant veteran Admiral, now in his seventy-seventh year, and who presented the medals to the Nelson Tars, has served with the utmost distinction in all parts of the globe; and it is doing no injustice to his noble compeers to say that to none of them can the credit be awarded of possessing superior claims upon the country for services rendered. Descended from an ancient and noble family, he, at an early age, entered the Navy; and was a midshipman in the Prince George at the same time with the late King. In 1785, he obtained his lieutenant's commission, and in 1790 became a post captain.

In that memorable victory over the French Fleet achieved on the 1st of June, 1794, Captain Stopford commanded the Aquilon frigate; and, although a young captain, proved himself to be both experienced and most zealous. In the following year he commanded the Phaeton frigate and took an important share in the escape of Admiral Cornwallis's squadron from the French Fleet. His services in the Channel while in command of the Phaeton were unremitting; and in addition to his public co-operation with Sir John Warren's squadron, he captured a frigate-built corvette and eleven privateers, mounting upwards of 170 guns. In 1799 he took command of the Excellent, 74, and in 1802 hoisted his broad pendant as Commodore.

On the re-commencement of the war in 1803, Captain Stopford was appointed to the 74 gun ship Spencer, and in 1804 joined Lord Nelson's fleet off Toulon. He remained under the great hero until 1805, and was one of the ten captains who accompanied him in the pursuit of the French fleet to the West Indies and back. He was, however, unfortunately prevented from partaking in the glories of Trafalgar; but he shortly afterwards had an opportunity of gaining almost equal distinction. On the 6th of February, 1806, he took part in a most decisive action off San Domingo; Sir John Duckworth commanded the British squadron, and, after a warm contest, in which the Spencer was conspicuous, five French sail of the line, including a ship of 120 guns, were captured or destroyed.

In 1807, Captain Stopford was employed in the second expedition to Copenhagen, under Admiral Gambier, which ended in the capture of the whole Danish fleet; and in 1808 he obtained his flag as a Rear-Admiral. He shortly afterwards destroyed three French frigates at Sable D'Olonne, and at Basque Roads, and he was entrusted with the direction of the boats of the fleet. For his services on this occasion he received the thanks of Parliament.

In 1810, the Admiral was appointed to command the squadron at the Cape of Good Hope; and hearing, shortly after his arrival there, of the death of Vice-Admiral Drury in the East Indies, just as the latter officer was about to proceed with an expedition against the island of Java, he left his station, and proceeded to take the command. Their success was most complete, and this magnificent island was surrendered to the British arms. The loss sustained by the naval part of the expedition amounted to seventy officers and men, killed and wounded. He struck his flag in 1813, and in 1815 was nominated a K.C.B. From this period till 1827, Sir Robert Stopford remained unemployed; but he was then appointed Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, which he held for the usual period. In 1837, he was appointed to command the Mediterranean fleet, at a time when the posture of public affairs demanded the greatest attention and caution. The occurrences are of too recent date to require a detailed account and it will be sufficient to say that the Turco-Egyptian quarrel, which had been fomented and encouraged by other than the Powers ostensibly at variance, was, by his valour and decision, combined with prudence, brought to a prosperous conclusion.

DISTRIBUTION OF "NELSON MEDALS," AT GREENWICH HOSPITAL.

ADMIRAL THE HON. SIR ROBERT STOPFORD, G.C.B. GOVERNOR OF GREENWICH HOSPITAL.

At Gebail, at Sidon, at Beyrout, and, lastly, at St. Jean D'Acre, the ships under his command were successful, and at the latter place pre-eminently so. That powerful fortress, which was the stronghold of the rebellious Pacha, was battered and destroyed; and a question which bade fair to involve England in a long and expensive war was definitively settled.

Retiring from the turmoil of war and bustle, Sir Robert Stopford was made Governor of Greenwich Hospital; and, if we may judge from the urbane and cheerful manner which he evinces to the veterans about him, we may conclude that the characteristics of gallantry and humanity which have distinguished him through his arduous services afloat, are still displayed in his noble retreat; and we shall find an echo in the hearts of the old tars in Greenwich, if we wish him, which we profoundly do, health and happiness for many years to come.

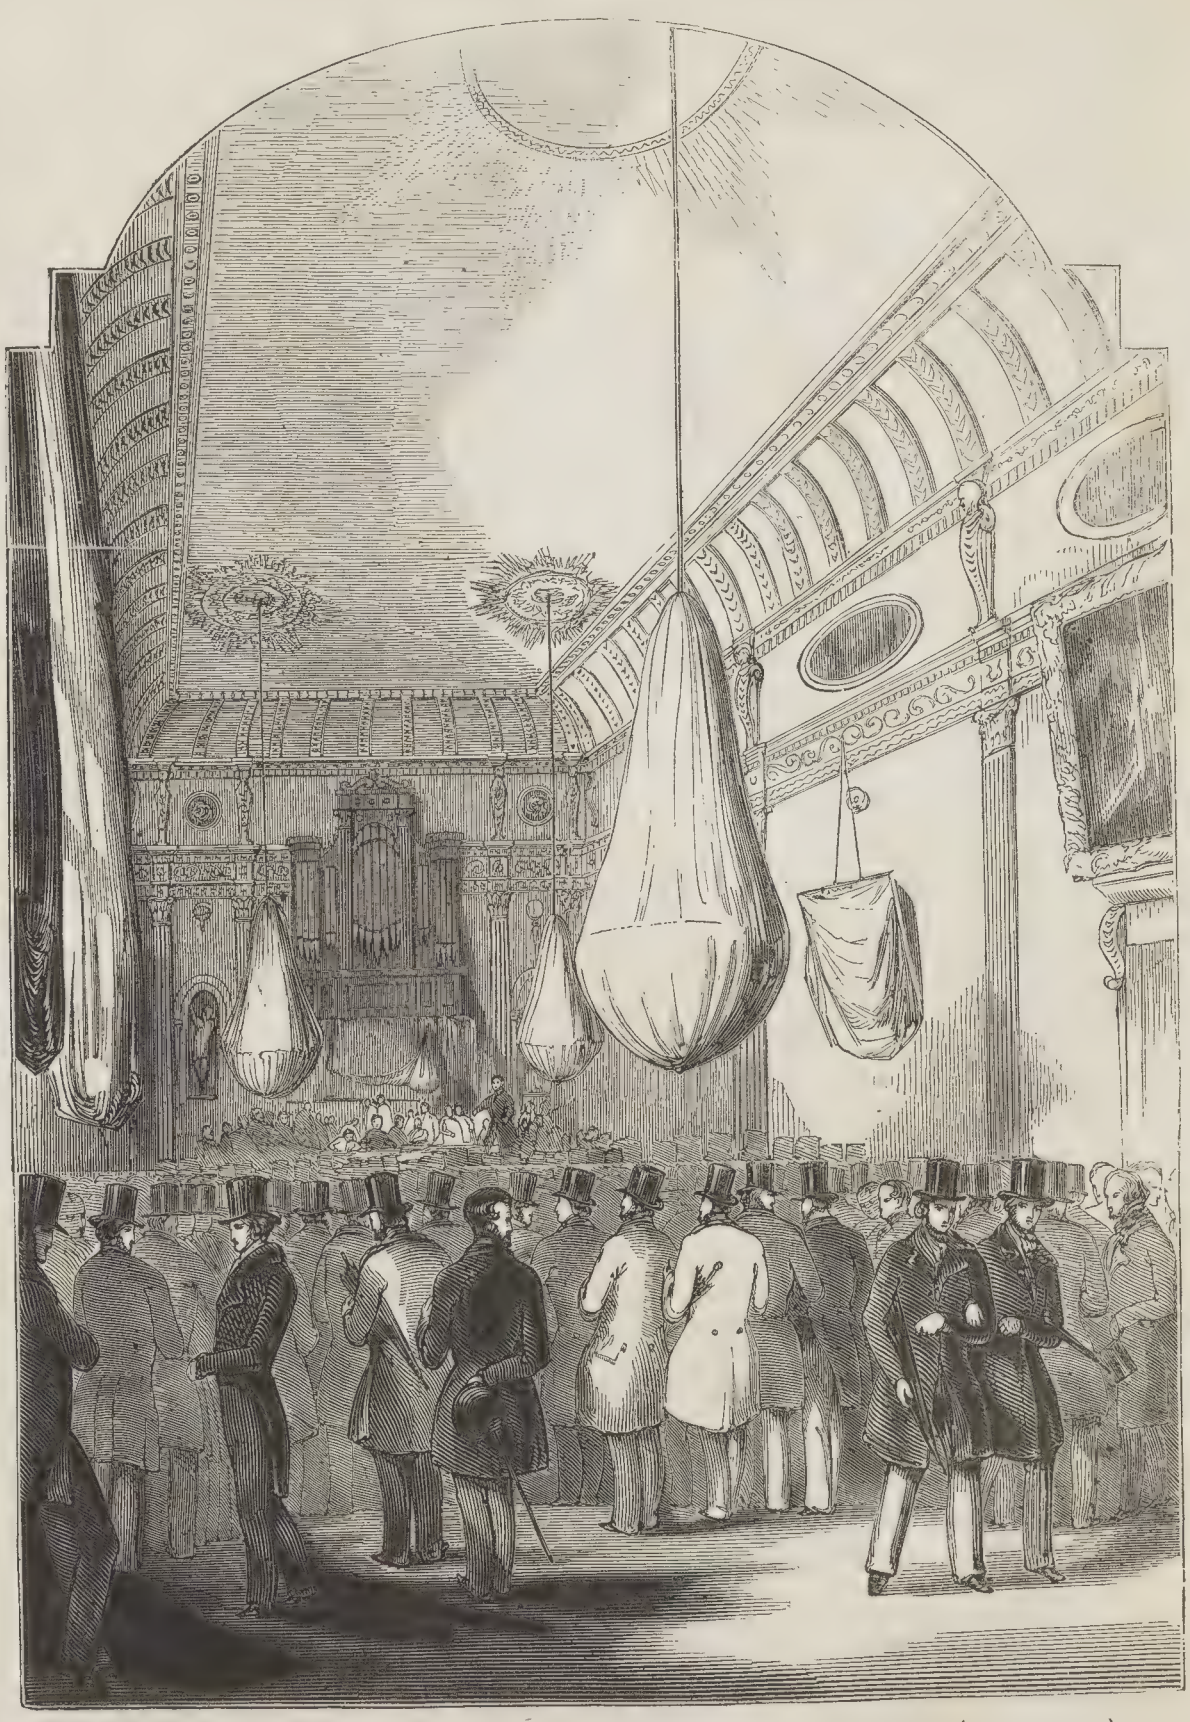
No. 155.—Vol. VI. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1845. [Sixpence.



RAILWAY REFORM.

IN THAT well-known treatise, "Sugden on Powers," we doubt if any allusion is made to the powers possessed by Railway Companies. We have heard of the power of the Crown, and the power of Parliament; the first has been considerably reduced, the latter is almost omnipotent; but the Crown, in the palmiest days of its prerogative, and Parliament in the plenitude of its existing privileges, did not and does not possess more authority than the great corporations of "Conveyancers," who, for the good of the public, and with some regard, we presume, to their own pockets, are ruling the land with parallel lines of iron, and making it, as Lord Brougham remarks, "the common lot of humanity to live next to a railroad." Though somewhat above human control, they are not exempt from human weakness; they have not borne their faculties so meekly as might have been desired, but waxed insolent in their strength; the natural consequence has followed; men denounce them as corporated despots, and are inclined to rebel against many things they do, even though they are sanctioned "by the act."

There is a large amount of public discontent abroad both with them and their doings; and of this feeling Lord Brougham—more suo—undertook to be the organ, on Tuesday last, in the House of Lords. He was very forcible, passably bitter, and—though the subject may seem unfavourable and intractable for such a purpose—not unamusing. It is most unparliamentary to impute motives; but yet, such is the malice of this suspicious and uncharitable world, that we fear some may be found to hint that, had not certain differences occurred in a northern county, with a Company, the name of which is unnecessary for the present purpose, this phillipic might not have been delivered; or, if spoken from a sense of public duty, would have had less pungency and point. The whetstone of private vexation has in many cases been known to give its keenest edge to the denunciation of a public wrong: as all things work together for good, if good arises from it, we take the exposition as it comes, and are careful not to inquire too curiously into what after all can but be matter of conjecture.

The subject his lordship touched on, is certainly one with respect to which a sense of grievance has been long growing in the public mind. A Railway Company is but a trading speculation, and though they flourish considerably in prospectus and advertisement, about the accommodation and convenience of the public, we apprehend their own profit is the first consideration, and the public convenience the second. In most cases we must concede that, as far as the public is benefitted by quicker communication, the object is effected. But many schemes are no more meant to be carried out by the projectors, than if they had announced a "sawdust consolidation company" for the manufacture of deal boards out of that material. The projectors publish the scheme, get up the shares, sell, and wash their hands of the whole business as quickly as possible, leaving the public to repent their own gullibility. Yet as all former railroad companies have had certain privileges granted them in their acts, those advantages cannot be denied to others who come forward with similar proposals. Those powers are necessary: no great public work could be completed without them, and they are not peculiar to railway acts. But the mischief is, that what has little or no effect when put in operation in different localities at great distances, becomes a terrible evil when put in force over the whole face of the country. Wherever a "smart" attorney and a surveyor choose to think it likely a railroad will pay, or rather that shares in it will sell, throughout that district, Parliament is called on to give them almost absolute powers—powers that, if exercised by the Crown, would raise a rebellion in a month, but which drawn through the mysterious alembic of Parliament, are supposed to be all just and right; and, though the line cuts off the wing of his mansion, or drives through his garden and substitutes hydrogen gas and engine oil for the perfumes of his parterre, the Englishman grumbles, indeed, but obeys; Parliament and the Company are omnipotent; their voice is as the voice of destiny; they can take what they like, and pay nearly what they please, no man daring to make them afraid. Thus, the landed proprietors of England having abolished the power of the Crown, and its levy of subsidies for the Exchequer, have fallen beneath the power of the Railroad dynasty, and are compelled to contribute to the dividends declared at the half-yearly meetings of solid-looking commercial men—the said dividends going directly into the breeches pockets of unknown Smiths, Browns, and Robinsons. They are ruled by the Spirit of Commerce, and "a ruthless king is he," in the hands of railroad directors, respecting no man's hearth or paddock; nay, nothing short of a display of national indignation would save Westminster Abbey from going to the ground, though it contains the tombs of Monarchs, and the dust of Warriors and Bards, if it stood in the way of "a good investment."

Lord Brougham is driven into an exposure of this modern despotism by the enormous increase of lines which, like the arms of some monstrous specimen of the polype tribe, are stretching over the whole land like a network. There are 140 railroads existing, and 244 are proposed in addition to them, and, as all England might be laid down on one Russian steppe, such cutting and levelling in so small a space must involve an enormous sacrifice of property, seeing that all the sales are compulsory and the prices almost arbitrary. An area of eight square miles without a railroad through it, will soon be a rural rarity, a sort of Tempe, or happy valley, or Arcadia; and many persons think a little restriction of this confiscating power, for to such it amounts, might put a wholesome check on this railroad frenzy, which it requires but little foresight to predict, will be followed by a disastrous re-action. In the protest Lord Brougham has made against these unlimited powers, he adduced two instances from two widely separated classes of society; Lady Georgiana Fane complains of her deteriorated mansion, and her desecrated and mangled avenue of oaks; "John Hartnell, gardener and nurseryman, at Yeovil," laments his cucumber beds and cabbage plots; his acre of ground, for which he has given £500, being quite at the mercy of the "Company," which he cannot compel to pay him the price he sets upon it. The two cases might be multiplied by two thousand, but the two are enough to illustrate the effect of the system. The law of England is especially chary of individual rights in matters of property, which makes this gigantic invasion of those rights the more extraordinary by the contrast; Lord Brougham says—

"The law of England would not allow one square foot of a man's ground to be touched by any one without the owner's leave; and so delicate was our law that a person standing in the public road became a trespasser if he but put his hand across the fence, so that it should be above the neighbouring close. When "the grand alliance" in the north, the coalowners, wanted a way-leave, they had to bargain with the owner of the soil, and could not compel him to part with it, though the effect of their having it might be to enable them to sell coals cheaper in London; and when Sir Hugh Myddleton brought the New River to London—a project nearly as useful as a railway, (he supposed he must not say quite so, for fear of being thought disrespectful by those companies), he was not armed with those extreme and tyrannical powers which the railway companies had for asking, making in effect whatever compensation they chose, for juries would not now give more than the company's offer; and accordingly Sir Hugh had to take a meandering course, just as he could buy the land. It made water dearer, but of the two evils it was by far the least that a company should be put to inconvenience, and have to pay double or treble what they ought (though it was the occurrence of such cases that had made a reaction in favour of the companies), than that violence should be done to the rights of private property, and men be compelled to sell their land at a price fixed without their consent. It was the only case in the history of civilized nations in which a system of compulsory sale had arisen, without the owners being allowed even to refuse the price offered.

Now what is the remedy for this evil? The most direct one is that which we hope is being applied by the Board of Trade—a prompt rejection of all needless and doubtful lines; the next best is some cool reflection on the part of the public, showing how perfectly impossible it is that all, or any great portion, of the present schemes can pay. Even of those already established, which have of course connected the greatest centres of business and population, few of them have turned out such flourishing speculations as might have been expected. Lord Brougham asserts, on the authority of returns made to the House of Commons, that on sixteen millions of the capital invested in existing railways, the interest is less than five per cent.; six millions pays less than three per cent.; on two millions there is less than two per cent. being received; on twelve railroads the dividend has been little more than one and a-half; and on twelve others there has been no dividend at all! The public may be assured that a railway is not a mysterious Eldorado from which gold can be extracted without limit; and when they hear of money being made in railways, they will mostly find it has been by the regular traders in shares, not the permanent holders of them. Large fortunes have been made on the Stock Exchange, but the stock-holders receive but a low interest. If the public would see the question in its true light, the furor would much abate. A good railroad is a fair and safe investment, but it is not a gold mine: a bad railway is a ruinous thing for all connected with it, and a public injury besides, to the amount of the property damaged in making it. We willingly, therefore, comply with Lord Brougham's exhortation, and repeat his emphatic warning of the danger of the present feverish excitement:—

If the Government and the Legislature should take a more extensive and systematic view of these speculations, it would have the effect of checking some of them, of preventing the completion of others, and, it might be, stopping some which had been already adopted. He should not grieve at this, for he was fully persuaded that they went too far, and that before many months were over their heads a reaction would take place, and that more or less ravaging and sweeping effects would occur to the commercial and monetary interests of this country. He had done his duty by addressing them in that place; he held it to be equally the duty of all good citizens having the means of addressing others to avail themselves of those means; and it was more especially the duty of those in whose hands was the public press of this country, by which he meant the newspaper and periodical press, for every press was public—he held it to be their duty, as well as his own, to give timely and effectual warning to the community, and above all, to protect the safety of individuals from the frenzy of speculation, which was driving men to destruction.

ANTI-MAYNOOTH MEETING AT THE LONDON TAVERN.

On Monday morning a public meeting of the citizens of London was held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, in compliance with a requisition addressed to the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, signed by upwards of 100 of the merchants, bankers, and traders of the city, requesting his lordship to call a meeting of those who were opposed to the endowment out of the national treasury of the Roman Catholic College of Maynooth, for the purpose of petitioning the Legislature against that measure.

Shortly after 10 o'clock the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor entered the room amidst considerable applause, accompanied by Messrs. Wheelton (late sheriff), J. Labouchere, T. Pewtress, Gould, Cummins, Moore, Lowe, Curling, D. W. Wire, R. Boothby, Roberts, Ridley, Sewell, Blackett, Coats, Rolls, Fry, Gull, Gordon, Farmer, Gillespie, Mills, D. W. Harvey, the Rev. M. Gibbs, the Rev. J. Pratt, the Rev. Dr. Bunting, the Rev. Dr. Alder, &c.

The Lord Mayor having been called to the chair, said that in consequence of having received a requisition from the bankers and merchants of the city of London, requesting him to call a meeting for the purpose of opposing the grant to Maynooth, he had called the present meeting for that purpose; and he trusted whatever would be proposed to the meeting, would be in a Christian spirit and without any allusion to party spirit or party politics.

Mr. J. Labouchere then proposed the first resolution, which was as follows:—

"That this meeting regards with the deepest repugnance and apprehension, the proposition just submitted to Parliament by Her Majesty's Ministers, for the permanent endowment of the Romish College of Maynooth; considering that measure to involve a distinct renunciation of the national Protestantism, to which it would humbly ascribe that Divine blessing which has raised Great Britain to its present elevation of power, wealth and prosperity."

Believing, as he firmly did, that the measure under consideration of Parliament for the endowment of Maynooth, was one which, in its effects, would be most disastrous to this country, being directly opposed to the revealed will of the Creator, he conceived it to be his bounden duty to avail himself of the privilege which he enjoyed, of protesting against that measure, and of joining in petitioning that it might never take effect. He was sure they would agree with him that this opposition was not founded upon political or factious grounds, but solely upon religious and conscientious motives. (Cheers.) Bearing that in mind, and considering that the majority of the inhabitants of England and Scotland were opposed to the measure, and looking, too, at the vast number of petitions that were daily presented against it, he did entertain a faithful hope that the Legislature would (acting upon the precedent of Sir R. Walpole in a bill of a secular nature) not turn a deaf ear to their petitions, and that the Sovereign would not be called upon to affix her signature to a bill which practically denied the sentiment which she had affirmed on her ascent to the throne of this country. (Cheers.) He might argue against this measure upon political grounds, and he could clearly show that even upon political motives it was a useless grant. He might easily show that the effect of educating Roman Catholic priests at Maynooth had not been, as might have been supposed, to attach them to our Government; but, on the contrary, to detach them from it. He might argue, too, that the grant was totally uncalled for; that it had never been sought, and that it was not required. The Roman Catholics had plenty of funds of their own wherewith to endow their own college; witness the numerous elegant temples that they had erected throughout the land, and the vast sum annually spent by the Propaganda Society for disseminating their doctrines; and so uncalled for was it, that the great agitator in Ireland actually deemed it necessary to offer an apology for accepting it. He (Mr. Labouchere), however, did not argue against it upon secular or political motives; he opposed it solely upon religious grounds, as a member of the Church of England.

Mr. M. Gould seconded the resolution, which was carried almost unanimously, two hands only being held up against it.

Mr. J. J. Cummins proposed the second resolution, which was in the following terms:—

"That this meeting, contemplating the measure in the light in which it is viewed by the leading statesmen on both sides of the House of Commons, as the first step to the establishment of the Romish priesthood in Ireland, is of opinion, that before attempting the introduction of so great a change in the national policy, there should have been offered, on the part of its promoters, some distinct explanation of the course intended to be pursued on the great question of religious endowments. And, without implying or admitting that such a question ought to be entertained at all, this meeting considers that those who have propounded the present measure should at least explain whether their object is to establish two religions in Ireland or three, or what number."

He felt that this country had arrived at a crisis well deserving the attention of every British subject—of every true Protestant—of every real philanthropist. This was a crisis at which policy ended, and conscience must begin to act. It was the letting in of the point of the wedge—the admitting of the principle which, if it were tolerated to the degree of a small grant of money to the College of Maynooth, would carry them forward to the establishment of a Popish Church in Ireland in all its power and all its fulness. He asked them—were they prepared for that? (Loud cries of "No, no) and yet to that they must go if they consented to this endowent. (Cheers.) Strongly attached as he was to the general political principles of those in power, he need scarcely tell them how deeply grieved he was that he should ever have been called upon to oppose such a measure as this. Entertaining the sentiments that he did, however, he should be acting neither an honest nor a conscientious part did he not thus clear himself as an individual from any participation in this crime. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. A. Moore seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. D. W. Harvey proposed the next resolution,

"And further, this meeting feels entitled to complain of the unprecedented attempt now making to force through Parliament, with unusual haste, a measure, including a grant of the public money, in spite of the deep repugnance so strongly manifested by all classes, degrees, and denominations of the British people."

Mr. Hamilton seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

On the motion of Mr. Wheelton, seconded by Mr. Ridley, a petition to the House of Commons, founded upon the foregoing resolutions, was adopted.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

A most dramatic scene came off on Thursday, at the Marquis de P——'s. You are aware of the brilliancy of his réunions, and the immense sums of money which change hands at his hotel. During the past season some tremendous losses accrued to several of his habitual guests. No one would confess having won. "We are cheated, that is indisputable," exclaimed the Duke de C——. "Duped to the outrance!" cried the Comte de F——, but by whom no one could discover. The complaints were necessarily unpleasant to the distinguished Amphytrion—he determined upon giving a valedictory soirée—the crowd was immense, the toilettes brilliant. Amongst the crowd was observed a gentleman who was announced by a German title, and was generally supposed to be an attaché of the diplomatic body. His hair was powdered, and his breast covered with brilliant orders. He seated himself at the principal play table—lost every game—notes of large amount passed from his possession—his well-stocked purse vanished quickly—still not a muscle of his face moved—not a sigh escaped from his bosom. He rose from the table and whispered a few words into the ear of the Marquis de P——. Three of the principal gainers were ushered into the presence of the host, who thus addressed them:—"My good friends, you are gentlemen of so much talent, that it reaches even to the very ends of your fingers." "Indeed," added the diplomatist; "I must add my slight tribute of admiration. I observed your tactics, and have, I think, improved upon your system. See—you will oblige me," said he, presenting a pack of cards, "by each drawing a card—and you are at liberty to cull your favourite; now you have won sixty louis from me, and honour among thieves is a principle which you will, I am sure, not refuse to acknowledge. You will, therefore, reimburse the trifling sum, which I confess I have the selfishness to demand. Perhaps you may suppose, gentlemen, that I have used marked cards; I will overcome the objection—those which you have in your pockets will equally answer the purpose—the pack in your right hand pocket will do." "Enough;" said M. de P., "leave the hotel—I wish no scene—I shall report you to the police." "Not before they have restored my losses," exclaimed the inexorable diplomatist, who was the celebrated conjuror, Jean Deville, who had been engaged by M. de P. for the purpose of discovering the presdigiteurs of society. One of these fellows drained me of eight louis, at your friend's, Mdlle. L. B. How these sharpers contrive to get into society is extraordinary—in England it would be impossible, but access here is comparatively easy.

Lolla Montez, who has met with the same reception at the Porte St. Martin, as she has experienced in the various theatres at which she has appeared, débûted this week before the Premiere Chambre du Tribunal, in the character of a petitioner, praying the possession of the legacy left to her by poor M. Dujarier, the late proprietor of La Presse newspaper. It appears, that the night previous to the fatal duel of the 10th of last March, that M. Dujarier made a will, which has since been placed in the possession of M. Desaigne, the well-known notary; in this testament, after several bequests to members of his family, he leaves, in favour of Lolla Montez, eighteen shares of the Palais Royale. The application was for the delivery of these shares. Some delay had taken place in consequence of some legal informality in the deed of succession. The tribunal, after a hearing of the various claimants, decided that they must be placed at the disposal of the pseudo-dancer of Boleros, at the end of the present month. You will perceive that Lola is now become a theatrical manager—indeed, the principal directresse of the Palais Royale—what rebellions, what female duels, what "love passages" will be renewed, on the stage of the former triumphs of Dejazet; all the etudiants are looking forward for the first night of her management. I, of course, shall be there, and will transmit for your edification and fancy, a graphic history of this great histrionic event.

The latest triumph of the Polka is replete with strange and mixed considerations. I was staying at Mons a few days since—I had slept uneasily; and having Polked furiously the previous night, was haunted with visions of sprites, sphinxes, and genii, dancing the Hungarian toe and heel inspiring measure. I awoke amidst the booming sounds of its rhythmical measure—I rubbed my eyes, pulled my ears, cooled my brain by inserting my head in cold water, but all was vain—still rung out the notes of the Polka, sending its echoes over distant hill and valley. I became literally bewildered. I snatched the bell-rope, and rung lustily for my valet—he judged from my excited features that I was suddenly seized with insanity. "Tell me," I exclaimed, "what means this ringing of the Polka, and these shouts of Polka! Polka!" "Monsieur," he replied, "be calm; to-day is a fête in honour of the carillons playing the air of Polka—it is settled that they are to repeat it every half-hour—to-morrow they are to ring out the 'Lucia.'" What a confusion of things sacred and profane—offering up orison and prayer within the sacred building, while the melodies of the ball-room, with its mundane associations, are ringing in the ears of the petitioner.

Two vacancies have occurred in the Royal Libraries—one at the Palace at Fontainebleau, the other at the Palace at Compeigne. The premature deaths of Casimir Delavigne and Alexandre Soumet have left a void which it will be found difficult to fill up.

It is generally reported that the prize of 10,000 francs, to be given by the Academie Française, for the best tragedy or comedy represented on the French stage, would be decreed to Alexandre Dumas, for his tragedy of "Caligula," but the truth is, that the intended verdict of the committee remains up to this moment a sealed book. Alfred de Vigny and Vitet have been named as likely to become the successful candidates.

The Princess de Canino, the widow of Lucien Buonaparte, has addressed letters to the leading newspapers, in which she protests with great energy against several passages relative to her husband, which have appeared in Thiers' "History of the Consulate," to prove the utter absence of truth, as regards several portions of the book. She has avowed her determination to publish a refutation, supported by authentic documents. The intention of the lady has created a vivid excitement in the political and literary salons. All this but tends to increase the sale of the book—and so far its author and the booksellers will gain a pecuniary profit; but if the book be to serve as a mirror of past events, reflecting the just moral proportions of the actors who figure in its pages, it must then become, in the eyes of the readers of history, a mere ebullition of fiction founded on facts.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers state that Louis Philippe has left Paris for Eu, where he intends to remain a few days. Before his departure, he signed five ordinances creating the Duke de Trevesa, M. Bertin de Vaux, M. Victor Hugo, General Achard, and M. de Tilley, an ex-Deputy, Peers of France.

The Chamber of Peers has passed the Colonial Administration Bill by a majority of 103 to 59. This bill, though defective, is the first blow struck at slavery in the French colonies. The committee on the bill admits in its report that slavery is to be abolished, and that the only question now is, how that object is to be carried into effect.

The Chamber of Deputies has adopted the bill for securing the copyright, in France, to the authors of literary and artistical works and dramatical productions published in Sardinia, agreeably to the treaty signed between that country and France on the 28th of August, 1843.

The Chamber has since been occupied with a project of law relative to savings banks, the object of which appears to be to guard against the too prompt withdrawal of the money lodged in the savings banks—an event which a moment of public panic might bring about, to the great inconvenience of the Treasury.

The Constitutionnel publishes a second note addressed by M. Guizot to the Swiss Vorort, in which he expresses a friendly disposition towards Switzerland, and his profound respect for the independence of the Confederation.

SPAIN.

Our accounts from Madrid are to the 9th inst. The sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on the 8th presented considerable interest. The Assembly was crowded, and all the Ministers were present. The President of the Council of Ministers announced that he was about to communicate to the Chamber a Royal Decree authorising the marriage of her Majesty Queen Maria Christina of Bourbon, and the manner and form which had been adopted. The following is the decree, and the law to which it refers:—

"DECREE.—In consequence of the cogent reasons submitted to me by my august mother, Donna Maria Christina de Bourbon, and after having consulted my Council of Ministers, I authorise her to contract a marriage with Don Fernando Munoz, Duke of Rianzares; and I declare that by the fact of her contracting this conscientious marriage, although with a person of inferior rank to her own, she has not declined in my affection nor love, and that she shall preserve all the honours and the prerogatives which belong to her as Queen Mother, but that her husband shall only enjoy the honours, prerogatives, and distinctions which belong to his rank; that he shall preserve his armorial bearings and his name, and that the children born from this marriage shall be subject to the terms of the 12th article of the 9th law, chapter 2nd, 10th book of the new compendium of the statutes, and may inherit the unsettled property of their parents, in conformity with the terms of the statutes.

"Given at the Palace on the 11th of October, 1844. Signed by the hand of the Queen. Countersigned by the Minister of Justice, Louis Mayans."

After listening to the communication, the Chamber voted 34,000,000 reals to the Queen, and 3,000,000 to the Infanta Luisa Fernanda; the 3,000,000 demanded for Maria-Christina were voted by a majority of 116 to 9, M. Oren making but some brief remarks on the grant; 3,500,000 reals were also voted to the Infante Don Francisco de Paula and his family.

SWITZERLAND.

Nothing of importance has been received this week from Switzerland. There has been no further interruption to tranquillity, and the dispute about the Jesuits seems to be settled, at least for the present. On the 10th the Swiss Diet, which is setting at Zurich, adopted unanimously a resolution for the suppression of the Free Corps, but without going as far as the Jesuit party wished. The propositions of the committee on the subject of the amnesty were also strongly opposed by the deputies for Lucerne and the other Catholic states; and the Diet met again on the 11th instant, when, on the motion of M. Naff, deputy for St. Gall, a majority of twelve Cantons voted a "recommendation," instead of an "invitation," to Lucerne to issue an amnesty. A similar proposal relative to the Cantons of Argau, Valais, and Tessino, was not adopted. A sum of 250,000 Swiss francs, to be supplied by the federal treasury, was voted for defraying the expenses occasioned by the calling out of the federal contingents.

Seven editors of Radical newspapers are stated to have been killed or captured in the expedition against Lucerne.

The Ami de la Constitution states that there are in Lucerne 1602 prisoners in all, and that the number of wounded volunteers there is 150. The dead have been buried—30 at Malters, 10 at Littom, and 9 at Lucerne. Several persons, it is said, perished in the Emme. Amongst the prisoners are 18 Bernese, and 694 Argovians.

A Zurich journal estimates at 40,000 Swiss livres (59,000f.) a-day the expense of the army embodied by the Federal Directory; a charge, it adds, which will fall heavily upon the Cantons, which have already been impoverished by extraordinary expenditures of every kind

UNITED STATES.

The Cambria has arrived at Liverpool with letters and papers from New York to the 31st ultimo, Boston to the 1st, and Halifax to the 3rd inst., all inclusive, which are twelve days later than those received by the last packet-ship. The papers do not announce any important fact; but it is, nevertheless, gratifying to find that the "blustering" address of Mr. Polk does not appear to excite public sympathy. On the contrary, the press seems almost unanimous in deprecating war with England. Annexation, and the measures likely to grow out of it, continued to absorb a large portion of public attention, and some new circumstances had been developed in connection with it, amongst which we may mention that advices had been received from Texas, which state that the Texian Executive is entirely hostile to annexation as selected by the United States, with President Tyler at its head. The intelligence of the passage of the resolution by the Senate had reached Galveston, and it was received with much disapprobation by the people generally, and the press was particularly strong in its denunciations of the proposition; whilst the National Register, the official organ, publishes an article, said to have been written by the President of Texas, positively denying that Texas will be annexed to the United States upon any terms.

The papers publish the protest of Gen. Almonte, the Mexican Minister against the annexation of Texas. He speaks of it in very strong terms and describes it as "an act of aggression the most unjust which can be recalled in the annals of modern history, such as the spoliation of a friendly nation, like Mexico, of a considerable part of her territory." The General concludes his protest by stating that his mission had terminated, and that he has arranged to leave Washington for New York, where he will remain until he receives fresh instructions from the new Mexican Administration, and he expresses openly his belief that war will ensue.

The intelligence carried out from England by the Cambria, of the new Tariff proposed by Sir Robert Peel, had given a great impetus to American commerce, and had very much raised the price of cotton and other commodities, the duty on which was repealed.

The health of General Jackson is represented to be very precarious.

No accounts of the missing packet-ships had been received, and all doubt as to their fate has now died away.

The money-market was sound, active, and easy, and, upon the whole, all looked well and prosperous in the business condition of the country. The transactions in foreign exchanges were extensive, the supply of bills extensive, and the market closed firm at the quotations: on London, 109⅝ to 109¾.

The Canada papers state that the town of Portland (suburb of St. John's, New Brunswick) had been the scene of a fierce riot. Four men were shot, one of whom is beyond recovery. The Royal Artillery, with field-pieces, were called out, but before their arrival the ground was in possession of two companies of provincial troops, which restored order. The cause of this riot is not explained.

THE OREGON TERRITORY.—As so much interest has recently been directed to the Oregon boundary, some particulars connected with it may probably be acceptable. Under the name of the Oregon is comprehended the whole region westward of the Chippewayan range of mountains. The waters that rise on the western declivities of these mountains flow into the Columbia, the Multnomah, and the Lake Bueneventura. Most of the elevated summits of the mountains are above the limits of perpetual congelation. Beyond the mountains the country descends by regular belts in the form of immense terraces or descending plains, disposed regularly, the one below the other. Beyond the first plain, and between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific is another extensive and high chain of mountains, in which are the great falls of the Columbia. Still west of these, and running parallel with the coast, and at the distance of 150 miles, is the third and last chain. The peaks of all these chains are covered with perpetual snow. The highest peaks have been named Mount Reignier, Mount St. Helens, Mount Hood, and Mount Jefferson. The only rivers explored in this region are the Columbia and its branches. Being sheltered on the north by protecting ridges of mountains, and the breezes from the west being softened by coming over an immense extent of sea, the climate is as mild as it is in the country east of these mountains four or five degrees to the southward. Langsdorf describes the country on the southern limit as the country of oranges and figs, of verdure, health, and fertility. We scarcely remember to have seen more sober pictures of a desirable country than those drawn by him of that region; they correspond with the accounts of Lewis and Clark, as well as those of other travellers who have explored it. When the intelligent and intrepid adventurers just named left the country in March, and in the latitude of Montreal, the prairies were in blossom, and the forwardness of the season seems to have corresponded with that of North Carolina at the same time. The winters are rainy and some parts of them severe. In 1805 Lewis and Clark descended the Columbia river from the mountains to the Pacific, and spent the winter on its shore. They returned by the same river to the mountains, and most of the exact information that we have respecting the country is derived from them. A settlement of fur traders, called Astoria, was established here, together with a military post called Fort Classop, or Fort George. As may be supposed, the scattered inhabitants of the waste are comparatively few, and of a daring and lawless character. Some are allured by the profits to be derived from the pursuit of the chase; and others, by the congeniality of such a life with a reckless and adventurous spirit. The number of Indians of the different tribes is estimated at 140,000.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

RAILWAYS IN IRELAND.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE put some questions respecting the decisions of the Board of Trade upon the proposed railways in Ireland, in answer to which the Earl of DALHOUSHIE stated that the railway committee of the Board of Trade, in reporting in favour of railways in Ireland, did so not absolutely, as the best lines that could be devised, but as the best which had been submitted to their consideration. Ireland was so far different from England, that it had been elaborately surveyed by a commission appointed by the Government seven years ago; and an admirable report had been the result. By its conclusions the railway committee had been guided; and whenever it was necessary to depart from them, it was always with regret, and always under circumstances which would probably, under the altered circumstances, have been sanctioned by the commissioners themselves.

The Lands Clauses Consolidation Bill went through committee and an adjournment took place about seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE ON THE MAYNOOTH COLLEGE BILL.—After the presentation of a vast number of petitions against the Maynooth College Bill, the debate upon the second reading was resumed by Mr. HAWES, who said he would not vote against the second reading, but that he considered the bill as the precursor of a more extensive measure. He did not join with those who opposed this measure as being calculated to encourage the Catholic religion, nor did he think that if the grant were refused it would discourage that religion.—Sir T. FREMANTLE followed in support of the bill.—Mr. FOX MAULE opposed it, on the ground of its making that which was an annual grant a permanent one, and that it also recognised an establishment for the education of the Roman Catholic priesthood of Ireland as an establishment in connection with the State. He contended that this would be a measure, if carried out at the expense of the British public, which would be unjust in the highest degree to the great dissenting bodies in this country. If they took from the taxation of England and Scotland to endow, the did not care whether it was Roman Catholicism or any other phase of Christianity in Ireland, they would meet with his unqualified opposition.—Lord Castlereagh and the O'Conor Don spoke in support of the bill.—Mr. Lefroy opposed the bill on religious grounds, and because he deemed it a violation of the Protestant character of our constitution.—Colonel T. Wood supported the bill on the general justice of the case, and regarded it as involving, in common honesty, other measures which would pacify Ireland and cement the Union—such as the endowment of the Catholic church. In these opinions he differed from many of the most influential and cordial supporters among his constituency; but, whatever might be the consequences, he felt that he violated no pledge, and forfeited no honour, in giving a hearty vote in favour of the present measure.—Sir C. Napier said he likewise differed from many of his constituents; but, in the event of a war, he was not one of those who would enable either France or America to throw a force into Catholic Ireland in order to attack Protestant England. His fears were not chimerical, for cited instances, he contended, justified care, if not alarm, for the future. But, if fear were ineffectual with Sir Robert H. Inglis and his friends, he appealed to their sense of justice in favour of the Irish Catholics.—The succeeding speakers were Mr. S. O'Brien and Mr. Gregory against the bill, and Mr. Wynn and Mr. Cowper in support of it. Mr. Macaulay supported the bill warmly and argued upon the paltriness of conceding a grant when it was so small in amount that teachers were only paid like grooms, and opposing it when a liberal sum was proposed. He said that if the Government gave its patronage at all, it ought to be a patronage worthy of the college, and of the Government which gave it. Although Mr. Macaulay, however, supported the grant, he energetically accused the advocates of the bill with inconsistency. "Is it possible (said he) that the people out of doors should not feel some indignation when they see men who when in opposition voted against the old grant to Maynooth, now whipping in their numbers to vote for an increased grant? (Cheering). Can you wonder that all those fierce spirits you taught to harass us should now turn round to worry you? (Vehement cheering, which drowned the right honourable gentleman's voice.) Exeter Hall sets up its bray (laughter)—Mr. M'Niell is horror-struck at seeing a still larger grant proposed for the priests of Baal at the table of Jezebel. The Protestant operatives of Dublin are calling for an impeachment in exceedingly bad English. (Laughter and cheers.) Did you think when you called up the devil of religious animosity, that you would lay as easily as you had evoked him? (Cheers.) The day of reckoning has come, and now, and upon that bench you must pay for the disingenuous conduct of years. (Cheering.) If that be not so, then clear your public fame before the house and the country; show some clear intelligible principle with respect to Irish affairs that has guided you both when in office and in opposition. (Renewed cheers.) Show us how, if you are honest now in 1845, you were honest in 1841. (Cheers again.) Explain to us why, when out of place, you stung Ireland into madness, in order to gain with you the prejudices of England, and now, when in power, you light up England in a flame in order to ingratiate yourself with Ireland. (Cheers.) Let us hear some argument to show that if now as ministers you are right, you were not the most factious and unprincipled opposition that ever sat in this place." (Cheers.) Mr. Shaw said he had been in Ireland when the first copy of this bill arrived there; and he never recollected any impression so deep as that which it occasioned. He then entered into an explanation of the reasons which induced him to oppose it; and in reply to Mr. Gladstone's observation, that Protestantism was but a negative creed, observed with great warmth, and amid loud cheers from the house, that the name of Protestantism was still intelligible and dear to the hearts of the people of England.—Mr. S. Herbert supported the policy of ministers in bringing forward this measure, and then proceeded to defend them from the accusation preferred by Mr. Macaulay, that they had deserted their former principles.—The debate was adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The Powers of Railway Companies.—Lord Brougham called the attention of the house to what he termed the "frenzy" of railway speculation, and presented two petitions—one from the Right Hon. Lady Georgiana Fane, owner of an estate in Somersetshire, complaining of the insolent manner in which she had been treated by the agents of a proposed line, who acted as if the company had already entered into possession of her estate; and another from John Hartnell, a nurseryman, at Yeovil, who had given £500 for an acre of ground, through which a line was about to be carried by a company who threatened to give him as much or little as they pleased for his land In such a state of things, Lord Brougham said it was time for the legislature to intervene, for tyrannical powers such as those claimed by railroad companies had never been granted to any other associations. This was the only case in the history of civilized nations of compulsory sales forced upon the community. He warned their lordships not to put too much faith in the infallibility of a standing orders' committee; cases were perpetually occurring which their vigilance had not foreseen. He had himself devised two standing orders, which he would lay on their lordships' table. One relating to a statement of the actual amount of consents given on any proposed line, together with the measurement of the distance through which it was to be carried by compulsion, and where the consents were not obtained; the other would require information, not only of a line's passing through a private house, but how near it went to it; a company should be bound to mention, before the first reading of their bill, all the houses situate within 300 yards of their line. He again entreated the house to interfere to check the present frenzy of speculation; and concluded by moving that the two proposed orders should be laid on the table and printed, intimating that he should call the attention of the house to them on a future day.—Lord Dalhousie admitted that there was some truth in what Lord Brougham had said, but he believed his statement was rather highly coloured. However, when the subject was brought fully before the house, he (Lord Dalhousie) would be prepared to state his views fully.—The house adjourned soon after seven.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The Impeachment of Sir Robert Peel.—A motion of Mr. Ferrand, that the petition of the Dublin Protestant Operative Association, calling for the impeachment of Sir R. Peel, should be printed with the votes, excited some discussion, but Mr. Ferrand declining to found a specific proposition on the subject, withdrew the motion, as the house appeared to be against him.

The Adjourned Debate.—The adjourned debate on the Maynooth College Bill was resumed by Major Beresford, who, associated as he was by ancestral and family ties with the Established Church, felt himself called upon to oppose the bill. He could scarcely be called a bigot, for he had in early life refused a seat in that house on the condition of voting against the emancipation of the Catholics. There must, however, be limits to concession. Measures such as that before the house led to the fear that the time might come when the Prime Minister might propose the appropriation of four-fifths of the revenues of the Established Church, in order to endow the priests of the Catholic persuasion.—Mr. Byng said he should support the bill, not only upon political grounds, but on what was far nearer and dearer to his heart—religious grounds also. He thought that the Catholics of Ireland had been worse governed than the subjects of any other Government in Europe. (Hear, hear.) He could not find in the sacred Scriptures that he was ordered by the great God, who made them all, to hate any man because he differed from him in his religious views. (Hear, hear.) There was no such mandate to be found in the sacred volume. (Hear, hear.) He believed that every man had a right to worship God Almighty according to the mode which he imagined would be the most acceptable to the great God. (Hear, hear.) It was impossible that he (Mr. Byng) could any longer remain in that house to give a vote involving the interests of his Catholic fellow-subjects, if he did not record that vote in their favour —Colonel Verner resisted the bill on the ground of its incompatibility with the Protestant nature of our constitution.—Mr. Hume supported the bill upon the general principles of toleration, and its necessity for putting an end to agitation in Ireland.—Mr. Newdegate was of opinion that the principles of Catholicism were adverse to civil and religious happiness. He therefore regretted the introduction of the present measure, more particularly because the Catholics of England had evinced that there was no lack of funds for the zealous support and extension of their establishments.—Mr. Pakington said he was a member of the great party which brought the present Government into power, and he positively denied that the "No Popery" cry had been resorted to generally by that party to accomplish their object. He viewed the increased grant to Maynooth as a peculiar grace, emanating from the same parties who had conceded Catholic emancipation, and he regarded it as another step in that conciliatory policy which it was absolutely necessary that every Government must pursue towards Ireland.—Mr. P. M. Stewart opposed the bill, as constituting Maynooth into one of the endowed institutions of the country, and departing from that perpetual protest which this country maintained against Popery.—The Earl of Lincoln admitted that the religious feeling of the country was excited, and no statesman should disregard its expression. It was, however, equally the duty of a statesman to weigh well what was just and reasonable to all classes of the community. The noble lord urged the necessity of placing Maynooth upon a suitable foundation as a measure of expediency, arising out of existing circumstances, and supported the bill on the ground that, though not immediately, nor by itself, it would yet eventually tend to the tranquillity of Ireland.—Lord Worsley, although differing from his constituents, would, nevertheless, vote for the second reading of the bill. He would, however, support Mr. Ward's amendment for supplying the increased grant out of the revenues of the Irish Church Establishment.—Mr. M. Milnes looked upon the bill as the first great step towards the conciliation of the Roman Catholics of Ireland, who had been alienated from England because Parliament had refused to secure the affections of the people through the natural channel of their priesthood.—Mr. Sergeant Murphy supported the bill, convinced, that if received as it was conceded, it would tend to give tranquillity to his country, and that it would be so received, he, as an Irish Roman Catholic, entertained not the slightest doubt.—Sir John Hanmer protested against the principle upon which the Government appeared to be acting, believing that the present was but a step towards some kind of endowment for the clergy of the Roman Catholic Church.—Mr. Ross advocated the measure as being well calculated to conciliate the feelings of the Catholics of Ireland.—Mr. M. Gore gave the measure his most cordial and decided support, and thought the Government deserved great credit for bringing it forward. It was also to the credit of the Opposition that they had met the bill in the spirit they had displayed; for there could be no doubt but if they had acted differently they might have created considerable embarrassment to the Ministry.—The debate was then again adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The Adjourned Debate.—The debate upon the Maynooth College Bill was resumed by Mr. G. A. Hamilton, who stated that he should vote against the measure because he believed that the endowment of Maynooth was an infringement of the Protestant Constitution.—Mr. Ellice said he should vote for the second reading of the bill, and perhaps he also might vote for the proposed motion of Mr. Ward, pointing out the funds from whence the grant ought to be paid. Mr. Ellice denied that the measure could be dangerous to the Protestant Church, and said the only difficulty which he felt on the subject, was his objection to vote one single pound out of the taxes for any sectarian purposes. Undoubtedly this proposition was a very different one from those which we had been in the habit of hearing from Tory governments, but the Reform Bill was passed, and with the Reform Bill had passed away all Tory government on Tory principles. It was impossible any longer to continue that system.—Mr. Goring spoke against the bill.—Lord Ashley ascribed greater importance to this measure than the Catholic Emancipation Bill, and proceeded to state his objections to it. He argued that by giving an endowment to Maynooth the State was taking upon itself the whole education of the priesthood of Ireland. The bill amounted to a distinct recognition of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland. Lord Ashley declared that he was not actuated by any feeling of hostility towards Ireland; on the contrary, if he thought that this concession would really content the people of Ireland, he would pause even in this matter before he gave his opposition to it. Giving, as he did, his vote according to the dictates of his conscience, he could not assent to a measure which, so far from conferring peace, he believed would end in nothing but strife and confusion and exasperated hostility, and to more frequent collision, both in this country and in Ireland. Neither could he assent to a measure that would in any degree suppress, or even retard, the advancement of the Protestant faith, a faith which he, in common with the great majority of those around him, believed, and might assert without offence to be, the main instrument of civilization—of social and individual happiness—of civil and religious liberty. (Cheers.)—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that, sincerely attached as he was to the Established Church, he could never bring himself to vote for any measure which could have a tendency to injure it. The bill, however, introduced no new principle, and he believed that the spirit of Protestantism was more likely to reach the minds of the Catholics through the medium of kindness than by neglect, depression and ignorance. He believed that at the present moment 50 members could not be found who would vote against the ordinary grant to Maynooth, and it was clear, therefore, that the only course to be adopted was by a small pecuniary grant to raise the Maynooth establishment into decency and respect, and thereby to secure the gratitude, good-will, and tranquillity of the great body of the Irish people.—Sir W. Clay warmly supported the bill. The grant, he contended, should be received as strictly given for educational purposes to the unjustly treated Roman Catholics of Ireland.—Lord Bernard opposed, and Sir. J. Easthope and Lord Jocelyn supported the bill.—Mr. Bright expressed his intention to vote against the bill, the object of which, he said, was to tame down the agitators. (Hear, hear.) It was a sop given to the priests. It was hush money—(hear, hear, from Colonel Sibthorp)—that they may not proclaim to the whole country—to Europe and to the world—the sufferings of the population. They were about to take from the priests their sympathies with the people, and to give them a little more Latin and Greek; they meant to make them as tame as the priests of Suffolk and Dorset.—Lord J. Manners said he was ready to take upon himself his share of any odium incurred by the Government in bringing forward this measure of just concession, which he could not believe calculated in any way to endanger the Established Church. He admitted that the Irish Established Church was in danger, but that danger emanated from her own sons, who pursued a course likely to alienate the good wishes of all other communities.—Mr. Rutherfurd supported the bill.—Mr. Smythe, after taunting several hon. members with inconsistency in regard to this question, stated that he should support the bill, and ridiculed the "No Popery" cry. He wished some of the no Popery enthusiasts would look back for 200 years, and pass in review all the men they had believed in, from Titus Oates to Lord George Gordon, and from Lord George Gordon to the present time (laughter), and then they would probably agree with him, that all the superstition was not on one side. One thing would be the effect of this retrospect, that they would find out that they had always been betrayed by their own leaders. Their great leader at Exeter-hall possessed at least one quality in common with the dervishes of the East; he went round (hear, hear, hear, and laughter)—he was performing a parliamentary polka, like that which was now going on between the honourable member for the University of Cambridge and the hon. member for Selkirk. Mr. Smythe adverted to Mr. Gladstone who he said had voted all ways. First he voted against the grant, then he voted in favour of it. Then, he went out of office because he was opposed to the introduction of the measure; after that he abstained from voting on the first reading (laughter); and now, at the second reading of the bill, the right hon. gentleman was prepared to vote in favour of it. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) If this bill should pass Sir R. Peel would have placed his country in a proud position, for when the cordial union between this country and France should cease, as one day cease it certainly would, the right hon. baronet might fall back on the cordial reunion which would then exist between this country and Ireland, and might say to the enemies of the empire, be they in Washington or be they in Paris, in the eloquent language of Lord John Russell, "Our Queen reigns over a united people."—After a speech from Mr. Redington, in favour of the bill, the debate was once more adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Many petitions were presented against the additional grant to Maynooth. One of them was presented, from his own diocese, by the Bishop of Chester, who, however, heartily concurred in the expediency of the Government measure. He considered it was a measure of concession, and by no means a violation of the sacred rights of the Protestant religion.

The Mutiny Bill, the Marine Mutiny Bill, and the Glass Duties Bill were read a third time and passed.

The House adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

The Adjourned Debate.—After numerous petitions for and against the Maynooth College Bill, Mr. C. Bruce commenced the adjourned debate. The hon. member opposed the bill both on principle and on the ground of expediency. The following hon. gentlemen took part in the debate during the evening—Sir G. Grey, Colonel Sibthorp, Mr. Plumptre, Lord Courtney, Mr. Spooner, Sir J. Graham, and Mr. Maclean. The debate was again adjourned; and the house rose at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

After the presentation of several petitions against the Maynooth grant,

Earl Powis gave notice that the Bill for the Union of the Sees of St. Asaph and Bangor stood for its second reading on Tuesday, the 29th. The report of the Railway Clauses Bill was brought up. Some other bills were advanced a stage and the house adjourned at half-past four.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The reading of the Agricultural and Commercial Bank of Ireland Bill was postponed till Friday next.

Railway Committees.—Lord G. Somerset, in considering the first resolution of the Second Report of the Committee on Railways, moved that counsel should open the proceedings in railway measures, but be debarred from summing up. After some observations by several members, Lord George Somerset withdrew his motion.—Mr. Hume postponed his motion for the correspondence relative to Lord Ellenborough's recall until after the Government "were freed from annoyance on the Maynooth grant."

Grant to Maynooth.—In answer to a question of Mr. J. Collett, Sir R. Peel stated that in the event of the discussion terminating that evening, he proposed to go into committee with the bill on Monday.—After the presentation of some petitions, Mr. S. Crawford rose, and deeply regretted his being compelled to vote against the measure.—Lord C. Hamilton supported the bill.—Mr. Muntz spoke against the bill, and said, as the Government had deviated from principle, he should do all he could to change it. The Irish, he said, could subscribe for Repeal and other agitation, and they ought to subscribe to pay for their priests.—Mr. Neville supported the bill.—Mr. Bellew defended the grant. He said he thought it very hard that the Irish Church should be brought forward on every occasion as a reason for not granting what the Irish wanted. Considering the spirit in which the measure had been met by Mr. O'Connell and in that house, he hoped it would be the harbinger of better days for Ireland. (Cheers.) Captain Taylor gave his opinion that the present Ministers were more unpopular with the Protestants than the last, with the additional disadvantage that they had more power to carry their measures. Believing that the bill would be fraught with ruinous consequences, he felt bound to oppose it.—Sir F. Trench said he should give his zealous and anxious support to the bill.—Mr. Cobden said he should vote for the bill, considering it only an educational grant. There was nothing in it for the endowment of the Catholic clergy, and he did not believe that in the present day they could pass a bill for the endowment of the Catholic Church, even if both parties united.—Mr. Ferrand denounced the Conservative party for having broken their pledges in regard to the Church. He said the Whigs in office were upright, honourable men, compared to the present Ministry. The conduct of the Government, he contended, had scattered the great Conservative party to the winds. Sir R. Peel, he said, was outraging all the pledges he had made on the hustings.—Mr. Sheil argued with great energy that much evil would arise if the present measure were rejected. The rejection of it would give a signal impulse to the Repeal agitation, because it would prove that the Government was not disposed to act in unison with the feelings of the people of Ireland. The First Lord of the Treasury had said he would risk a civil war rather than submit to Repeal; but was not a series of such measures as the Maynooth grant better than a civil war? The measure proposed had his unqualified approbation, and he only was sorry that he (Sir R. Peel) had not brought it forward at an earlier period of his career. Mr. Sheil, in conclusion, alluded to the proposed visit of the Queen to Ireland, and expressed his confidence that her Majesty would be received with enthusiasm.—Mr. Law (the Recorder) spoke against the bill. He was much interrupted, and, at one time, was called to order by Mr. Hutt, on the ground that he was reading his speech, contrary to the orders of the house. Mr. Law, in answer, said he was only reading the heads of his argument. Mr. Law, in concluding his speech, said that the question at issue was, whether the act of settlement should hereafter be a dead letter?—Mr. T. Duncombe defended the Dissenters for their opposition to the bill, an expressed a hope that they would continue it. He asked if the numerous petitions were to be treated as so much waste paper. He was astonished at the gratitude of the Irish for this paltry grant, and that they were ready to worship the golden image which the right hon. baronet had set up. He did not believe the measure would conciliate Ireland, and he should resist it as long as he was able.—Lord J. Russell said he could have given a silent vote in favour of the second reading, had it not been for the numerous petitions and the various letters he had received. He took a general review of the bill, and explained the motives which induced him to vote for it. He regretted the strong expressions in the petitions against the Roman Catholics; he also regretted the strong prejudices which still existed against them, and that the spirit which existed at the time of the Reformation had not been softened. With these views, he could not consent to the petitions of the people. If they could not act kindly to the people of Ireland, they must agree to the repeal of the union. For himself, he would rather retire into private life than vote against a measure which he thought essential to its welfare. Ireland was not yet on an equality with England, and he himself would endeavour hereafter to obtain for them further rights. He should vote for the bill, in the hope of making Ireland, if not the most improving, at least the most happy, part of her Majesty's dominions. (Cheers.)—Sir R. Inglis spoke against the bill. He said the objection of himself and friends was not to the amount, but to the principle.—Sir R. Peel, in reply, said he should not review the course of the debate. (It was half-past one o'clock when he rose.) He urged the house, if it thought right, to withdraw its confidence, but not to incur the danger of rejecting that bill. It was said that they would forfeit their seats, and perhaps the existence of the Government; but was it natural that they should incur those risks if they were not fully persuaded of the advantage of the measure? Sir R. Peel then alluded to the condition of Ireland, and argued that the measure was calculated to restore tranquillity to it. He then read an account of the wretched state of Maynooth, and said it could not injure the Protestant religion if they raised the position of the students of the College. In concluding his speech, he said he believed it would be for the interest of good order, nay, for the interest of the Protestant religion itself, that this measure should be passed. It was not intended to facilitate the design of Catholic endowment, but he would not pledge himself that he would never make the proposal.

The house then divided. The numbers were—

For the second reading	323
Against it	176
Majority for the second reading (Cheering) ..	147

The house adjourned at three o'clock this (Saturday) morning.

MISCELLANEOUS.—Commons.

New Writ.—A new writ has been ordered to issue for the county of Kent, in the room of Viscount Marsham, now Earl of Romney.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS.

Maynooth College Bill.—Mr. Ferrand has given notice, that on the order of the day for the third reading of the Maynooth College Bill being read, he shall move the following resolution, as an amendment:—"That it is the opinion of this house that the 7th and 8th Vic., c. 97, commonly called the Charitable Bequests Act, which received the Royal Assent on the 9th August, 1844, was a violation of the Act of Settlement, and a contravention of the oath of supremacy; and that the Maynooth College Bill is calculated to encourage and spread a religion opposed to the Protestant reformed religion established by law."

The Law of Mortmain.—Lord J. Manners has given notice of his intention to move for leave to bring in a bill to alter and amend the law of mortmain.

The Brussels journals state that Russia has just made a change in the law relative to the duty on refined sugar. This change is of the highest importance for the effect it will have on the manufacture of refined sugar in Europe.

Suicide through Distress.—On Monday Mr. Wakley held an inquest at the Middlesex Hospital on the body of James Goodwin, aged 37, a carcass butcher. It appeared that on the previous Thursday afternoon deceased went on board the Moonlight iron steamer, at Waterloo-bridge-stairs, and before the boat had progressed down the river thirty yards he jumped from off her into the water. He was saved from immediate death by Thomas Hones, coxswain of the Admiralty float, lying off Somerset house, and by a watermau, though he struggled with them to drown himself and begged of them to let him die. He was removed to the Middlesex Hospital, and though everything necessary was done for him he died in an hour. Deceased's wife, a woman nearly in a state of starvation, and only a few days since discharged from Guy's Hospital, said her husband had for about twelve months suffered from extreme pain in the head and from great poverty. Verdict, "That deceased destroyed himself in consequence of distress, but in what state of mind there was no evidence to show."

Danger of Children's Chaises.—On Monday a woman, named Williams, was drawing an infant son of Mr. Jones, the landlord of the Harrow public-house, Kingston, who was only ten months old, in a child's chaise, along the Fairfield-lane, Kingston, when, to get out of the way of a cart, which was coming up the road, she drew the chaise up the orchard bank, but in doing so upset it, and pitched the infant out into the road, when, in an instant, the wheel of the cart passed over the poor infant's neck, momentarily depriving it of life. The young man who drove the cart was not considered blameable.

Sudden Death of Mr. Grieve, the Artist.—On Wednesday, Mr. Carter held an inquest on the body of Mr. John Henderson Grieve, of Maizmore square, Peckham, artist, father of Messrs. Grieve, the scene-painters, who was found lying in the street, and taken to the Lambeth police-station, who, it was supposed, had been intoxicated, but it turned out that he was in an apoplectic fit, and he died in a short time. It was shown that the deceased was a remarkably abstemious man, and the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death." The son of deceased said that his father had a similar attack, but of a slight character, twelve months since, from which he recovered.

INAUGURATION OF THE AMERICAN PRESIDENT.

By the activity of our artist at New York, we are enabled to present to our readers two of the principal scenes of the Inauguration of President Polk, on the 4th ult., together with the accompanying details of this great political triumph.

The whole plan of an Inauguration was first arranged by General Washington, which has been observed by all his successors. The President elect, with the President in fact, leave for the Capitol together, side by side. The term of the latter does not expire till twelve o'clock, or the new term commence till the new President is sworn in, and subsequent to twelve o'clock. As they proceed to the Capitol, the President elect walks on the left hand of the President. As they return from the Capitol to the White House, their position is changed—the ex-President walks on the left-hand side of the President.

The crowd assembled in Washington on the 4th ult., is said to have been the largest ever before assembled on any similar occasion in the metropolis. At break of day a national salute of twenty-eight guns was fired.

A fine band of music paraded the streets, followed by a well-drilled uniform company. Car-load after car-load of people continued to arrive from Baltimore, till the whole Avenue seemed to swarm with people. Every hotel, every place of public resort, became perfectly jammed. The whole area, from the platform erected in front of the eastern portico of the Capitol, to the iron railing of the garden in the rear, was one dense mass of human beings. No persons were allowed to enter the Capitol, save and except those designated in the programme. But such was the anxiety to witness the Inauguration, that the people gathered round about the Capitol by the square acre, long before the hour of twelve arrived.

The procession line and military were formed in different parts of the city. The military escort was very handsome, and numbered all the independent companies of the District, one from Baltimore, and another from Virginia. There were two monnted companies, and half a dozen on foot, and these were followed by the politicians and political clubs. Cannon were fired at eight, nine, ten, and eleven o'clock, and when the procession entered the Capitol grounds.

The sun did not deign to shine at any moment, and the rain fell copiously from ten o'clock throughout the day. The procession lost all the display of their magnificent dresses, by being enveloped in umbrellas. The white silk badges of the marshals, with their blue ribbons, stuck to their black coats, while the plumes of the military hung drooping. The rain, indeed, spoiled the display of the day.

As the rain increased, umbrellas became in great request, and as all were well supplied, a spectator some distance up the Avenue, looking towards the Capitol, could see only a long line of moving umbrellas, terminating at the Capitol, the dome of which towered up like a gigantic umbrella held up by some invisible hand.

Our first scene represents the Private Approach to the Capitol, with the British and Russian Ministers in the foreground; and the gailydressed multitude crowding and jostling to the Capitol, having just alighted from their carriages, no vehicles being allowed to enter the grounds or square. Here, accordingly, the company had to alight.

Professor Morse brought out the Magnetic Telegraph to the platform, close to one side of it, from which point he could hear every thing that went on, having under review all the ceremonies performed, communicating results to Baltimore as fast as they transpired.

The Inaugural Procession moved to the Capitol in the following order:—

Chief Marshal and Aids.
Military.
Officers and Soldiers of the Revolution.
Reverend Clergy.
President Elect and his Predecessor, in an open carriage.
Ex-Presidents of the United States.
President Tyler's Cabinet.
Justices of the Supreme Court.
Diplomatic Corps.
Members Elect of the 29th Congress, and ex-Members of Congress.
Members of the Baltimore Democratic National Convention of 1844.
Governors and ex-Governors of States and Territories.
Members of State and Territorial Legislatures.
Federal and State Judges.
Officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Militia.
Citizens of States and Territories.
Corporate Authorities of Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria.
Democratic Associations and Clubs of the District of Columbia, and others from a distance.
Professors and Students of Colleges of the District of Columbia.
Citizens of the District of Columbia.

The Chief Marshal and his aids were bedizened with silks and ribbons in the way of scarfs and rosettes, and for batons of office, each was provided with a piece of young hickory, about two feet long, which was decked with ribbon.

There were several fine companies of military, all in excellent order, and apparently well drilled. Their appearance gave universal satisfaction, and attracted the greatest share of attention next to President Polk.

The "Officers and Soldiers of the Revolution," were represented by one fat, pursy gentleman, in a sort of navy undress, two young naval officers, and two boys, apparently midshipmen, about 16 years of age; and this respectable number of five individuals represented the Revolutionary warriors.

The Clergy turned out well. There were about twenty.

The President came next, looking well, though thin and anxious in appearance, with President Tyler in the same carriage.

Ex-Presidents—none.

Tyler's Cabinet—Wickliffe and Wilkins.

Supreme Court—none.

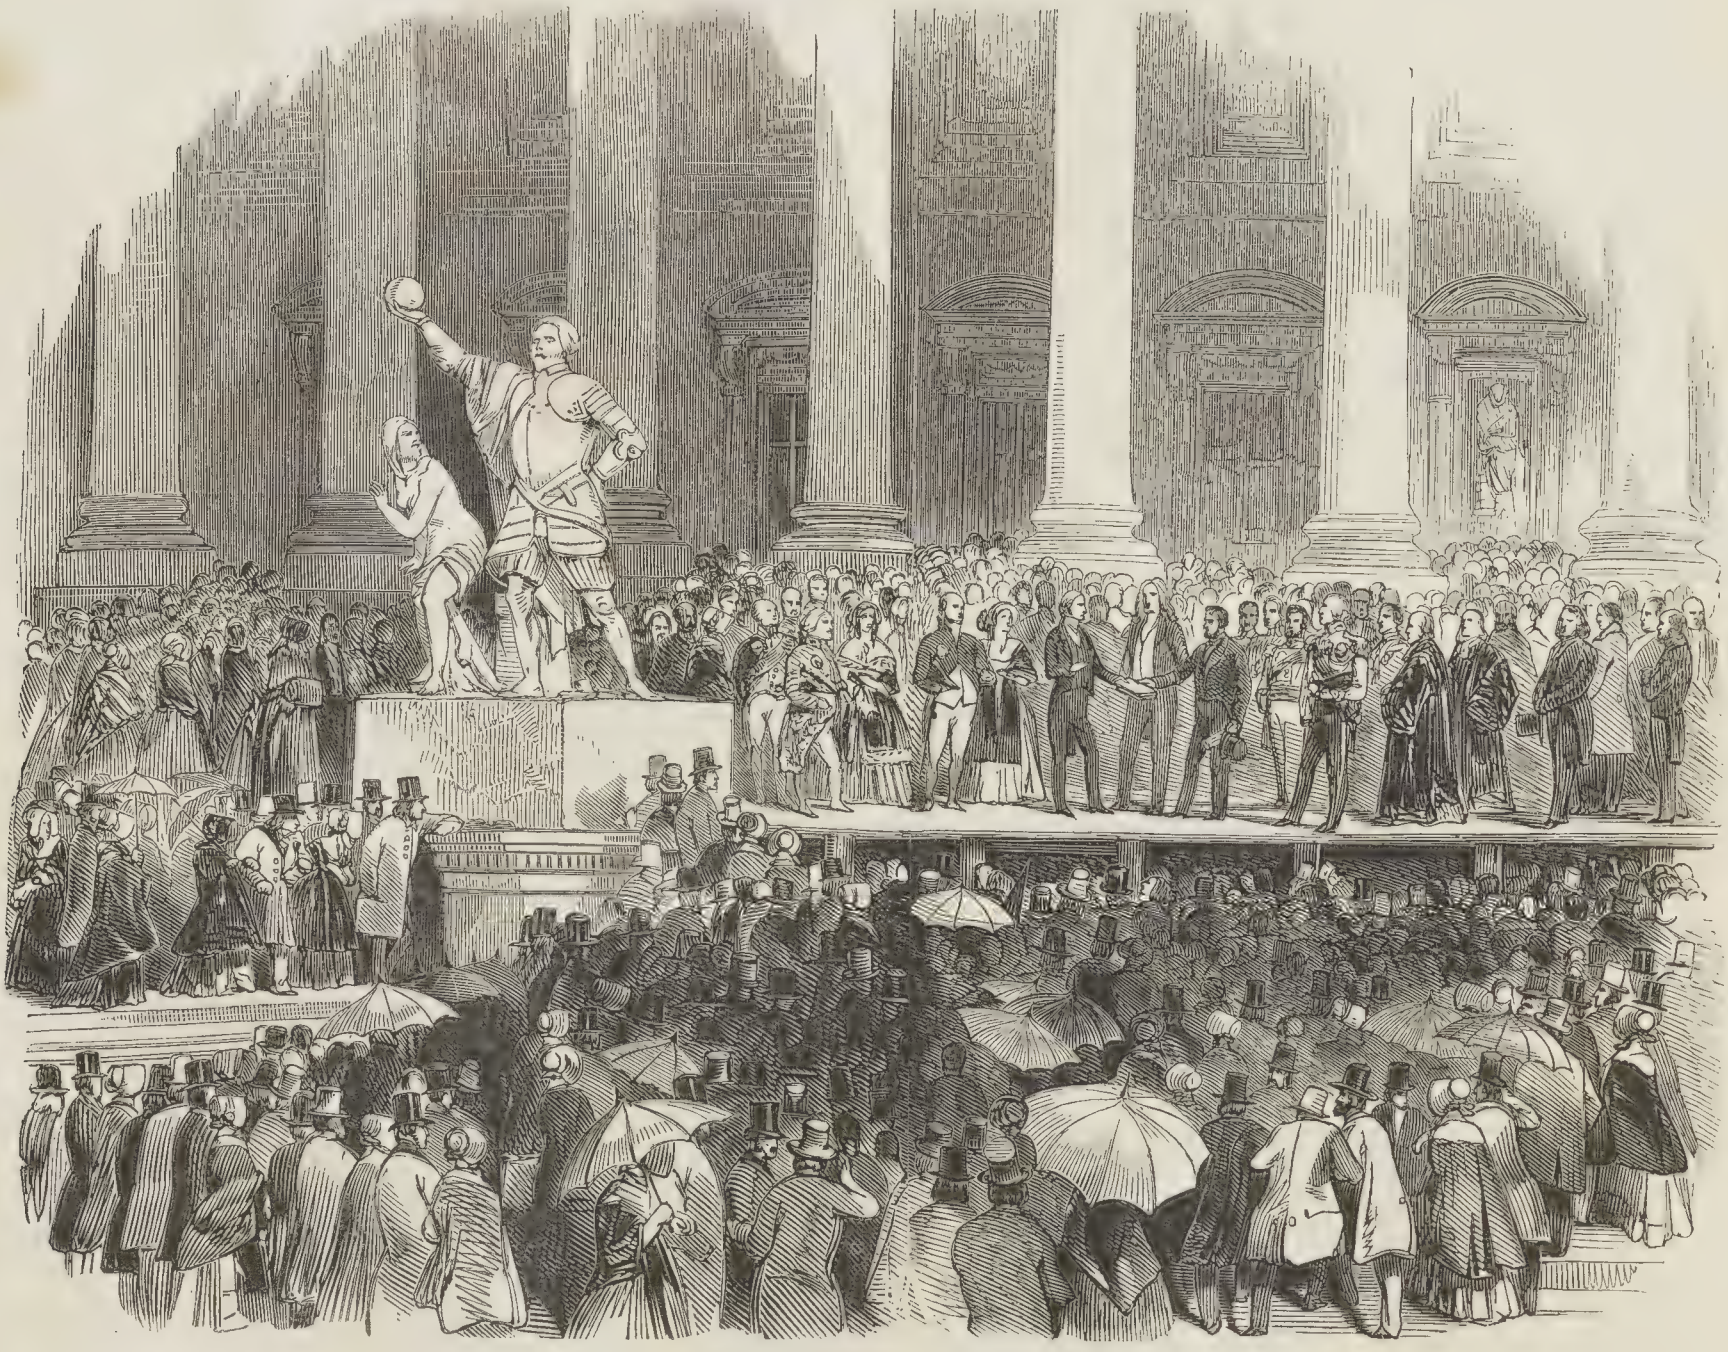
Diplomatic Corps—none.

Then came the members and ex-members of Congress, of whom there were a goodly number. The sum total, however, of Members of Congress, of the Baltimore Convention, Governors and ex-Governors, Members and ex-Members of State Legislatures, Federal and State Judges, did not number more than 100 or 120 persons.

Then came the Empire Club, or rather the banner with the few accompanying members and the band, and the piece of ordnance aforesaid; and the balance of the procession, perhaps, numbered four or five hundred persons—certainly not more.

In this order the procession reached the west gates of the Capitol grounds, where the President and those accompanying him left their carriages, and the procession, with the members of Congress and others who were entitled to admission into the Capitol, and proceeded through the grounds to the Capitol. And on the procession coming in sight of the Capitol grounds, there was a new scene for wonder; for every conceivable foot of space on the elevated terraces of these grounds, where a spectator could have a chance of seeing the procession and the President and suite, was crowded to suffocation. It was literally black with the swarms of people—here and there relieved by the bright dress of some democratic lady, who was not afraid of either the falling rain or the thronging crowds, but was determined to see and be seen.

At twelve o'clock the President Elect, with Chief Justice Taney, stepped forward to the front of the platform, the latter holding in his hand a richly gilt Bible; when in the presence of the high functionaries of Government, and of the assembled representatives of foreign Governments, the Chief Justice proceeded to administer the oath of office to the President, who, after he had concluded an eloquent and well conceived Inaugural Address, took the oath of office.



The rain fell steadily and more heavily, while the President was delivering his Inaugural Address than before. Mr. Polk, however, spoke from the portico and uncovered, except that he was sheltered from the rain by an umbrella. His address was received with no enthusiasm. As he appeared before the multitude he was received with cheers of welcome, and the same marks of respect followed him as he retired with his friends. The lowest estimate of persons present is 25,000.

Our second illustration shows the multitude upon the steps of the Capitol, and the impressive scene of the Inauguration in front of the portico. To the left is the Chief Justice administering the oath of office; and behind them is Mr. Dallas, the Vice-President, upwards of six feet high, with a profusion of long white hair. The platform was crowded with fashionably-dressed ladies; and the foreign diplomatic body in the court suits of their respective nations.

The magnificent sculpture on the left is Periso's group of Columbus and the Indian Girl, traced from a Daguerreotype.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT POLK.—THE OATH.

ARMSTRONG'S HYDRO-ELECTRIC MACHINE.

This Engraving shows a perspective view of Armstrong's Hydro-Electric Machine, the largest and most powerful that has yet been contemplated; it s intended for the United States, and is at present being manufactured by Messrs. Watson and Lambert, Newcastle-on-Tyne. This machine will be capable of charging a battery containing, on each side, 2,500 square feet of coated surface in one minute; also of performing all the ordinary electrical experiments upon an unprecedented scale.

The Hydro-Electric Machine has already been applied to the Electric Telegraph, and we anticipate that this instrument will be the means of throwing new light upon the interesting science of Electricity, and its application to many of our useful arts.

We subjoin the details of the Machine:—A A is a side and end view of the boiler, which is constructed upon the locomotive principle, having the fire contained within, and passing through tubes, which are surrounded by the water, and thence into the chimney. B is a glass guage, for regulating the proper quantity of water in the boiler. C is the safety valve. D D D are silken cords, by which the machine is insulated; or it may be insulated by strong glass columns resting upon the arms T T T, three of which are fixed on either side of the boiler. E E are two hollow metal arms, to each of which are attached 70 small iron tubes, the ends of which are furnished with proper jets, and by the passage of the steam through which the electricity is produced; the steam is admitted to the arms E E, and, consequently, through the small tubes by turning the handle F, which is connected internally with a valve covered by the cap G, and allows the steam to flow through the junction-pipes H H. The junction-pipe H is fitted with a cock, I, for the purpose of shutting off one of the arms, E, and using only one-half the power of the machine; or, by keeping it open, the whole power.

ARMSTRONG'S HYDRO-ELECTRIC MACHINE.

The row of pipes which are fitted to the metal arms E E, and through which the steam issues, are enclosed or surrounded by a casing, the end of which is seen at figs. K K. This casing, or box, is termed the condenser, and for the purpose of producing a certain condensation of the steam in its passage through the pipes, previous to its emission from the caps on their extremities. This condenser is supplied with water, as it is required, by the vessels L L placed above, and connected by the cocks M M M. The pipes N N, connected to the condensing boxes by the small pipes O O O, are for collecting and carrying the vapour produced in the condensing-boxes, by the water becoming heated, into the chimney. P P are four rows of forks, or points, against which the steam from the jets is blown: these are placed on framework, and supported by four insulating legs, R R R R. When the machine is in action, the positive electricity is rapidly produced, and may be collected at the ball, S, and the negative from all parts of the boiler.

PARTIAL DESTRUCTION OF THE BRIDGE OF THE ELBE, AT DRESDEN.

In our Journal of last week, we detailed the destructive rise of the Elbe, at Dresden, on the 31st ult., the inundation being higher than had been known at any time since 1784. On the following day (March 31), the celebrated stone bridge, called the Bridge of the Elbe (from its being the largest and handsomest structure of the kind which traverses that river), was injured, in several places, by the torrent. The principal work of destruction was, however, at the fifth pier, as shown in our illustration, from a lithograph we have just received from Dresden. This pier was distinguished from the rest by its being surmounted by a cast-metal gilt crucifix, resting on a gilt copper globe, placed on a mass of rustic stone, the whole being twenty-eight feet in height. The balustrade and the whole mass of masonry were carried into the flood beneath "at one fell swoop."

Will of the Rev. Sydney Smith.—The will and three codicils of the Rev. Sydney Smith have just been proved in Doctor's Commons by Catherine Amelia, widow, the sole executrix, who has sworn the personal property to be under the value of £80,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife all his furniture, plate, horses, carriages, &c., and the sum of £10,000, together with his house in Green-street; to his son Wyndham Smith two annuities of £200 each; to his housemaid and other servants sums varying from £10; to Anne Kaye (if in the service of his wife at her death) the sum of £100, and an annuity of £30; a legacy of £10 to Christopher Hodgson "to buy a flat silver candlestick, on which shall be engraved, 'To commemorate the confidence and good-nature of many years.'" The following passage then occurs:—"I will also that not only the dilapidations of Combe Florey, but those also of my ecclesiastical preferments, be paid out of my personal estate, and not out of property bequeathed to my wife." Directs that the annuities to his son be paid only on condition "that he do establish himself in a domicile apart from his mother." The residue of his property, after the death of his wife, is bequeathed to his son absolutely. By a codicil, the two annuities to his son are increased from £400 to £500; and by the last codicil, dated Dec., 1844, the testator revokes all previous bequests to his son, and gives him £30,000 in lieu, which he is "to consider as his whole fortune." He directs that a portion of his property be applied to the purposes specified in an indenture of settlement, dated some time back. The latter part of the will, and the whole of the codicils, appear to be in the testator's handwriting.

JUSTICE COLERIDGE, WEARING THE BLACK CAP.

PUNISHMENT OF DEATH.

The punishment of death is now wholly confined to cases of murder or treason. The former has unhappily occupied so much of the recent attention of the public, and has been attended with so many contradictory statements respecting the legal definition of murder, and the character of the punishment with which it is still visited, that we feel tempted, notwithstanding our repugnance to meddle with so horrible a subject, to devote a short space, and the accompanying illustrations, to its elucidation

Murder is thus described by Sir Edward Coke:—"When a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being and under the king's peace, and with malice aforethought, either expressed or implied."

The malice, which is here described as forming the essential constitutent of the crime, consists in one killing another from a design previously deliberated and settled in his own mind. The existence of this inward intention, and of the determination to carry it into effect, is discovered to the law by various external circumstances, as, lying in wait for the victim, private threats, complaint of grudges, or concerted schemes for doing bodily harm. Such is the case, also, of deliberate duelling, when both parties meet avowedly with an intent to murder; and the crime is the same although committed under provocations however grievous. Even in sudden and justly-excited anger, when passion might assume the milder name of a "sense of right," if the aggrieved party beats the offender in a cruel manner, so that he dies, though he did not intend his death, yet is he, by implication, held to be guilty of murder by express malice, that is, by an express evil design. Neither is the man considered to be guilty of a less offence who kills another in consequence of such a wilful act as shows him to be a wilful enemy to all mankind.

To constitute, on these premises, the crime of murder, the death charged must result from injury to the person (as contradistinguished from causes operating upon the mind) occasioned by some act done by, or some unlawful omission chargeable upon, the party to whom such murder is imputed. It is not murder unless death take place within a year and a day after the injury; or, in other words, it is not considered murder when the party injured survives a whole year, exclusive both of the day of the injury and of the day of the death; nor when the death is to be attributed to unskilful treatment, or other cause not resulting from, or aggravated by, the injury sustained.

Murder is punished almost universally throughout the world with death. This practice is generally considered to be founded on the Jewish practice of exacting "an eye for an eye," and "a tooth for a tooth;" but more expressly on the celebrated precept given by God to Noah, that "Whoso shedeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God made he man;" and it is held that it certainly follows, that wilful murder ought invariably, in all communities, to be punished with death, whatever form it assumes, or however it may, by specious pretences, be extenuated; and that God will himself require it of those who suffer the murderer to escape; so that the punishment due to murder will, in some way, be inflicted on them. By others, however, it is believed—and we join them in their Christian interpretation—that the passages in question import rather a prophetic warning of the general fate of a murderer, than an express injunction judicially to put him to death. "Mercy, and not sacrifice," was the great practical doctrine which the Redeemer preached; and his declarations should form the code of criminal jurisprudence as entirely as they constitute the gentle faith of him who observeth charity in all things.

But to return to our forbidding theme: the punishment of murder, and that of manslaughter, were formerly the same, both having the benefit of clergy. But now, by several statutes, the benefit of clergy is taken away from murderers through malice prepense, their abettors, procurers, and counsellors. By the 25th George II., cap. 37, it was enacted, that the judge, before whom any person shall be found guilty of wilful murder, shall pronounce sentence immediately after conviction, unless he sees cause to postpone it; and shall, in passing sentence, direct him to be executed on the next day but one (unless the same shall be Sunday, and then on the Monday following), and that the body be delivered to the surgeons to be dissected; and that the judge may direct his body to be afterwards hung in chains, but in nowise to be buried without dissection. This part of the sentence has since been modified by two separate statutes; and by an act passed in 1834, the barbarous practices of dissecting and hanging criminals in chains were abolished. The time which is now suffered to intervene between sentence and execution is usually a fortnight, during which period great efforts are made to bring the poor "sinner to repentance."

Our readers will rejoice with us that the advancing spirit of civilisation has so far swept away the fearful customs with which our fathers were in the habit of degrading the solemn punishment of death, that the only repulsive ceremonies which remain to be abolished, are those of "putting on the black cap," by the Judge, previous to the delivery of the sentence, and the horrible form of words in which the sentence is conveyed; and these are fast hastening to their entombment with the kindred horrors of "Peine forte et dure," which once disgraced the Press-yard of Newgate.

It is refreshing to turn from such a subject and its brutalising realities, to the manner in which it was once treated by the gentle-hearted sculptor, Flaxman, in his noble monument of Lord Mansfield, in Westminster Abbey. In the rear of the pedestal on which the figure stands—and, as it were, flung behind the stern judge's back—crouches the figure of a condemned youth, with the torch of life reversed. With the pleasures, hopes, or interests of mortal existence he has no longer anything to do; but the ruin in which he is involved may only amount to his permanent separation from society, and not to death. He is condemned, and the utter helplessness of his situation affects the mind of the spectator more powerfully and abidingly than the spectacle of his dissolution. The lesson of the man under condemnation is, therefore, a more useful one than the same man suffering the article of death. It is true that the "law" which urges the extreme punishment "was given by Moses;" but it is also true that the spirit in which it is to be administered—"grace and truth—came by Jesus Christ." Flaxman felt this, and, while he displayed the full desert of the culprit, avoided the exhibition of its penalty.

Our engravings present a fine view of the condemned youth, taken from the west side of the the north transept, and a very striking portrait of Justice Coleridge, as he appeared on a recent occasion, in the act of passing sentence of death. The black cap, which is placed on the crown of the wig, is merely a small loose cassock indicative of the priestly character of the original office of judge.

In leaving this frightful subject, it may be well to disabuse the public mind of a vulgar error which disfigures most accounts of our public executions. We are constantly horrified with highly-coloured pictures of the sufferings—the agonies—of the dying criminals; but they have no foundation in fact. The "pang of soul and body parting" may be strong, but, in hanging, it is instantaneous, for, in the act of execution, the tooth of the sixth cervical vertebræ, which, in life, is held from pressing on the spinal marrow by a ligament, is jerked forward, the ligament broken, the fatal pressure induced, and life and sensation extinguished together.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—It is respectfully announced that the celebrated Symphonic Ode of THE DESERT, with the original Melodies, Choruses, and Grand Orchestral Accompaniments, by Felicien David, will be repeated on MONDAY NEXT, preceded by a Grand Miscellaneous Vocal, Orchestral, and Choral Selection from the most classical Composers, including Mozart, Weber, Mendelssohn, Gluck, Beethoven, &c., and supported by nearly all the distinguished artistes of the Establishment. TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. T.," Glasgow.—There are several popular applications to warts—as the juice of the common annual spurge plants; the bark of the willow-tree, burnt to ashes, and mixed with vinegar; also, the juice of the marigold. Dr. A. T. Thomson recommends acetic acid; but, in applying it, care must be taken to avoid eroding the surrounding skin.

"Ilium."—The emblematical figure of Britannia on the coin of the realm is reported by Grammont, to have been chosen by Charles II. from one of the most admired beauties of his court, Frances Theresa Stuart, Duchess of Lennox, whose full-length portrait is preserved at Letherington Castle, in Scotland. She was a daughter of Walter Stuart, M.D., a son of the first Lord Blantyre; and Letherington got the additional name of "Lennox Love," from being a compliment to her from her husband, by which means it came into the present family. The portrait represents a tall, beautiful woman, magnificently attired, and leaning upon the base of a pillar; the national emblems on our coin are the medallist's additions.

"A Subscriber" is thanked for his suggestion, (St. Bartholomew,) omitted for want of room.

"A Lady Subscriber," Macclesfield, should address a letter for Miss M., to the care of Messrs. Knight and Co., Ludgate-street; or, for Miss S., or Mrs. T., to the care of Mr. Colburn, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

"J. O'M.," Liverpool, must serve the term of the indenture.

"S.," Wolverhampton, should apply to an agent for patents.

"A Constant Subscriber."—Address, Theatre Royal Lyceum.

"C. K.," Brandon.—Maidstone is the county, or capital, and assize town of Kent.

"B."—We cannot insert the paragraph respecting the Plympton Lunatic Asylum.

"E. A. E."—We have not room, at present, for a portrait of the Rev. R. Montgomery.

"T. G. R."—See Holzpaffel's work on turning, lately published.

"Fidus Lector" would be liable: "going."

"A Constant Reader," Hampshire.—The paragraph in question was copied from a provincial paper.

"Don John," City.—The form in question would amount to baptism.

"A Subscriber from the First."—We have no room for the typographical antiquities suggested.

"J. H."—The first syllable of Albert is pronounced short. Rise is not pronounced rice, whatever Walker may direct contrariwise.

"R. R. S.," Goole.—The subject will, probably, appear.

"J. M. H.," Cork.—Chess, by no means, comes within the category of gambling, being rarely, if ever, played for money.

"L. C.," Hackney, is thanked, but his suggestion is impracticable.

"Molly Caudle" should pocket the affront.

"A Sportsman," Liverpool, is thanked.

"Mercia."—We have, since our last, ascertained that there are societies at 76, Queen-street, Cheapside; 26, Golden-square; and 73, King William-street, City.

"X. Y. Z.," Staffordshire.—There is an Infirmary for the Cure of Club Foot and other contractions, at No. 6, Bloomsbury-square.

"H. J. E.," Birmingham.—Address, H. M. S. Collingwood, Brazil. We have not room for the engraving suggested.

"Elizabeth," Towey.—Idiosyncrasy is a peculiar temper, or disposition, not common to another. Let the pronunciation rest.

"A. C.," Manchester.—In the "Coronation Chair," (with the famed stone of Scone in its framework,) at Westminster, have been crowned all our sovereigns since Edward II.

"C. W. C.," Crayford.—Sir Richard Arkwright died August 3, 1792, leaving behind him a fortune estimated at little short of half a million sterling.

"Christiana."—The naming of a ship is, in common parlance, termed "christening."

"C. F."—A life assurance in a respectable office would be the best investment.

"R. H., jun."—The present Premier has no vote, "by virtue of his office," or otherwise, in the House of Lords.

"Scuta," Frodsham.—Coised, in heraldry, is accosted, sided, or accompanied by another. The Hon. Augusta Ada Noel Byron, only daughter of the poet Byron, was married in July, 1835, to William, eighth Lord King, created Viscount Ockham, and Earl of Lovelace, on the occasion of the coronation of Queen Victoria, in 1838. The Dowager Lady Byron, mother of the Countess of Lovelace, is one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Wentworth, now in abeyance; and a representative, lineally, of the Barony of Lovelace, which was created in 1627, and became extinct in 1736.—"Brayley's History of Surrey," vol. 2, p. 117.

"Ning-tou-ke."—See the "Illuminated Magazine" (new series) for next month.

"R. R. N." is thanked, but we have not room for the sketch, which has been destroyed.

"W. H. R."—The memoirs of Vidocq are accredited.

"An Old Subscriber," Limerick.—The most comprehensive treatise on wood engraving is that by Jackson, price 50s. See also Vol. IV. of the Illustrated London News.

"Duncarensis," Dungannon.—The illustrations shall appear shortly.

"Burgh Races."—We have not room.

"A. J. S. E." is thanked for the offer; but the subject has no immediate interest.

"Paddy," Belfast.—We frequently employ the Daguerreotype process in taking portraits for our journal.

"Quis," Coventry.—The tale, to judge from the portion received, will not suit.

"An Officer of the Indian Army."—The event is now of too old a date.

"Mercy."—The age of Mr. James Wallack, the comedian, is about 60.

"R.," Manchester.—Moderate playing on the flute will not interfere with vocalism.

"A Lover of Music," Birmingham.—Miss Birch has returned to London; the Messrs. Giubilei are brothers.

"H. T. F.," Chancery-lane.—The sketch shall appear.

"T. Ireland, jun."—It is difficult, and would be invidious, to institute comparisons between the minor opera theatres in Italy; it also would be vain to try and fix their standard merits. Their attractions vary with their corps d'opera, which is as changeable as anything can be. Our correspondent had better see to what theatre the most popular composers are attached, and that will answer him in a great measure

"The Gresham Musical Prizes."—Our correspondent should apply to Professor Taylor at the Royal Exchange, who will furnish him with all the queries requires. The answers would exceed the limits of our columns.

"A Subscriber," Hull, is informed that the coin he describes is a specimen of one of the copper farthings struck in this country in the reign of Charles II. They were intended to supersede the tradesmen's tokens, which had inundated the country, and which were first put down by proclamation, and the utterers and receivers of them threatened with penalties. For further particulars consult Ackermann's "Numismatic Manual," p. 300, second edition.

"George Jeans," Tetney, Lincolnshire.—The satellites of Jupiter are sometimes seen during their transit as black balls; the cause of so extraordinary a phenomenon is for the present shrouded in mystery.

"A Civilian."—The medals for the troops engaged in the late Chinese victories are not yet ready.

"X. H.," "W. R.," "M. X."—By subscribing.

"A Subscriber."—Mails are despatched to St. Helena by every outward-bound vessel through the Ship Letter-office; postage, under half an ounce, 8d., &c.

"κακοδαίμων."—Application at a School Agency-office might be of service.

"Quæsitor."—The instrument sketched by our correspondent is an old ring sun-dial, which may be found described in Ferguson's "Treatise on Astronomy," and other works.

"A. A.," New City Chambers, is thanked.

"H. T. F."—The sketch shall appear.

"A Correspondent."—The distance from London-bridge to Westminster-bridge, by water, is one mile and three-quarters.

"A Constant Reader."—Her Royal Highness the Princess Sophia Matilda died Nov. 29, 1844.—(See Nos. 136 and 137 of our journal.)

"Tfield."—Our correspondent is thanked for his obliging communication.

"X. Y. Z." is wrong: sound travels about 780 miles an hour.

"Alpha."—We have already engraved the Battle of Culloden in No. 103 of our journal.

"?," Furnival's Inn.—The mechanism of the Diorama will be found explained in Arnott's "Elements of Physics;" but, it is too long for quotation here.

"W. C. S."—Inadmissible.

"Dramaticus."—The charge for licensing a play containing two, three, or five acts, is two guineas: for a one act piece, one guinea.

"M. W. L."—We cannot interfere in "family jars."

"Arsace."—Probably, for the season.

"A Reader," Goodge-street.—Aird's "Self-Instructing French Grammar" is a meritorious work.

"A Subscriber," North Sunderland.—Declined.

"C. B.," Greenwich.—We do not remember.

"A Peer."—The newspaper was, doubtless, returned by the Post-office, on account of our correspondent's initials appearing on the wrapper.

"A Correspondent."—Mr. James's Christian names are George Payne Rainsford.

"Scott Monument."—We have not room for the long statement received.

"A Subscriber" is informed that we cannot insert marriages or deaths upon anonymous authority.

"John Jingles."—We have received a letter with this signature, dated Newfoundland, March 22, complaining of a paragraph which appeared in our paper of the 8th February, and calling upon us very peremptorily to name the author, and to apologize. Wishing to make the amende honorable, we will do both. The statement complained of is the following, which appeared in Every Body's Column:—

"A LAZY FELLOW.

"The laziest man in Newfoundland is John Jingles, who employs a nigger to sneeze for him, and pays the coloured gentleman a dollar a day."

Now, as our correspondent says that there is no other "John Jingles" in the colony, we have no hesitation in admitting that we have been deceived. There is no truth in the statement that he is so lazy as he is represented to be. As to our authority, we beg to say it was Joe Miller.

"Unde Derivatur," Waterford.—Anastatic printing is a new invention, by which a page of an already printed work may be transferred to a zinc plate—owing to some chemical process this page may be reproduced to any number of copies. Our correspondent will find a long and interesting account of this extraordinary discovery in the last number but one of "The Art Union."

"A Constant Reader," Chatham, should write to the General Post-office, London.

"A Subscriber."—The law has not been repealed, but has not been enforced within these ten years.

"Duncarensis," Dungannon.—The Irish comic song, "The Night before Larry was stretched," was written by Dean Burrowes, of Cork.

"A. Z.," Tunbridge Wells.—Disputes between masters and apprentices may be settled by summons before a magistrate.

"Veles," Kendal.—Perhaps.

"J. D. F."—Our beautiful engraving of Imogene, is from Shakspeare's play of "Cymbeline."

Ineligible.—Sonnets, by H. F. L.; Lines, by N. B.; Lines, by S. R.; "Oh! tell her not," by J. S.; Lines, by Emma; "Lady and Queen;" "The Voice of the Past;" Sonnet, by H. R.; Translation, by Sylvanus.

 We have received several letters of inquiry during the week as to the edition containing the latest news. Such of our readers as desire to have the latest information, should order the Town Edition, which contains accounts of all matters of interest received up to Saturday night.

Erratum.—In a few copies of our paper last week, a description of O'Connor was accidentally transposed by the printer, and was made to apply to Hocker.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 19, 1845.

The whole of the week has been occupied by the debate on the Maynooth grant; for the time, the House of Commons has seemed more like a school of theology, disputing on points of belief, than the legislature of a great empire, on which it is incumbent to originate such measures as may promote the peace and prosperity of all. Certain it is, that the fountains of the great deep of religious rancour and bitterness have been broken up, and a deluge of denunciation has been poured on the Minister, which he cannot but feel, though, as a Statesman, perhaps, he may deem it his duty to disregard it. On each night of the debate, the interior of the House of Commons, from half past four to six, has presented an extraordinary and exciting scene; the benches on both sides are crowded, a thing not very usual at that early hour, and scarcely a member there but has had a whole sheaf of petitions to lay on the table; some have had piles of the same documents, and others—Mr. Hindley for instance—whole stacks. They have been borne on the winds, like the Sybil's leaves, from all quarters, and have descended on the table of the House, literally like a snow storm. Something like it occurred on the Education clauses of the Factory Bill; but the opposition to that measure scarcely equalled the demonstration that has been made against this one; the great influence of the Dissenters among the borough constituencies of the middle class, and the not very distant prospect of a general election, increases the anxiety of the members, makes many oppose it, who would otherwise be indifferent, or lessens the number of those who support it. Even those who do give it the assistance of their vote and arguments, do so with a full consciousness of the risk they run; Mr. Macaulay himself (though nothing else could have been expected from his known opinions,) declares he places in jeopardy his seat for Edinburgh. The debate has produced some remarkably able speeches, among them, that of Mr. Macaulay must take the first place; the last half of it fell with terrible effect on the inconsistency of the Prime Minister, and gave him a merciless castigation—a Statesman, though the necessity for the measure was frankly acknowledged, and an open declaration made of the intention to support it.

Mr. Disraeli also poured another vial of wrath on the head of the Premier; but the repetition of the attacks are weakening their force; his boldness verges at times upon impertinence, and the ability displayed loses its influence from the very apparent animus. The House laughs at his epigrammatic sallies, and, doubtless, enjoys it as a fine intellectual display; but with the political principles he lays down there is but little sympathy, for they cannot always be quite clearly comprehended, and his satire has but a limited effect; he irritates and annoys, doubtless, and Sir Robert Peel would enjoy more equanimity if he spoke less frequently; but the "heavy blow and great discouragement" comes from such a man as Macaulay, whose last speech destroyed and crushed every chance of Sir Robert Peel's reconciling his present policy with the broad principles of political morality.

Young England has "pronounced" very strongly on this question; Lord J. Manners, Mr. Smythe, Mr. M. Milnes, all came to the rescue of the Minister, with a readiness, doubled by the fact that they are able to claim the merit of having pointed out the path he has now taken two years ago; but whether the support of these young politicians will balance the desertion of so many old ones from his side appears very doubtful. The best speech from this "young" section of the House, is Mr. Smythe's—delivered on Wednesday evening; and, as the author of the "Historic Fancies" is evidently rising in the estimation of the House, though he does not speak frequently, an extract or two from it may be interesting. His remarks on the incomprehensible conduct of Mr. Gladstone are by no means unjust, and are put with no little force:—

But of late years another opposition has risen to this grant, which, for want of a better name, I will call the "Anglican opposition." This party was weak in the house, but it was strong in dialectitians, strong in the universities, strong among young men; and it was supposed, up to Friday last, to have been represented by the right hon. gentleman, my right hon. friend the member for Newark (Mr. Gladstone): and it also claimed illustration from his retirement from office: "De civitate decedere maluit quam de sententia." He left the Cabinet but he kept his theory. (Cheers.) And now does any hon. gentleman believe the right hon. gentleman has really abandoned his theory? Abandoned his theory—yes, Sir—as a certain society abandons a country to return to it on the first convenient opportunity. In that cloud of variegated phraseology in which he, as usual, the other night wrapped and shrouded his mysterious divinity (cheers), there was only one phrase which was intelligible to vulgar mortals like myself. He said, that notwithstanding his most cherished convictions, he would vote in favour of this bill. So then it is most clear that his most cherished convictions and his votes are at issue. But about the mere vulgarity of voters, the right hon. gentleman cares little; for upon this very question he has voted all ways. He voted first against, then in favour of the grant; he then went out of office because the grant was to be increased; then the measure involving the increased grant came to a first reading—he did not vote at all; we are now at the second reading; he is prepared to vote in favour of it. And is any hon. gentleman—is the right hon. gentleman himself—quite sure, that upon the third reading he will not find equally good reasons for voting against the measure.

He dismisses the assertion, that it is the duty of the State to enforce one uniform religion, with contempt; no one, that we ever heard of, wishes to revive it, for it has been impossible in any nation for the last two centuries; Louis the Fourteenth almost ruined France by attempting it by the Edict of Nantes. Mr. Smythe says:—

What is the principle laid down by them? It is an old enemy with a new face; it is the worst principle of absolutism, disguised in the worst language of the Jesuits; it is the principle of Alva and the language of Escobar. It begins in a fiction, that because the state has once placed its affiance to a particular system, it is bound to perpetuate that system, to the exclusion of all others to all time. This, to be true, should be universally true: and if it were to prevail at this moment in this country, we should still have the Ptolemaic System in our observatories, and Sir Isaac Newton might only be known somewhat as the right hon. gentleman may be known—as a crotchetty theologian, but a capital Master of the Mint. But if this principle begins in fiction, it ends in pains and penalties; if it begins in sophistry, it ends in persecution; it is, in one word, the old, vicious, cruel effete principle of uniformity.

He no less scouts the idea that this grant will act on the priesthood as a bribe:—

An ardent and a susceptible people, whose alliance with their priesthood was solemnized in a time of tribulation and misfortune, is not to be divored from them in the first dawn of a happier era. Not open violence—not "the vicious perfection" of the law—not arms bills, not coercion bills, not laws of mortmain by which you harassed them, not cy-pres constructions by which you robbed them—none of these things have been able to "put asunder" those whom persecution "had joined together." And, Sir, this more insidious design will also fail, which is lisping with all the insolent euphuism of an old proprietary, that you will disarm the Irish priest by making him a gentleman. A gentleman! that is something more of an abbé, and something less of a curé—something more of a chaplain, and something less of a priest—one who will look more to the patron, and care less for the poor; in a word, "a man of the world," but not of the next world. This design will also fail; or, if it succeed, I pity your short sightedness. Elevate the Irish priest from the sphere in which he moves, and acts, and has his useful being, and you destroy his influence. It is because he is of the commons that he leads the commons.

He closes with a passage in which he predicts the effect of this policy, of which we can only say we fervently hope Mr. Smythe's prophecy, with regard to it, may be realized:—

It is these men that the right hon. gentleman makes his friends. They will remember that, notwithstanding a powerful opposition, he brought forward a measure of conciliation without restriction and without conditions; and in that hour of emergency and crisis, which those who look at nations and not at Cabinets know cannot be distant—in that hour of emergency and crisis, when your entente cordiale with France shall fail you (as it surely will fail you), you will have an entente cordiale with Ireland to supply its place. In that day, when the right hon. gentleman shall be called upon to rally round him the energies of this mighty empire—for he alone, notwithstanding all this temporary clamour, represents its requirements—he will be able to adopt to the enemies of England, be they at Washington, or be they at Paris, the solemn and beautiful language of the noble lord the member for London,—"Our Queen reigns over a united people."

Such is "Young England;" they are men of the same rank as the Sidmouths, and Liverpools, and Eldons, and Percivals; they have received a similar education; they have been exposed to the influences of a party that has still the name by which it was known of old, and yet how totally have thoughts, feelings, and opinions changed! It is the age of transition, and the present time is one of those crises at which the spirit of the policy of England is changing one system for another. The present debate will be memorable in Parliamentary history.

THE COURT AND HAUT TON

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the Royal children, went to Claremont on Saturday last. On Sunday, her Majesty and the Prince attended divine service in the chapel, and on Monday the Royal party returned to Buckingham Palace.

Indisposition of the Duchess of Gloucester.—We regret to state that the Duchess of Gloucester has been indisposed for the last few days, but her Royal Highness is now somewhat better.

Lady Caroline Somers Cocks and the Hon. Miss Frances Devereux have succeeded the Hon. Misses Stanley and Hamilton as the Maids of Honour in Waiting to the Queen.

State Ball.—On Saturday last cards were issued from the Lord Chamberlain's office for a grand ball, at Buckingham Palace, on the 25th inst. It is said that her Majesty intends to enliven the Court by three state balls this season.

Christening of the Infant Daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch.—The christening of the infant (and only) daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch took place on Thursday morning, in the Chapel Royal. Her Majesty and Prince Albert stood sponsors; the child received the name of "Victoria." The ceremony was performed in the presence of a great number of the leading nobility and gentry, all of whom arrived in their state carriages. In the evening the noble duke gave a magnificent banquet, at which her Majesty and Prince Albert were present.

Marriage of the Marquis of Bute and Lady Sophia Hastings.—The nuptials of the Marquis of Bute with the Lady Sophia Frederica Christina Hastings, second daughter of Francis, first Marquis of Hastings, were celebrated on Thursday week, at Loudoun Castle, Ayrshire, with that pomp and state becoming the exalted rank of the contracting parties.

Her Majesty's Visit to the Great Britain.—In consequence of the unfavourable weather on Tuesday, her Majesty postponed her visit to this stupendous iron steam-ship until next Tuesday.

Almack's.—On Wednesday night the first ball of the season took place in King-street, St. James's, and was undiminished in its attractions. The ball-room never looked to greater advantage. It was after eleven o'clock when the company, above two huudred in number, began to congregate, and nearly twelve before the band had to commence its performances for dancing. The Countess of Jersey and her daughters, and the Countess of Kinnoull were among the early arrivals. His Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, honoured the réunion by his company. The Countess of Jersey, Viscountess Palmerston, and the Countess of Kinnoull, the only ladies patronesses at present in town, evinced their desire to promote the amusements of the ball by their early attendance.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE GRANT TO MAYNOOTH.

The metropolis seems to be aroused against the proposed additional grant to Maynooth.

Covent Garden Theatre was crowded on Monday night with the persons composing "the aggregate meeting of the inhabitants of the metropolis," assembled to testify their hostility to the grant. Mr. William Bevan was in the chair, and the several resolutions were proposed or seconded by the Rev. Dr. Croly (of St. Stephen's, Walbrook), Mr. Blackburn, Mr. Sherman, Mr. Chalmers, Dr. Dickson (a Wesleyan Minister), Sir Culling Eardley Smith, Dr. Halloway, and Mr. Scales. The various resolutions were adopted by the meeting.

A third meeting was held on Monday evening at the Tabernacle, Moorfields. There was also a meeting at Union Chapel, Parish-street, Tooley-street.

On Tuesday evening a meeting took place in the Surrey Chapel, Blackfriars-road, Sir Culling Eardley Smith, Bart., in the chair. The principal speaker was Dr. Cumming, minister of the Scots Kirk in Crown-court, Covent-garden. The Rev. Doctor addressed the meeting for about an hour and a-half against Popery, and concluded in these words—"Perish the Crown, perish Princes, perish the State, rather than Protestants should abandon their principles!" The meeting, which lasted four hours, agreed to resolutions and a petition in the usual form.

A meeting was also held on Tuesday evening in the National and Parochial School-room of the parish of St. George the Martyr, Southwark, to take measures for opposing the Ministerial proposition. The Rev. John Horton, the rector, took the chair, and the audience was addressed by the Rev. Dr Rice, Messrs. O'Niel, Foster, Harrison, Curling, and others. The meeting was numerously attended, and resolutions were adopted in conformity with the terms of the requisition.

Restoration of Stepney Old Church.—This ancient and venerable church, the mother of the large and important parishes of Bow, Poplar, Limehouse, Shadwell, St. George's-in-the-East, Whitechapel, Spitalfields, and Bethnal-green; from time immemorial peculiarly the church of the British seaman, has long lain in a state of neglect, and out of repair. It has, accordingly, been resolved on to restore the church; for this purpose, the sum of £3000 will be required, to raise which a subscription has been opened. A picturesque view of the unique fabric, and its history, appeared in No. 28 of our journal.

COUNTRY NEWS.

Representation of West Kent.—Lord Holmesdale and Mr. Frewen have retired from the field, and Colonel Austen, of Rippington, Seven-oaks, President of the West Kent Agricultural Protection Society, will come forward to seek the suffrages of the electors of this important district. The reason of Lord Holmesdale's retirement is the opposition which he raised to his own election by declaring in favour of the Government grant to Maynooth. Mr. Frewen, it is alleged, has also consented to retire, in order to make way for a gentleman who will possess the entire confidence of the electors.

Execution at Brecon for Murder.—On Thursday week Thomas Thomas was executed at Brecon, for the murder of David Lewis, the Cardiganshire butter-merchant, at Trecastle. No less than from 10,000 to 15,000 people were assembled. He confessed his guilt.

Public Parks in Manchester.—A deputation from the Manchester Committee for providing public parks and walks, last week waited on Sir Robert Peel, to solicit a grant of public money in aid of the subscription being raised in that town for that purpose. Sir Robert Peel declined to propose to Parliament any fresh grant, but offered them the sum of £3000, which they considered so inadequate that they respectfully declined to accept it until they had consulted the body by whom they were delegated.

Robberies at Brighton.—Last Saturday, a lady named Turner, who resides in Brighton, having drawn £200 at the Union Bank, put it into her pocket; but shortly after she left the bank she missed the money. Another lady, on leaving the bank, also missed her purse, containing £30. The bank was very full at the time, and the impression is that the robberies were effected by the London swell mob. The police have not obtained any clue to them.

Supposed Murder.—On Thursday week an inquest was held at Salisbury on the body of a woman which was found in a ditch running into the river Bourne. In the course of the inquiry it appeared that the woman was wife or mistress of a man named Woolford, who travelled about the country with a learned pig, and had left Salisbury with two daughters a fortnight prior to the discovery of the body. The evidence of the landlord of the White Lion, and that of his servant, went to prove that the whole party were of dissolute habits, and that the woman had been missing about a week before the others left the house. After an investigation which lasted three days, the Jury returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against Woodford, he was thereupon committed to the county gaol for trial. It is believed that he and his wife were formerly members of an equestrian company.

A Woman Charged with Poisoning her Husband.—Another case of poisoning has been discovered at a small village called Laceby, near Grimsby, Lincolnshire. Jane Bell has been committed to Lincoln Castle for trial at the next assizes, charged with the wilful murder of her husband, Edward Bell, by administering to him a certain quantity of deadly poison, called arsenic. The unfortunate deceased was a respectable master carter in the village, and the sudden character of his death, which took place on the 26th ult., he generally being considered as having a good state of health, rendered a coroner's inquiry necessary. Mr. W. Morris, one of the county coroners, opened the inquest on the body, at the Waterloo Inn, in the village, and two surgeons of Laceby, having discovered that the deceased had died from the powerful effects of arsenic, coupled with other very suspicious facts, tending to fix upon the unhappy woman the commission of the shocking act, she was promptly ordered into the custody of the proper authorities. The investigation was then adjourned in order to afford time for the collection of further evidence respecting the tragical event, and on its being resumed it was satisfactorily ascertained that the poison had been administered in arrow-root. Additional evidence was also produced confirmatory of the accused's guilt; still the jury entertained a doubt, and eventually recorded a verdict of "Wilful murder against some person or persons unknown." She was accordingly liberated; but, from her previous conduct to her deceased partner, which had been spoken to at the coroner's inquest, the authorities were induced to institute further inquiries as to the mysterious affair; the result of which was the re-apprehension of the woman. The witnesses' statements were very lengthened, and were of the same nature as those sworn to before the coroner. Mr. Horace Watson, a druggist, living in the same village in which the shocking affair happened, deposed, however, to some very important facts respecting the occurrence, and which will go far to strengthen the suspicion entertained of her guilt. He stated that the prisoner, a short time previous to her husband's (the deceased's) death, purchased a quantity of arsenic at his shop, for the purpose, as she stated, of killing vermin; but which, for reasons alleged by her, was not used, but thrown away. Mr. W. Pearsall, a consulting chemist of much experience, at Hull, clearly proved the deceased's death to have resulted from arsenic. Altogether the witnesses strongly attached guilt to the accused. She wept bitterly, and again declared her entire innocence.

Fatal Accident at Derby.—About seven months ago a contract was entered into with a builder named Sims to cover over the Mill Fleam in the Morledge, Derby. The improvement, when completed, would add considerably to the size of the cattle-market, and make a better thoroughfare to the public holmes, or pastures. The watercourse was very wide, and one length of an arch of a very large span was thrown over. On removing the centres, the arch fell, burying six workmen (one of them son-in-law of the contractor) underneath the ruins, and killing them on the spot. The contractor had a very narrow escape, having only removed from underneath the arch a moment before it fell. This accident caused a great sensation, and the Commissioners under the Improvement Act, in order to prevent a recurrence of such a calamity, entered into fresh contracts, and it was arranged that two arches should be thrown over, instead of one, and the contractor was required to have more sets of centres, so as to allow the length completed more time for setting before the props were entirely removed. The work proceeded, and the whole of the arches were covered in a short time ago, but the centres were not removed from underneath the last inner arches. The workmen had during the last week been employed in laying on rubble and soil. On Tuesday afternoon the contractor (in opposition, it is said, to the protest of commissioners and others) commenced removing the centres, and, just as the men were about to conclude work and go to their tea, a portion of one of the arches fell in, burying the contractor, his son, and one of the workmen, in the ruins. An alarm was instantly given, and thousands of people assembled on the spot. The arches were loaded with people, and the greatest apprehension was felt lest the pressure should cause them to give way entirely—had they done so, the sacrifice of life and limb would have been great. After the lapse of an hour the body of Sims, the contractor, was dragged out, dreadfully mutilated, and also the body of his apprentice (Harlow), quite dead. Edward Sims, son of the contractor, escaped with slight bruises; one of the workmen escaped, with various injuries, and two others were uninjured. The scene at Sims's house, on the disastrous intelligence being conveyed to his wife and family beggars all description.—On Wednesday an inquest was held on the bodies of the two unfortunate persons who were killed. From the evidence it appeared that Mr. Sims was engaged in striking the centres of the arch, and for this purpose unfastened the wedges employed in its construction. No new facts were brought forward with respect to the cause of the accident, and the jury adjourned the inquest till Monday next.

IRELAND.

O'Connell and the Maynooth Grant.—At the meeting of the Repeal Association on Monday, Mr. O'Connell returned to the subject of the Maynooth College Bill, upon which he remarked in these terms:—He said he had been asked why he did not send forward petitions in favour of the bill? Why (said he) we did not ask for it—we have not asked for it, nor will we ask for it, but we will accept of it if it be given—yes, we will gratefully receive it or any other measure calculated to serve any portion of the Irish community without injuring another. (Cheers). I will not be stingy of my thanks when such a measure is proposed. I am not stingy of my vituperation when the liberties of my country are assailed. (Cheers.) I say now, as I have said often before, the people of England have not their hearts in the right place. (Hear.) They have invariably treated the complaints of the Irish with contempt, and they have displayed their hatred of us on all occasions. Heretofore we were told the people were friendly towards us, but the Government was inimical. Now I see the Government disposed to do an act of grace and kindness, and I see the English people rising in all quarters to prevent them. A friend of mine, who has just returned from London, tells me that as much excitement prevails there as ever was known on the most unpopular question. Placards denouncing Maynooth and the Ministers who propose an act of justice to it are on the walls and hawked about by men, and on carts; people stop in crowds to read them, and shout "No Popery." (Hear, hear.) I say if the English people only remained indifferent, we would have justice done us long since. They are proud to think they have such a people as the Irish for their slaves; but we will not be their slaves. (Loud Cheers.) I have been called upon to assert my own principle, that the support of the Church should not be compulsory on any portion of the people. Yes, they call upon me to do this, while they themselves are reaping all the advantages of the principle. I might as well ask a man to exchange horses with me on these terms. I give my horse, and he is to turn round and say, "Oh, but you are not to get mine." (Laughter.) The Protestant dissenters have come forward and objected to the measure on principle. They were silent when the grant was only £9000 a year, and the principle was as much affected then as now. (Hear.) Why don't they oppose the regium donum on principle? Oh, 'tis a paltry hypocrisy; they act thus because they hate us for being Irish, and they abuse us because we are Catholics. It is for these reasons we have not petitioned Parliament to pass this bill. If the Irish people were much interested in any subject we would have 2,000,000 of signatures to petitions in its favour. (Hear.) We will not ask for this measure; but if we get it we will take it graciously. Our enemies have been vilifying Maynooth in all manner of ways. Now he could tell them on indisputable authority, that of upwards of 5000 students who went through the course of education at Maynooth, during the past fifty years, not a single one was ever charged with a crime—not one was ever brought before a magistrate charged with an offence. (Hear, hear.) It was a miracle that of 5000 young men, with all the weakness of manhood, not one was brought before the authorities charged with a crime. Now let them see the men Maynooth brought forth; they should recollect that in this country, which was a mere province, men had not the opportunities which those in England possessed, and under all disadvantages, look to the men it turned out. I refer to the report of the committee of inquiry published in 1826—1827; that was the result of an inquisition, rather than a Parliamentary committee. I take the names of the presidents of Maynooth, who are living. There was the Most Rev. Dr. Murray, Archbishop of Dublin; Dr. Slattery, Bishop of Cashel; Dr. Crotty and Dr. Foran. And let us look to the professors: the first was Dr. Crolly, the Primate and Archbishop of Armagh; Dr. Cantwell (cheers), Dr. M'Nally, Dr. Higgins (cheers), Dr. Denvir, Dr. Cohen, and, to close the catalogue, the Most Rev. Dr. M'Hale. (Cheers.) I ask, is it not too bad that the sustentation of such a college should be made the subject of the fiendish slanders and opposition of the English people? They have seized all the property bequeathed to the Catholic Church, which belonged to Catholics, and which was given for Catholic purposes, and now they exclaim against the restitution of sixpence in the pound. There is their conscience—there is their honesty. I am glad we have met the proposition as we have. If the Catholic clergy objected to it—and by their silence I must infer they have not—I would at once have suggested that it be scouted by the people; but I have learned enough, even from the statement of Sir R. Peel, that the Catholic hierarchy had expressed their approval of the measure. Yes, I repeat, everything was well done in this bill, and I regard it accordingly. I will not cry if they turn out Sir Robert Peel—I am not so much in love with him as all that; but I should be sorry if he did not succeed in this matter. (Hear, hear). I am asked, "Why don't we go over and vote for the bill?" I will leave it amongst them, and let them deal with it as they please. I am better employed here. (Cheers.) It was here that the Catholic clergy and gentry and the people assembled and told Peel they should have justice, and their voices were heard. (Cheers.) I am proud of showing what our spirit is when an act of justice is offered, and it should not be said we are ready to refuse a proffered boon. (Hear.) I hope the bill will be carried—if it be, Ireland will be grateful and thankful for it—but let no man say that it will be a bribe to our clergy. I defy them to do it. (Cheers.) The week's rent was announced to be £700 4s. 11d., and the meeting adjourned.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Dr. Wolff arrived last week at Portsmouth from Constantinople, on his return from Bokhara. He was most enthusiastically cheered on his landing, and was met on the quay by his wife and son, and Captain Grover. The Doctor looked very well, considering the fatigue and privations, as well as anxiety of mind, he has endured since leaving this place. He has brought with him several valuable presents.

The Italian Scientific Congress will meet this year at Naples, and not at Genoa, as has been stated.

Reports are again in circulation of the indisposition of Sir W. Follett, the Attorney-General, whose health, it is now said, has not been at all improved by his recent trip to Italy. Speculations are afloat regarding the changes which his retirement would occasion.

It is stated from Constantinople, 19th ult., that Sir Stratford Canning has demanded the revision of a sentence of death pronounced at Broussa, upon the son of an Armenian, who was charged with murder, but against whom there was no legal evidence. The result of this intervention is not mentioned. By the same article we learn that a dispute has taken place between Turkey and Persia, in consequence of the Pacha of Bagdad having condemned to death a Persian dervish for sacrilege, for forming a new sect by preaching for an apocryphal Koran.

During the past week experiments were made on the London and Birmingham line, with a view to the acceleration of the trains, the distance between London and Birmingham, 112 miles, being accomplished with ease, in the space of 2 hours and 40 minutes, the trains, with four carriages, starting from the Euston station at 10 minutes before 1, and arriving, stoppages included, at Birmingham by 20 minutes before 4.

The Patrie states that a letter has been received from a gentleman attached to the embassy to China, which removes all doubt of M. Maynard having been murdered by the Malays. According to this letter Admiral Cecille has taken vengeance on the offenders. The chief and a great number of Malays are said to have been killed.

By a parliamentary paper of Customs duties just published, it appears that the mean annual produce of duties in two years preceding the establishment of the new tariff amounted to £22,637,494, and in the two years following the establishment of the new tariff, £22,720,886, comprising 813 articles.

The Prussian Government has given notice to the powers of Russia and Austria, that Prussia has taken initiatory measures for the purpose of acknowledging the Queen of Spain, and of entering with her Government into a regular intercourse of diplomacy.

A letter from Alexandria dated the 27th inst., says that Mehemet Ali still remained at Cairo, and that Ibrahim Pacha was seriously ill. The result of the railway survey (from Cairo to Suez) had been made public, and was deemed satisfactory. The cost for the 88 miles is estimated at £320,000. The surplus profit on the working is calculated at £27,500 per annum; and the general opinion was, the Pacha would at once carry out the work.

The Second Chamber of the States of the Grand Duchy of Hesse, in the sitting of the 4th, came to a vote that the Government should be requested to use its influence with the Germanic Diet for putting an end to public gambling in all the States of the Confederation.

The Murder in St. Giles's.—The House No. 11, George-street.—The house the scene of the late tragedy appears to have obtained a most equivocal notoriety, not only at the present time, but also in former years. The following particulars may not be uninteresting to the public:—Shortly before the close of the war, the house, together with the chandler's shop at the corner, were all one, and was celebrated as a lodging house much frequented by soldiers. The house, however, fell into disrepute, in consequence of a man of the name of Thomas Arliss losing his life. This was in 1816, for which the brother of the landlord and a woman were transported. In 1823 Weare, who was murdered by Thurtell, and who, it will be remembered, had chambers in Lyon's-inn, in passing through St. Giles's was robbed of his pocket-book by a woman; he pursued her to this house, in which she had sought refuge; she escaped by a narrow passage, which then, as now, divided the house, and was never captured. Weare narrowly escaped with his life. The notorious Lady Barrymore often visited here, whilst May, who was concerned in the murder of the Italian boy, with Bishop and Williams, lived here for a considerable period.

THE CONVICT HOCKER.

After the conviction of Hocker he was removed in an exhausted state to the cell in the prison yard. He was received by the deputy governor, Mr. Wright, who had humanely directed some tea and toast to be in readiness for him. These he partook of with much avidity, and gratefully acknowledged the attention of the deputy governor. In the course of the evening he was visited by Mr. Davis, the ordinary, and exhorted to penitence and prayer. Kitman, one of the officers, sat up with Hocker during the night, which was passed by the wretched man in sound sleep. On Saturday morning he awoke about seven o'clock, and ate a hearty breakfast; but, although he manifested much firmness, his spirits were evidently subdued. In the early part of the morning he was visited by Mr. Sheriff Sidney, who had a lengthened interview with him in the presence of the deputy governor. At this meeting Hocker for the first time betrayed emotion, and he wept loud and bitterly. It is stated that his feelings were overcome on reference being made to his family, and that he made no allusion to the murder of the unfortunate man Delarue.

The singularly-written statement which he read on his trial has been his principal occupation since his confinement in Newgate. He has devoted several hours daily to framing his defence, which he invariably drew out in short hand characters, which were transcribed and reduced into the form in which it has been presented to the public. From letters that have been written by the unhappy convict, and which have fallen into the governor's hands, it appears that he has made up his mind for the worst, as he expressed his determination to "play the man." His execution will it is said take place on Monday, the 28th instant.

On Sunday, despite the supposed orders to the contrary, a number of strangers were amongst the congregation in the chapel; all, however, were of the most respectable and attentive character. The subject of the rev. gentleman's discourse was taken from the 5th chapter of Deuteronomy, the 4th and a portion of the 5th verses. Connor, as usual, appeared particularly attentive, as also did Hocker; but there was not the same seriousness of deportment. The former, in the course of an allusion made by the rev. speaker which seemed applicable to his case, hid his face, and exhibited considerable emotion.

Since Monday the prisoner has been busily engaged in writing, though the nature of the subject has not transpired. No change has taken place in his manner, if we except a restless desire to learn the opinion of the public as to his defence. Since Monday numerous applications have been made to the officials for permission to see the prisoner, amongst which might be mentioned the names of several persons of distinction. In every instance they have been refused. The prisoner, upon being visited upon the last occasion by his friends, exhibited a greater degree of reserve than he has ever done since his imprisonment, and there was any thing but that cordiality which has hitherto marked his conduct towards them. In the course of Wednesday he was visited by the Rev. Mr. Davis, of whose kindness he speaks very strongly to the persons appointed to watch him.

The convict has abandoned all hope of mercy, and through the exertions of the Rev. Mr. Davis has at length been brought to a deep sense of his awful situation, and begins to show signs of contrition and repentance. On Monday Mr. Sheriff Sidney had a lengthened interview with the convict, who was engaged reading and writing nearly the whole of the day. It is now said that the convict will leave in the hands of the authorities a full and ample confession of the horrid deed. Hocker has undergone no alteration in personal appearace since the day of his trial, except that he seems more careworn. He still converses freely with the officers in whose charge he remains.

POSTSCRIPT.

The Queen's Visit to Ireland.—A meeting of the sub-committee of the Dublin Corporation took place on Tuesday, at the Mansion House in that city. The Lord Mayor, on taking the chair, stated that he had waited on his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, to ascertain whether there were any official grounds for the statement that the Queen intended to visit Ireland this summer. In reply, his Excellency informed him that he had received a letter from Sir Robert Peel, in which the strong probability of such an event taking place was stated; but that he would write to Sir Robert by that night's post, asking for a more explicit statement upon the subject. In anticipation of a favourable answer, the committee then adopted a resolution to the following effect—"That the Lord Mayor should proceed to London to present an address to her most gracious Majesty, requesting that she would honour the Corporation of Dublin with her august presence at dinner; and that the round or King's room should be put into such a state of repair as would render it worthy the reception of Royalty."

Cabinet Council.—A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office yesterday afternoon.

Inquest on the Body of the late Marquis of Downshire.—An inquest upon the body of the lamented Marquis of Downshire, whose sudden death we have recorded elsewhere, was held at six o'clock on Tuesday evening in the Court House, at Blessington. Doctor Kellet, of Naas, was examined, and gave it as his opinion that he died of an effusion of blood on the brain. Surgeon Cusack, of Dublin, was of a similar opinion. The jury found a verdict that his lordship "Died by the Visitation of God." The Marquis of Downshire arrived at the Gresham Hotel on Tuesday evening from London, and immediately proceeded to Blessington to make the necessary preparation for the interment of his noble and much-lamented father Cambridge University, April 18.—The election for the office of Public Librarian has ended in the return of Mr. Power. The numbers were as follow:—Power, 312; Smith, 240. Majority, 72.

Death of Mr. Farrell, the Clerk of the Course at Epsom.—Information has been sent to Mr. Carter, the coroner for Surrey, that Mr. Joseph Farrell, who has so long held the situation of clerk of the course, has died suddenly. It appeared from the statement sent to the coroner, that Mr. Farrell was at work in his garden, when he suddenly fell down and died. His death is much regretted.

Fire at Wapping-Wall.—Yesterday morning (Friday), shortly after one o'clock, a fire broke out upon the premises known as the Royal Oak, Wapping-wall, in the occupation of Mr. Ferguson, victualler. By two o'clock the fire was so far subdued that all danger of its further extension was at an end. The damage to the surrounding property is considerable; and the Royal Oak, with its contents, is entirely destroyed.

Suicide at Hammersmith.—Mrs. Emma Peasgood, the wife of the landlord of the Britannia public-house, at the corner of the Fulham-road, near Hammersmith Church, was found on Thursday night, about nine o'clock, in her bed-room, quite dead, suspended from the bedstead by a stay-lace.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

Switzerland.—Our letters from Switzerland contain an account of the proceedings of the Swiss Diet in the sitting of the 12th. The question of the amnesty was decided, but in a way very different from what had been expected by the advocates for federal intervention. The Diet came to a resolution, "Considering that it earnestly desires the peace of the country, and the prevention of new troubles, which objects would be much promoted by the display of clemency on the part of the Government of Lucerne, earnestly to request that State to grant an amnesty, and in the event of any condemnation to death having been already pronounced, not to carry it into execution." It was found impossible to obtain a majority for any resolution of a more determined character.

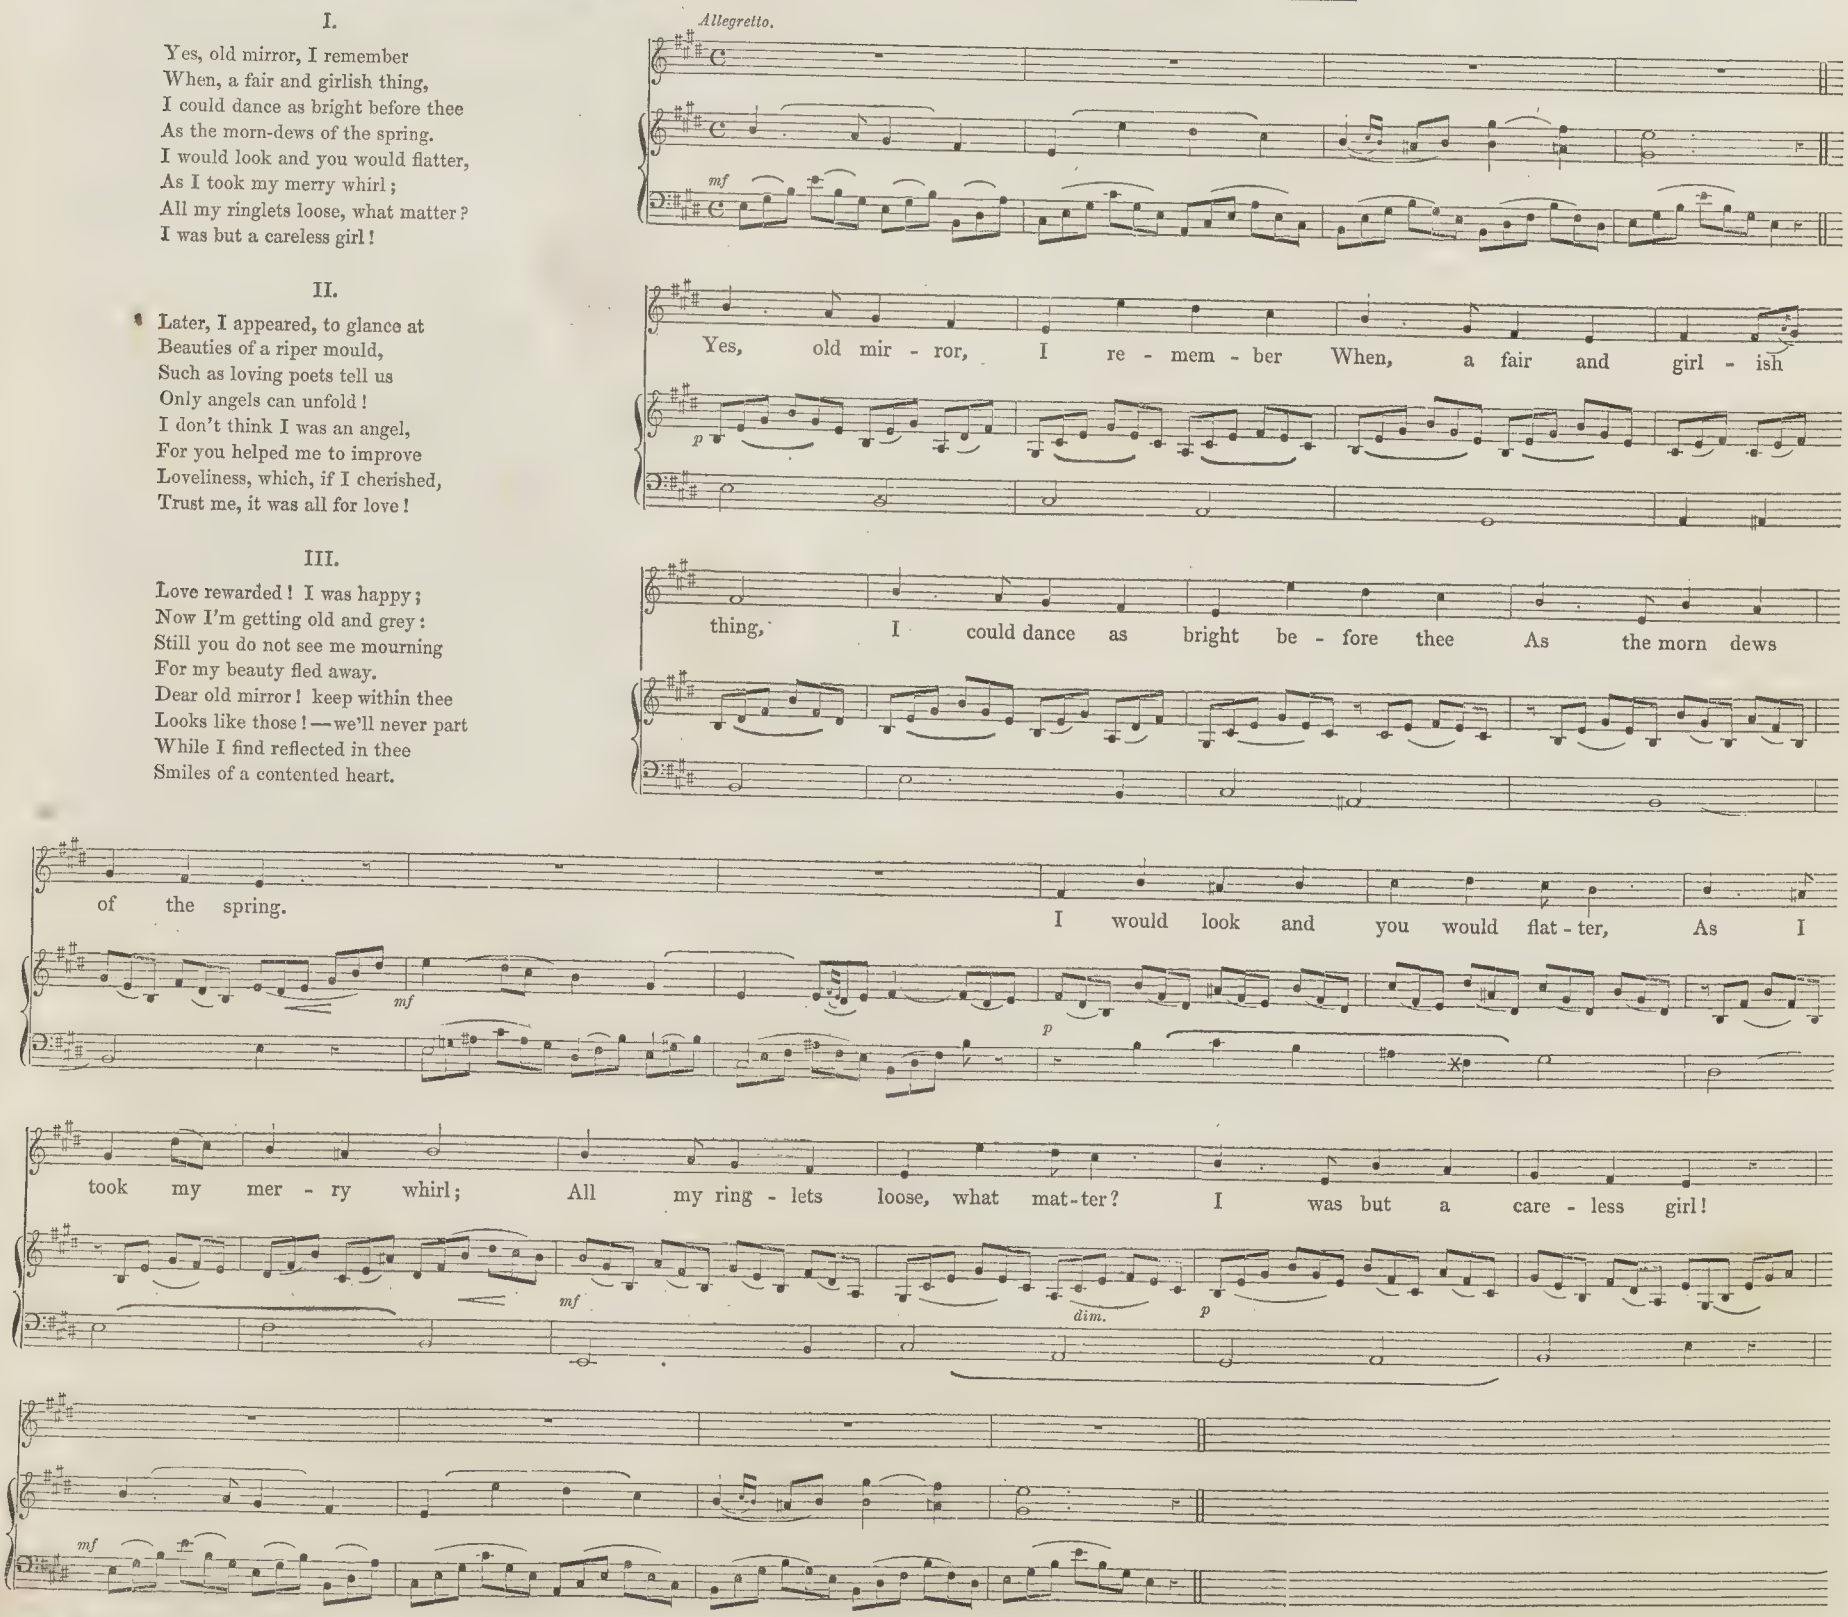
MUSIC BY J. L. HATTON,

COMPOSER OF "PASCAL BRUNO," "QUEEN OF THE THAMES," &c.

I.



Yes, old mirror, I remember
When, a fair and girlish thing,
I could dance as bright before thee
As the morn-dews of the spring.
I would look and you would flatter,
As I took my merry whirl;
All my ringlets loose, what matter?
I was but a careless girl!

II.

Later, I appeared, to glance at
Beauties of a riper mould,
Such as loving poets tell us
Only angels can unfold!
I don't think I was an angel,
For you helped me to improve
Loveliness, which, if I cherished,
Trust me, it was all for love!

III.

Love rewarded! I was happy;
Now I'm getting old and grey:
Still you do not see me mourning
For my beauty fled away.
Dear old mirror! keep within thee
Looks like those!—we'll never part
While I find reflected in thee
Smiles of a contented heart.

FFICES OF THE BOARD OF TRADE.

The offices occupied by the Board of Trade are situated upon two floors to the right and left of a spacious corridor, which divides the entire edifice in Whitehall, and gives convenient access to the whole of its numerous apartments.

The President's Room, the Vice-President's Room, Board-Room, and Library, constitute a suite of apartments, relatively well proportioned, and severally well adapted for their respective uses. The President's Room is the only apartment in which architectural embellishment has been attempted: the style is Venetian, in which artificial and purely natural forms of embellishment are successfully mingled. The rooms devoted to railway business are profusely furnished with maps, projections, surveys, sections, models, of every part of the United Kingdom; in fact, with everything necessary to furnish the members of the Board with the most accurate geographical, statistical, and commercial information.

The different departments under the control of the Board of Trade have been greatly increased by the establishment of the Railway Commission. Some idea of the vast accession of business may be gathered from the speech of the Right Honourable the President of the Board (the Earl of Dalhousie), in the House of Lords, on the 20th of February:—"With respect to the aggregate number of plans for railways, it was sufficiently notorious that there were upwards of 240 proposals, and he knew to his cost, that ever since the last day when the house met for the regular session, the Committee of the Board of Trade had been engaged in considering these proposals. Up to November 30, it was impossible to proceed to any formal decision, for the schemes multiplied upon them by three and four at a time."

The exterior of the offices of the Board of Trade, with the completion of the architect's design by the erection of a wing on the site of the old building, at present occupied by the department of the Home Secretary of State, has been engraved in No. 149 of our Journal.

BOARD OF TRADE,—"A DEPUTATION.

QUEEN MARY'S QUAIRE IN FOTHERINGAY CASTLE.

You have made me
(I thank you, cousin Arcite) almost wanton
With my captivity.
The Two Noble Kinsmen.

Though here in gloomy prison pent—
I feel 'tis coming May,
And know on every spray
There's blossom with sweet music blent—
For to my cell
The dainty smell
Of fresh spring flow'rs,
Comes usherless my casement through,
Accompanied by songs of birds,
As if they would say gentle words
To Her who long has had to rue
A destiny most hard to bear
In solitude so drear!
But yet I feel not lonely when
From some near glen
I hear the headlong stream
Rolling eternally,—
There's music in its roar for me!
And music is companionship
Although it come not from the lip
Of some I lov'd to hear
In many a by-gone year!
Alas! sad Memory hold thy tongue,
Too oft thy dirges have been rung—
Spectral Hope doth always fly
When Thought brings thy reproaches nigh!
Nevertheless
Sweet wilderness
That, outside of my wintry walls,
Containest such spring flow'rs
And vocal bowers,
With tuneful waterfalls—
It joys my heart to hear
Your well-commingled melodies
Singing the birth-ode of the year
And almost from my dungeon frees!

Dress Ball at Court.—A rumour prevails in the higher circles that there will be another grand Bal Costumé at Court. It is asserted that the Queen, taking into consideration the losses experienced during two successive seasons by trade in London, through the happy domestic events in her Majesty's home circle, has determined to give numerous fêtes, and amongst others, one similar to that which produced so much sensation, and did so much good to metropolitan trade, four years ago.

LITERATURE.

AMERICAN FACTS. NOTES AND STATISTICS ON THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. By G. P. PUTNAM. Wiley and Putnam.

The appearance of this Manual is, to say the least of it, well-timed; for the events of the last few days have, undoubtedly, whetted the curiosity of the English reader upon the present condition of the United States, and that to an extent equal to any within the memory of the present generation Such curiosity the present volume will go far to gratify; though, we almost wish the "Facts" had been left to their own stubbornness, and the Editor had reserved his attempts at humour for some more congenial occasion. Nevertheless, the Introduction to his volume will be read with interest: its framework is conversational; one of the speakers "is an unsophisticated specimen of transatlantic nature—a farmer from the state of Ohio, with a Byronic collar, but with a matter-of-fact face—indicating more shrewdness than transcendentalism;" the other speaker is a New York merchant, who has more the air of a man of the world. The dialogue opens with a sneer at our great parks, "each for the pleasure of one family;" and the Ohio farmer observes, "they don't look much like the over-crowded country they tell us about in books. If the grass hadn't been quite so smooth, and the trees so trim and regular, I might have imagined myself in Ohio again. They must have plenty of farming land, if they use their parks only to look at. They 're pretty places, and no mistake—but what a fine lot of wheat might be grown in them!" The New Yorker corrects this Yankee utilitarianism, by replying: "there is no doubt that hundreds of thousands would like the chance of earning their bread in these parks. But, if you happen to have more land than your neighbour, you wouldn't be an Owenite, and give him your extra acres? It is not in human nature. The owners of these parks may be philanthropists without being agrarians." We pass over the pleasantry of the farmer, calling the Tems a brook, our coaches top-heavy concerns, and Uncle Bull's growl at the "good-for-nothing scamp," to come to the New Yorkers naïve reply to the farmer, who has been told he speaks very good English:

Ha, ha! Not a new occurrence. I never knew a decent American in England who was not similarly complimented more than once. It is surprising; for though as a nation we have had a snuffing from the Scotch, a peppering from the Irish, a perfuming from the French, and a smoking from the Germans and Dutch, there is still so large a proportion of the pure English descent; and the English language, of nearly all natives of the United States, is so universally uniform, that it seems strange to us that an American speaking English is an outré curiosity, even to an illiterate Englishman. For my part, I think that in spite of the New England nasal twang, and the Southern drawl, among 'the million,' the English language is more generally spoken by all classes in the United States, than it is in England. You will scarcely find anything like the dialects of Somersetshire, Essex, or Yorkshire, even in the wilds of Arkansas or Iowa.

Slavery, the repudiating States, newspaper or pantomimic squibs, and bookmakers' bamboozlings, are next replied to; and Mr. Macculloch is severely handled for a "precious scrap" of misinformation in his "Dictionary of Commerce;" the farmer observing—

I should imagine his own book must show that American trade, with all its drawbacks, has been worth having on the whole.

The New Yorker replies:—

Yes; considering that the United States have long been England's best customers, and in twenty years have PAID her for merchandize to the amount of TWO HUNDRED MILLIONS STERLING; besides PROMPTLY PAYING her five, six, and seven per cent. for about as much more of her capital in the same time; considering that hundreds of thousands in England have long received their sole support by employment resulting from American purchases; the advantage does not appear to have been entirely on one side; and the losses by these trading connexions, taking them at their worst, would seem to be, after all, but a small item in the trial balance. But, probably, the great political economist knows best. It would, doubtless, be better for both parties that they should rely more upon their own resources; and certainly better for us not to run into debt again, even if England again makes the offer of her disinterested services.

For my part, I have no reason to dislike Old England—the land of my forefathers, the progenitor of twelve millions of my countrymen. She has always treated me well, commercially; and when I come here, she receives me with her usual liberal hospitality. And it's a pity that two kindred nations should be bamboozled by bookmakers into unnatural antipathy. Sensible men on both sides know better—but here, they need American Facts.

The case for the book is thus made out, and in its second page we find this additional warrant:—

Maunder's, Brookes', and other gazetteers, published in London, in 1844, describe New York, and other states and cities in the United States, exactly from the gazetteers of fifty years ago! They would seem to have considered the country either as having been asleep since that time, or as too unimportant to need later description. And yet these works profess to be "derived from the latest and best authorities." Cincinnati, a city containing 46,000 inhabitants, is not even mentioned in these works.

The work is classed under General Sketches, including Extent and Resources, Constitution and Government, Religion and Philanthropy, Education, Literary and Scientific Institutions, the Fine Arts, Society and Manners. Then follow Documents, Notes, and Statistics, comprising the Constitution of the United States, Chronology of Events, Population, Agriculture, General Wealth, Exports and Imports, Trade and Commerce, Invention and Manufacture, Slavery, Newspapers, Schools, &c. &c.; and the volume closes with a paper reprinted from the "North American Review," which is about as highly-seasoned a dish of abusive Jonathanism as was ever wafted across the wide Atlantic. However, we shall leave this plague-spot of a postscript—this last charge upon the readers' forbearance,—and retrace our steps to a few specimens of the staple of the work, which, as general landmarks, may be useful in referring to the internal relations of the North American Republic, and comparing it with other nations:—

The United States of America occupy an area of 2,300,000 square miles; or 650,000 more than the whole of Europe, excepting Russia.

Collectively, their greatest length is 3000 miles; their greatest breadth 1700 miles.

They have a frontier line of about 10,000 miles; a sea-coast of 3600 miles; and a lake-coast of 1200 miles.

Of the rivers: The Missouri is 3600 miles in length, or more than twice as long as the Danube; the Ohio is 600 miles longer than the Rhine; and the Hudson (entirely in the State of New York, and navigable for 160 miles) is 120 miles longer than the Thames.

The territory of the United States is divided into twenty-six separate States and three territories, each of which has a separate government. [The population and statistics of each are given in Part II.]

The state of Virginia has an area of 70,000 square miles, and is about one-third larger than England. The state of Ohio contains 40,000 square miles, or 8000 more than the whole of Scotland.

The harbour of the city of New York is the Atlantic outlet of a river, canal, and lake navigation of about 3000 miles, or the distance from Europe to America.

From Augusta, in the State of Maine, to New Orleans in Louisiana, the distance is 1800 miles; or 200 miles more than from London to Constantinople.

Here we must leave the work: that it contains a mass of valuable notes, relative to the progress and present condition of the United States, cannot be denied; and, to pick these from the chaff of the volume will be no difficult task. A few portraits of eminent Americans are scattered hrough the pages: they are remarkable as specimens of a new process, by which they have been transferred or re-engraved, in a few days, from ordinary and defective copies of the American prints.

THE HANDBOOK OF USEFUL AND ORNAMENTAL AMUSEMENTS AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS. By A LADY. Smith, Elder, and Co.

Some ingenious person has instituted a comparison between Needlework and Angling, which he considers to be neither work nor play. The parallel may be true in the main, but can scarcely apply to labours with the "steel bar," such as are bewailed in the "Song of the Shirt," and similar lyrical lamentations. Fancy work would, perhaps, be a better term; by which we mean Embroidery, Tapestry, Crochet, Netting, Knitting, &c. &c.—all which are minutely detailed in the volume before us. With the taste for "revival" has come in the fashion of working tapestry for the prie-Dieu and the faldstool, and the seat of the antique chair. Learning is no longer confined to the head, for even our slippers have the impress of the "march of intellect" in their Egyptian hiero- generally followed; and the fair fingers of the ladies of the present day glyphs, worked in Crochet; and a travelling cap bears the ingenuity of fair hands to many a distant land, keeping in remembrance the loved one whom the wearer has left at home. Tambour work is also the delight of many a morning-room circle in the present day, just as it was in the last century, when the excellent Queen Charlotte and her amiable daughters thus passed many hours in the domestic privacy of Windsor and Frogmore.

Tapestry, we are glad to learn from the "Handbook," is "now very almost eclipse, in industry and ingenuity, the labours of our ancestors. The beautiful patterns obtained from Germany, and the great improvement in the manufacture and dyeing of the wools, are considerable advantages to the modern workwoman, and the most beautiful pictures may now be imitated with great precision and accuracy." Three-quarters of a century have elapsed since Miss Linwood first evinced her genius for this beautiful art; and within that period the taste for its exercise has flourished, declined, and rallied most wondrously; whilst the reflection carries us back to the good old days of samplers, if not to the tapestry hangings of our forefathers, when "Jason and Medea" were the worsted classics of the wall, and the silken story of "Dido and Æneas" served to conceal clumsy carpentry, and keep out the cold.

If anything were wanting to prove the wise man's adage of "nothing new under the sun," it might be found in the antiquity of Netting, which is far more ancient than its sister employment of Knitting. The Egyptians were celebrated for their wonderful skill in this art, and specimens of their netting are preserved in the Museum at Berlin: they are said to be 3000 years old, and the needles with which they were worked greatly resemble those now used. Pliny, an excellent authority for the marvellous, mentions nets of flax, made by the Egyptians, which were so fine, delicate, and flexible in their texture, that they would pass through a ring—a test of fineness familiar as household words in our day. Pliny adds that the strings of which these nets were made were each composed of "150 threads:" but what is this to the corslet presented by a King of Egypt to the Rhodians? it was of linen, and, according to Pliny, each thread contained 365 fibres. The instructions in netting in this volume are very numerous, including the principal varieties of stitches and patterns for gloves, mitts and mittens, shawls, caps, cuffs, &c.

Knitting is still more copiously detailed: it is now universally followed by women in all ranks of society, from the "ladye of high degree" to the cotter's wife: it is "not alone the occupation of the old and the young; those even whom Heaven has deprived of the blessing of sight can amuse themselves by following this art, though no longer able to follow the intricacies of embroidery and tapestry. In the blind schools, knitting is universally taught, and many beautiful articles are made by the inmates, and sold for their benefit." The instructions for patterns, stitches, and articles, are accompanied by a glossary of "Knitting terms."

But we have strangely fallen into the meshes of our subject, and have lost the methodical string of the Contents of the Handbook. It opens with some minute directions for making Artificial Flowers, the materials, dyes, and tools; next are Flowers of feathers, rice-paper, velvet, shell, and wax; Birds, Butterflies, Coral, and glass Fruit. Then, we fall upon Carving Cameos, Wood Engraving, Lithography, and Etching upon Ivory, Glass, Marble, and Stone. Modelling and taking Casts are followed by instructions in Drawing, Painting, and Transferring, Japanning, Gilding, &c. The several sections are liberally illustrated with plates of patterns and implements: in short, the work appears to be complete in its respective departments.

HISTORY OF THE IRISH REBELLION IN 1798; with Memoirs of the Union, and Emmett's Insurrection in 1803. By W. H. MAXWELL, ESQ. Baily, Brothers.

We have already noticed this admirably written work in its serial publication: in its completed state it forms a handsome library volume, and must take its stand as the most perfect history of the troubled era of the Irish Rebellion. In a brief preface the author well observes: "The records of the insurrection of 1798, with rare exceptions, have been written by ardent partisans, who, yielding to a political bias, have coloured the narrative of the transactions of these distracted times, and detailed events rather as they wished they should have been than in reality as they are." This is the besetting sin of partisan writers; but the present author has turned the failures of others to excellent account, by comparing these conflicting statements, and thus, by strict impartiality, reaching truth as nearly as it can be arrived at. All who recollect Mr. Maxwell's "Stories of Waterloo" will expect no small proportion of vivid writing in the work now before us, and they will not be disappointed: the interest is startling, and some of the descriptive details are fearfully literal; but there is an assurance of circumstantial truth in the extreme industry with which the work has been compiled throughout. The illustrative notes are copious; and the graver scenes in the terrific episode are relieved by scores of characteristic anecdotes of the Irish people, and their distinguished leaders. The work is liberally embellished with portraits, and some twenty plates by George Cruikshank, picturing with surprising minuteness, and accuracy of action, some of the leading atrocities of the rebellion; they certainly deserve to be ranked among the most successful efforts of the artist's pencil.

THE PROGRESS OF HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA, AND HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT, TO BURGHLEY-HOUSE, NORTHAMPTONSHIRE, NOVEMBER, 1844. Abel and Sons, Northampton.

The object of this work is to commemorate the Royal Progress of November last to the palatial mansion of Burghley, unquestionably one of the most interesting ancestral homes of England. The several incidents of the journey are related; and the reader can scarcely fail to contrast the rapidity of railway transit in our days with the rate at which Elizabeth and her suite travelled on the same route to visit her favourite Minister. The Royal sojourn, and its several festivities, the christening of the daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, and the Royal visit to the olden town of Stamford, are all minutely chronicled. The work is elegantly printed, and is illustrated with views of Burghley, within illuminated framework; and a curious "prospect" of Northampton, from an antique MS. Altogether, it is a superb memorial of a most interesting event.

AN INTRODUCTION TO HERALDRY. By HUGH CLARK. Washbourne.

In its 14th edition, and 71st year of publication, this consise but comcomprehensive Manual of Heraldry is entitled to notice for the various additions which have been, from time to time, grafted on the original design: such are the various articles on the Orders of Knighthood, English and Scottish Regalia, Titles of Honour, and Degrees of Nobility in England; the Titles and Duties of the Great Officers of State and of the Royal Household; the Account of the Kings of Arms and other Officers of the College of Arms, &c.; besides a Dictionary of Technical Terms: the whole illustrated by upwards of 1000 engraved examples.

The present addition has been carefully revised, and has an additional chapter on Heraldry, connected with Architecture, &c. Now that a taste for the critical study of antiquities is reviving, the use of heraldry, as a key to history and biography is daily becoming more and more acknowledged; and the volume before us, with its manifold improvements, is well calculated to aid the study.

SKETCHES OF LIFE AND CHARACTER: TAKEN AT THE POLICE COURT. By GEORGE HODDER. Sherwood and Bowyer.

The police-courts of our metropolis have ever been a school for humourists, and the author of this volume (Reporter to the Morning Herald), has shown himself to be a proficient in sketching the folly and eccentricity to which these public appearances often conduce. He very prudently leaves the gloom and terror of the place to the virtuous indignation of others; and, content to take up the oddities of middle and low life as exhibited at a police-office, he has produced a very amusing volume, to be read and relished on a railway or steam-boat journey, or to fill up any spare half-hour. The portraits of the "strange bed-fellows" in the volume are sketched with a clever perception of the ludicrous; and though such phases are but bubbles of character floating on the stream of every-day life, there is more in studies than meets the eye. The volume is embellished with several humourous scenes, by Kenny Meadows, Leech, Hine, Hamerton, Henning, and Newman.

NATIONAL PRIDE.—Learn what people glory in, and you learn much of both the theory and practice of their morals. All nations, like all individuals, have pride, sooner or later, in one thing or another. It is a stage through which they have to pass in their moral progression, and out of which the most civilised have not yet advanced, nor discerned that they will have to advance, though the passion becomes moderated at each remove from barbarism. It is by no means clear that the essential absurdity of each is relieved by its dilution. Hereafter, the most modern pride of the most civilsed people may appear as ridiculous in its nature as the grossest conceit of utter barbarians now appears to us.—The Illustrated Family Journal, Part I. (A clever little work.)

The celebrated German writer Frederick Adolphus Krummacher, author of the "Parables," died on the 1st of this month, at Bremen.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

On Thursday "Semiramide" was performed for the first time this season. This noble work of Rossini, the favourite of all the old, and one which the young opera frequenters look up to every night with more reverential admiration in proportion as their judgment becomes more refined, loses nothing in public favour by comparison with the lighter and more piquant works of the repertoire. Of "Semiramide, however, it is unnecessary to speak; all votaries of the lyrical muse are well acquainted with its massive instrumentation, which enshrines so many thrilling melodies; whilst the performers are equally well known and still as rapturously appreciated as ever. The performance of Giulia Grisi as the fitting rspresentative of the proud Queen of Babylon, that of Fornasari as the crafty and ambitious minister, and of the gigantic Lablache as the high Priest of Ninus, with his picturesque and flowing costume, his still more dignified and imposing aspect, as he thunders forth the decrees of Heaven, need no comment. The part of Arsace, enacted by Signora Brambilla, is the only novelty which the cast of this splendid opera presents; and of her performance in this part those who attended her Majesty's Theatre, the season before last, must retain a vivid and a most pleasing remembrance. This lady's exquisite taste and scientific lore conceal the trick of envious time.

All will welcome the addition of a contralto of so high an order to the troupe of this theatre. Her quality of voice is of the highest importance in the execution of standard works like "Semiramide;" and yet it is so rare—perhaps, on account of the ambition of every lady singer to reach the higher notes as though that alone would make a prima donna—that at the continental theatres the contralti parts are generally taken by the most powerless artists. The last scene of "Lucia di Lammermoor" was another gem, and as set forth by Signor Moriani is beheld each night with renewed, nay, increased delight; but the striking novelties of the evening were in the choregraphic department. A new ballet-divertissement, entitled "Kaya, ou l'Amour Voyageur," was produced for the first time.

The plot of the new divertissement, whose scene is placed amidst the Norwegian mountains, is as follows:—A young village maiden, Kaya (Mdlle Grahn), is obstinately insensible to the prayers and entreaties of her lover, Frederic (M. Perrot). The latter, however, whilst on his way to the chase, finds lying at the foot of the mountains a little boy, pale and stiff from cold; he takes him home to Kaya, whose kindness soon revives him. The little fellow requites his benefactress by playing her a thousand mischievous tricks; the most serious is the attack he makes on her heart. Here the five senses—in which the flavour of the strawberry, the fragrance and the thorns of the rose, the echoes of the horn from the distant hills, the glance at a supposed rival's picture—form the artillery of love. Kaya's jealousy is then excited by the attentions of Frederic to the village girls; the insidious little traveller finishes by exciting universal commotion amongst the villagers, and general confusion ensues; but the father of Kaya appears, he points out the real culprit, who, to escape the universal indignation, hides himself in a bower. His lurking place is, however, discovered, and when the little wanderer emerges from his concealment, he is invested with his proper attributes, and all pay homage to the sovereignty of love.

The cast of "Kaya" was, of itself, sufficient to ensure success. Not only did it include that fair Dane, Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, and her scarcely less graceful partner, Monsieur Perrot, but a débûtante of a new order, and one who, though she cannot number more than seven or eight years, threatens, nevertheless, to outstrip, ultimately, all her older competitors in the mimic art. The performance of Fraulen Praegher, one of the little Viennese fairies, was one of the most extraordinary that has been witnessed on any stage. The intelligence and mimic power displayed by this little being, in other respects wholly infantine, appeared to astonish even her colleagues. The play and the mutability of her arch and merry countenance, full of the mischief attributed to the little god whom she enacted, her agility and the grace of her motions, are beyond description and beyond praise.

The striking features of this divertissement are the metaphysical "pas de cinq sens," the "pas de six," and the dance of the thirty-six Viennese, the "pas des moissoneurs," which is admirably interwoven with the action of the ballet, and is another proof of Madame Weiss's pictorial and poetic conception, and of her remarkable power of instilling intellectuality and precocity into children. The music of the divertissement, constructed by Pugni, one of the national melodies of Norway; that of the "pas de moissoneurs," composed by Maratzeh, another new composer, now permanently attached to the establishment—are remarkably original and effective. Cerito, who was married to St. Leon on the 12th instant, and who is immediately expected, bringing with her ballets of her own composition, will have to endure a struggle for supremacy worthy of her talents.

FRENCH PLAYS.

M. Ravel is one of the most popular of actors of the Théâtre du Palais Royale; and many of the pieces written for him have been translated into English, perhaps more from the celebrity his performance acquired for them, than from their intrinsic merits. He is a great favourite with the habitués of the Temple of Momus just alluded to, and this, with so many other stars in the company, including Achard, Acide, Tousez, Levassor, &c., is no mean distinction. The favourable manner in which he was received on Monday, the night of his début at the St. James's Theatre, by a large audience, leads us to believe that his engagement will be a very profitable one to the management. After Molière's "Depit Amoureux," a droll little piece was performed, entitled "Le Parodes de Mahomet," which afforded that very useful actor, M. Lienard, a good opportunity to show his comic powers. Three pretty young ladies also added to the attractions of the vaudeville, Mdlles. Ozy, Lievenne, and Andrea; and a Polka of these harem beauties, at the end of the scene, was warmly applauded. The piece was of the slightest texture that can possibly be conceived; but it kept the audience in a pleasant laughing humour for half an hour, and so its end was answered. M. Ravel appeared in "L'Etourneau," a vaudeville in three acts, which, it appears, was played in Paris more than one hundred nights. His acting, as Felix, a clerk, or very junior partner in a Paris house, was admirable—perpetually commanding shouts of laughter and applause, but never degenerating into buffoonery. It strikes us that a very smart translation might be made of this piece; without doubt, the dictionaries are already at work. The perplexities and terrible dilemmas into which the amorous Clerk falls, would be capitally suited for Keeley to delineate. Like all other French pieces, however, it would want "cutting" considerably.

Mdlle. Lievenne, the débûtante, is a great acquisition: the corps. She is pretty and lady-like; and played with great spirit. There -engagement of Mdlle. Plessy is announced in the bills, who will, we imagine, appear with M. Ravel: so that the energy of the lessee really deserves every encouragement from the public. The tedious entr' actes, however, which we hear complained of every night, might be shortened with great advantage.

DRURY-LANE.

M. Duprez appeared on Monday night as Edgar, in the opera of "Lucia di Lammermoor," a character in which he originally appeared when it was firstproduced at Naples. The music is not calculated to exhibit the peculiar characteristic of M. Duprez's voice to so much advantage as William Tell, but as a dramatic representation, it was exceedingly effective. He, however, sang with great taste, and his fine voice told in some of the verses to great advantage. Madame Eugene Garcia commenced an engagement as Lucy, and was very favourably received. She sang with great taste and spirit.

PRINCESS' THEATRE.

Auber's Opera of "Le Duc d'Olonne" was produced at this theatre, on Monday night, with well-merited success. The libretto, by Scribe, is very clever.

The Duc d'Olonne is an amatory Spanish nobleman at the time of the war of the succession. His intrigues with the French party have brought him into disgrace with the Imperialists, and he is on the point of flying the country. Unless he leaves a wife behind him, his lands will be confiscated, and he has unluckily just broken off a match that was to have been celebrated the very day when the drama begins. Somebody, however, he must marry, and a young girl, who is at the chateau with some wreaths for the bridal that never takes place, is pitched upon for his wife. Her father's life is forfeited by an act of military insubordination, and the Duke can save him. On this condition she gives him her hand and marries him veiled, so that he does not see her face. Just as the marriage is completed the Duke finds he has done all in vain, for the officers of Government enter and arrest him.

The second act takes place in the court-yard of a convent, in the vicinity of which a battle is fought. We are taken into the midst of frightened nuns and blustering dragoons, and find our old friend the Duke escaped from prison, and united with his French friends. His castle has been plundered, and Bianca has fled in the disguise of a monk, in which costume she appears among the French soldiery, and is recognised by an interesting young chevalier, with whom she is in love. To all the rest, however, she appears as a Dominican, and the experience she acquires of the coarse libertine habits of the Duke, her husband, whose tent is set up in the court, disgusts her with him to the last degree.

The incidents in the third act are comical enough. Philip V. being seated on the throne, both the Duke and the Chevalier have comfortable places at Court, where they both appear as suitors to Bianca, who is created Maid of Honour to the Queen. The Duke, who has no notion that his inamorata and his wife are the same person, takes the greatest pains to obtain a divorce from the Pope, and is much mortified when he finds he has thus given away the very lady he wished to obtain, and left her free to marry her chevalier.

To this lively story, Auber has composed clever and sparkling music, of which, perhaps, the second act is the best. The songs are spirited and stirring; but the cleverest piece in the opera is a triple serenade, whilst Bianca herself sings a brilliant air in the front: this is in Auber's best style, and was encored.

Allen, who plays the Chevalier, has two pretty songs, both of which were encored. Miss Cordell (Bianca) came out exceedingly well in the third act. He roulades in the concerted piece we have mentioned were given with great lightness and brilliancy. Leffler as the Duke, and Walton as his intendant, acted with much humour, and sang respectably.

The other theatres have put forward no novelties during the week, the old bills being found sufficiently attractive to command good audiences. New pieces are, however, in preparation at all of them. The most important of these will be Mr. Douglas Jerrold's Comedy at the HAYMARKET. It is of the present time, with a story of mixed interest, the comic prevailing. The principal characters will be played by Messrs. C. Mathews, Buckstone, Farren, Stewart, Strickland; Mesdames Glover, Vestris, Humby, Clifford; and Miss Fortescue will play the part originally intended for Mrs. Nesbitt. The title of the comedy will be "Time Works Wonders." Three or four pieces of a lighter calibre are in rehearsal at the Lyceum, including "A Good Name," adapted, we believe, by Mr. Stoqueler, from a French vaudeville: a one-act interlude by Mr. Thomas Morton: and a two-act comedietta by the author of "The Trip to Kissengen," who is now also engaged with Mr. Albert Smith in constructing a new piece which is to embrace some most novel effects.

The Olympic has closed; and Mr. Marble, the clever American comedian, has gone therefrom to the Surrey, where, we have no doubt but that his dry humour and quaint drolleries will be appreciated.

At the Princess', "Timour the Tartar" appears to be approaching the termination of his career. The burlesques at the other theatres are hale and hearty, and evince no symptoms of decline in attraction.

We regret to state that a report has reached us of the death of Mademoiselle Eugenie Prosper—a pleasing and pretty actress, whom our readers may remember playing in English at the Princess' Theatre last year. After the close of the summer season she returned to France, having suffered from the incipient stages of consumption, which disease has now terminated fatally.

A successful dramatic version of the old nursery tale "Beauty and the Beast," has been produced at one of the Paris theatres, under the title of "La Belle et le Bête." All the supernatural features of the story are, however, done away with, and the legend is brought down to the events of every-day life. A piece at the Porte St. Martin, called "La biche du bois," is spoken of as something most extraordinary, the characters being changed into mushrooms, fish, trees, and all sorts of improbabilities. These spectacles, whicch our neighbours term "pièces féeries," turn the Parisian playgoers mad with wonder, but have invariably lost their charm when reproduced in London. The reason is, that most of their transformations are borrowed from our pantomimes—the artistic perfection of the mise en scene being more thought of in France than any mechanical ingenuity. This was the case with the fairy drama "Les Sept Chateaux du Diable;" the majority of its tricks, which excited so much surprise in France, were invented by Mr. W. Bradwell, and, consequently, lost their novelty before an English audience.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

The second of the series for the season took place on Monday evening last, and was honoured by the presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert.

This Concert was a decided improvement upon the last; the selection was a better one, and the performance more just and effective. The overtures and the sinfonia went beautifully, for Cooke seemed determined to have everything his own way, and Bishop quietly followed in his wake. Herr Staudigl was loudly applauded in Mozart's aria. He seems to us to have acquired an extension of voice since he last visited us. Vieuxtemps' concerto was all dexterous digitalism, which, being expounded, means that it was very soporific. The return of Miss Birch from the sweet south was rapturously welcomed; she sang Beethoven's recitative and aria not only with a voice full of luscious sweetness, but a heartfelt tenderness. Her voice seems to be rounder, richer, and "more mind-infus'd" than when we heard her last. Madame Blaes Meerti sang respectably, and was equally so accompanied on the clarionet, by M. Blaes. Mendelssohn's musical poem, "The First Walpurgis-Night," was deliciously performed. The solos by Miss M. Williams and Herr Staudigl, were admirably given, and the chorus went true as a pendulum. Oh! what a contrast there was between this Shakspearian music and the trash which of late has been foisted upon us! Sir Henry Bishop conducted himself on this occasion with a little more alacrity, but T. Cooke conducted the concert with great spirit and discernment. Notwithstanding her Majesty's presence, the room was not fully attended. We have nothing to do with disputes "behind the scenes," but this we know, that a society, as well as "a house divided against itself," cannot stand. Moreover, the Philharmonic, not content with being the worst, is the dearest concert in the world: we can hear eight Conservatoire meetings at Paris for the price of one single admission to its ill-conducted performances.

ANCIENT CONCERTS.

The second concert of the series took place on Wednesday, under the direction of his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

Although the selection, with one exception, consisted of compositions which had never been heard at these concerts, yet the anxiety to hear the ancient music performed upon antique instruments seemed to prevail over everything else. Their appearance in the orchestra did not a little disturb the gravity of the assembly, for truly they presented a strange and grotesque sight. They consist of the following variety:—A violino Francese, viol da gamba, viol d'amour, viol da braccio theorbo, violone guitar, harp and organ, which were respectively played by Messrs. Loder, Hatton, Hill, J. F. Loder, Ventura, Dragonetti, Don Cubra, T. Wright, and Lucas, and altogether produced a very curious effect—something between surprise and pleasure. The piece performed was a concerto in two movements, composed by Emilie del Cavaliere, A.D. 1600, and is certainly here and there a quaint and pleasant production. This was followed by a Romanesca, which was deliciously executed by Mr. Loder. Most of the instruments, with the music, were forwarded by M. Fétis from Brussels, expressly for the Concert of Wednesday; and we cannot too much admire the dexterous facility with which the performers adapted themselves to their obsolete constructions. The next novelty picked out from undeserved oblivion by the research and good taste of his Royal Highness, was a Spanish Vilhancics, or Call to Arms, which was executed so charmingly by eighteen young ladies, accompanied by six guitars, that there was an universal call for its repetition. The vocal music of the night was exquisitely given, particularly by Mario and Staudigl. Altogether the selections and arrangements reflected the highest credit upon the musical skill and taste of his Royal Highness. Her Majesty seemed highly delighted with the Concert, and honoured Mr. Hatton by hearing him play an air on the viol da gamba, between the acts, in the tea-room. The next Concert, under the direction of the Archbishop of York, is to take place on the 30th inst.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The principal sporting event of the week—indeed, the only one which attracted public interest—was the Newmarket Craven Meeting. This is the anniversary of the opening of the legitimate racing season, and though not an occasion remarkable for the high character of its stakes, or the contests arising out of them, it brings together the regular turf corps from every part of the kingdom. Several causes combined to sink the Craven week of 1845 below the ordinary average. For the last ten or a dozen years, the Monday's and Tuesday's Riddlesworth Stakes have rapidly declined; the former having this season only three nominations. As a set-off, however, new three-year-old sweepstakes sprung up, and, together with the engagements of some of the Derby favourites, and the probability of their showing for them, things were not so bad but they might have been worse. The weather indeed of the first days was such as it seemed a tempting of Providence to brave on a place like Newmarket heath—especially for miserables who had run the gauntlet of the two preceding spring months—and during a portion of Tuesday afternoon, when, amid the rage of rain and tempest and darkness, the ring looked more like the incantation scene in Macbeth, or Der Freischutz, than a social circle of Christian gentlemen, we caught ourself apostrophising there as crooked Glo'ster does the Lady Ann, "If ye survive that—ye are immortal!" That they did survive, it is our duty to declare for the comfort and consolation of those who desire to meet them on Monday at Philippi—that is to say, at Tattersall's.

The business of the meeting commenced by a solemn protest on the part of my Lord George Bentinck against a steed, hight Perkin Warbeck, for the Newmarket handicap. This is the courser that last year won the New Stakes at Ascot as a two-year-old, and was subsequently proved not to be the quadruped he professed to be. A similar protest, it is understood, will be lodged against Zanoni for the Chester Cup—that horse having last year won the Derby as Running Rein—running, as it was afterwards shown, in a name to which he had not a bit of right. Everybody knows the story of Goldsmith's old soldier, the place of whose birth was so obscure, that, as he says, "They knocked me about from parish to parish, till I began to think they wouldn't let me be born anywhere." The identity of this pair of horses seems to be in the same predicament; if they won't allow Perkin Warbeck to be Bloodstone, or Running Rein to be Maccabeus, do they mean to deny that they are solipedes in rerum naturâ altogether? The feature in Monday's sport was the appearance of Kedger for the Belgrave Stakes, but, as he was suffered to walk over, it was not an animated one: we must wait some fourteen days longer for a spice of his quality. Winchelsea won the Riddlesworth in a canter; this, with a sprinkling of miscellaneous rain and racing, made up the day's amusement. Tuesday was a day of compensation for the legs—it drenched the poor shivering wretches without mercy, and it gave every race to the field—a result very rare indeed at Newmarket, First, Squire Osbaldeston, who is running into luck, won a sweepstakes with his Oaks filly, by the Saddler—Jezail the favourite; then, Vol-au-Vent did the same by the Newmarket Handicap—I-am-not-aware the favourite; then Winchelsea won the Tuesday's Riddlesworth, for which they laid 7 to 4 on the Cobweb colt (tried on the Saturday—it was asserted to be "a flyer"); and then Oakley beat Discord a match, 5 to 4 on the loser. For the 100 Sovs. Sweepstakes, Idas walked over—thus kicking down the leading interest of the day's list. And thus it constantly is at Newmarket, where cliqueism is becoming the grave of sport and spirit. Does any one expect that Kedger and Idas will both go for the Two Thousand? Pooh, pooh, the winner of both these Riddlesworths is in the Derby and Day's lot: they called him a pony when he ran at Goodwood, but we spoke well of him at the time. To be sure, he cut up indifferently for the Criterion; but

Legs are not steel, and steel is bent;
Legs are not rock, and rock is rent.

The ground was no joke last autumn for a two-year-old that was kept going on it. Nevertheless, the spring running, albeit it has played ducks and drakes with the betting, has been false. A gross, big horse, could not have been got fit for this week's racing at Newmarket. Your little compact nag had it all in his favour; but there's a long day still before Epsom. Wednesday gave the column to Winchelsea, a succession of victories such as no three-year-olds has achieved in our day. It will be said the fields were very bad, but the fashion in which the winner disposed of them was singularly cavalier. The great problem remains yet to be solved—the quality of the great winter favourites for the Derby. The current week has thrown little light on it. The First Spring Meeting may afford a better line, but there seems small prospect of the races generally looked to as a criterion of the leading stables helping us to much this year. The Two Thousand Guinea Stakes is, no doubt, worth winning, but present circumstances threaten to divest it of all interest. Kedger, Idas, Weatherbit, Winchelsea, Seaman—these were its lions, but the menagerie is now as domesticated as Van Amburgh's lot. Those who are concerned in the "book" trade will note the variations played during the Craven week on the Chester Handicaps. They will observe that Ould Ireland was, as well at Newmarket as in St. Stephen's, at a premium. And small blame to him. This nag carries, at three years old, 5st. for the Chester Cup; last autumn, when two years old, he beat one of the best fields of his year at the Curragh, carrying 8st. 4lbs.—that is to say, three stone four pounds more! This season of grace will bring strange things to pass on the banks of the Dee. As this paper has touched on no topic but the Newmarket turf, it shall close without straying beyond it, and with sorrow it sums up the quality of the stock that has so far essayed for the glory of the Olympic metropolis. No doubt the stables were backward in their training, but there is too much cause to fear they are also below their average in the character of their teams.

NEWMARKET CRAVEN MEETING.—Monday.

The Craven Stakes not having filled, one of the handicaps was selected as the opening race of the meeting; and, at one o'clock, Mr. Hibburd, the new starter, made his début at the starting-post of the D.M. for

LATEST BETTING AT NEWMARKET.

Newmarket, Thursday Morning.—The Chester Cup betting has been flat, and with no material effect on the prices, except in the instance of Ould Ireland and Trueboy, who have been backed by the Manchester men, con-spirito, at improved quotations. The wretched figure cut by the Cobweb colt has, to all appearance, settled his chance for the Derby, and all the bearing up of "mine ancient friend" will be unavailing to restore him to a hedging price. Idas, a monstrous big horse and a fine goer, has been backed for large sums; ditto, John Day's lot, Weatherbit, and Wood Pigeon. Kedger, Clear the Way, and the Miss Whip colt are at a discount on the prices last quoted in this paper. The following are the present averages:—

AQUATICS.

The Thames Regatta.—Lord Castlereagh has again been chosen president. Lord John Russell is amongst the recent patrons. We regret to state that one of four brothers (the Claspers, from Newcastle), who made themselves so conspicuous as rowers at the Regatta of last year, died a few days since at that town.

His Majesty the King of the French has been added to the members of the Royal Western Yacht Club, who continue to hold their meetings at Plymouth.

The members of the Oxford University have set to work with much ardour, and seem determined if possible to retrieve their lost laurels at the ensuing Thames Regatta. Races have been fixed to take place on the following days:—Monday, 28th April, Wednesday 30th ditto; Friday May 2nd, Saturday 3rd, Monday 5th, Wednesday 7th, Friday 9th, and Saturday 10th.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange (Friday).—During the present week, the arrivals of English wheat from market have been only moderate, though of fair average quality. To-day, the show of samples was scanty, while the demand for the first qualities was steady, at fully Monday's prices. All other kinds were a slow sale, at late rates. In free foreign wheat a limited business was doing, yet we can notice no alteration in prices. The sale for barley and malt was excessively dull, and, in some instances, lower rates were submitted to. From Ireland, the arrivals of oats are on the increase; hence the oat trade was inactive, at stationary figures. Beans, peas, and flour, dull.

Arrivals.—English: wheat, 5210; barley, 3620; oats, 1860 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 28,320 quarters. Foreign; wheat, —; barley, 8750; oats, 3670 quarters, Flour, 1970 sacks; malt, 2280 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 43s to 52s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 43s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to—, per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Clover seed—both English and foreign—has been in steady request, though on lower terms. Canary moves off steadily at 46s to 50s per quarter. Tares are held at former rates. Other kinds of seeds rule about stationary. Linseed English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterrancan and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 5s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 50s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s: extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6½d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 46s 3d; barley, 32s 5d; oats, 20s 9d rye, 30s 6d; beans, 35s 5d; peas, 36s 6d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 45s 8d; barley, 32s 4d; oats, 21s 4d; rye, 30s 4d; beans, 34s 10d; peas, 35s 7d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 6s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 8s 6d peas, 7s 6d.

Tea.—The imports of this article continue liberal about 1,300,000 lbs having arrived during the present week from Canton. A small sale of 700 packages has passed off heavily, at barely previous rates. About 9000 packages will be brought to the hammer on Tuesday next. Privately a fair business is doing, at unaltered quotations.

Sugar.—For most kinds of West India sugar a good demand has prevailed, and previous rates are well supported. Holders of all other kinds of raw sugar are firm, and large parcels have found buyers at full prices. The refined market is somewhat unsettled.

Coffee.—A fair demand has prevailed for Ceylon, yet the quotations have had a downward tendency. In other kinds of coffee a good business has been doing, at full prices.

Provisions.—Owing to the large arrivals, foreign butter is very dull, at a further decline of from 1s to 2s per cwt, the highest figures not exceeding 90s to 96s per cwt. Fresh butter is a dull inquiry, at 1s per cwt. lower. Although the supplies of bacon are large, a good business is passing in that article, at 1s per cwt less money. Irish lard is in fair request, at full prices. All other kinds of provisions support late figures.

Tallow. This market is still in a very dull state, and rather lower prices have been accepted by the holders. P. Y. C., on the spot, has sold at 38s to 38s 3d; and for delivery in the last three months, 37s 9d to 38s per cwt. Town tallow is in good supply, but not cheaper.

Fruit.—Very little business is doing in any description of fruit, and prices are the turn lower.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 15s to £4 15s; useful ditto, £4 16s to £5 8s; fine upland ditto, £5 10s to £5 15s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6; oat straw, £1 18s to £2 0s; wheat straw, £2 0s to £2 2s; per load.

Potatoes.—The best parcels are in fair request, at 70s to 80s per ton: but all other qualities are extremely dull.

Hops (Friday).—The announcement of the failure of an eminent brewer, has cast a great gloom over this market; nevertheless, a fair amount of business is doing in most descriptions of hops, at prices about equal to those quoted in our last report. New Sussex Pockets, £7 0s to £8 8s; Choice ditto, £8 12s to £10 0s; Kent, £7 0s to £9 0s; Superfine Mid Kent £9 9s to £13 0s; Superfine East ditto, £9 10s to £13 0s; Yearlings, £7 0s to £8 10s.

Coals (Friday).—Adair's, 15s; Charlott's Main, 15s; New Tanfield, 14s 0d; Ord's Redhugh 18s 6d; Gosforth, 16s 6d; Newmarch, 14s 9d; Stewart's, 13s 9d; Lambton, 18s 6d; per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Although the supply of beasts on sale here this morning was extensive for the time of year—nearly 600 Scots coming to hand by steamers from Scotland, and 40 oxen and cows from Rotterdam all in good condition—the beef trade was steady, and Monday's advanced prices were mostly supported. The numbers of sheep were good, yet the inquiry for them was firm, at fully previous rates. From the Isle of Wight 60 lambs were received per railway, with fair average arrivals from other parts. The sale was rather active, at full quotations. Calves were in good supply and heavy demand, at a decline of 2d per 8lbs. In pigs, very little was doing. Milch cows sold heavily, at from £16 to £19 each.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 6d to 2s 10d; second quality ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; prime large oxen, 3s 6d to 3s 10d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 0d to 4s 2d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; second quality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 10d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime Southdowns out of wool, 3s 10d to 4s 2d; ditto in the wool, 4s 4d to 4s 8d; large coarse calves, 3s 6d to 4s 0d; prime small ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 6d; large hogs 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 4s 8d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves 18s 0d to 30s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 19s 0d each. Beasts, 942; cows 171; sheep and lambs, 7460; calves, 219; pigs, 321.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday) —We had rather an inactive demand to-day, at barely previous rates:—

Per 8lbs, by the carcass—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 2s 10d to 3s 6d inferior mutton, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 10d veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 4s 8d to 6s. Robert Herbert.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The settlement in the Consol Market was satisfactorily arranged on Tuesday and Wednesday, although the extent of fluctuations has been rather large. Prices showed an improving tendency after the receipt of the American mail on Monday, most of the leading speculators, for the fall, considering the news rather favourable to peace, and being thus impelled to change their accounts. On Monday, Consols quoted 99¼ for time and money, and the prices gradually advanced to 99⅝, but has since receded to the former quotation. Exchequer Bills do not quite maintain last week's price, and Bank Stock barely supports its present quotation. At closing, Reduced Three per Cents. quoted 98¾; Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents. were flat, at 101⅛ to ⅜; Bank Stock, 209½ to 210½; Consols for Money, 99¼; for the Account, 99⅜ to ⅝.

The business in the Foreign House during the week has been perfectly unimportant. Tuesday was half monthly account day, which was readily arranged. The fluctuation in prices has been very trifling, but quotations were tolerably firm at the close of the week. Mexican improved about ¼ per Cent. on Thursday, and closed at 37½: Spanish Actives, 31⅛; Three per Cents. 41; Dutch Two-and a-Half per Cents., 63¼; Four per Cent Certificates, 97⅜; Portuguese, 67; Belgian, 101¼. The settlement in the Consol and Foreign Market being fixed for the same day as the closing of the Share Account, operated very severely upon the brokers and jobbers.

The settlement in the Share Market was extraordinarily heavy, and scarcely concluded on Wednesday. Notwithstanding the fluctuations, it was quietly arranged, and speculation has again free sway for another account. The settlement in the London and York line was satisfactory in its results, and the price rose on Wednesday to 4⅛ ⅜. Direct Northern have received a check from the position of the line in relation to the standing orders. The French lines have been generally flat, considerable bearing having taken place both here and in Paris, particularly in the proposed lines. A better feeling was, however, visible towards the close of the week. Money, however, grows dearer each account, and the absence of shares to deliver, is the great cause of the present high prices. Namur and Liége have been sold at 5 prem. for time, although the Scrip is not yet delivered. A slight reaction, however, occurred on Thursday. The closing prices of the week are, Aberdeen, 5½; Armagh &c., 3¼; Caledonian, 13½; Cambridge and Lincoln, 9; Chester and Holyhead, 14½; Churnet Valley, 9½; Coventry, Bedworth, &c., 5; Coventry and Leicester, 3½; Cornwall, 5⅜; Diss, Beccles, and Yarmouth, 3½; Direct Northern, 4; Dublin and Galway, 5½; Eastern Counties, 21: Dublin, Belfast and Coleraine, 2⅞; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 62½; Great Western, 188; Harwich, 2⅜; Inverness and Elgin, 2; Birmingham Stock, 234; London and York, 4⅛; Blackwall, 8⅜; Brighton, 64½; Croydon, 17⅜; Greenwich, 10⅞; Midlands, 16⅝; Newark and Sheffield, 6½; Rugbys, 4⅞; Scottish Central, 7¼; Scottish Midlands, 4⅜; South Devon, 28; Dovers, 42½; South Wales, 6⅜; Trent Valley, 20½; Waterford and Kilkenny, 4; York and North Midland, 105; Boulogne and Amiens, 11½; Bordeaux, Toulouse, and Cette, 2⅝; Great North of France, 5⅜; do. Rosamels, 2⅜; Paris and Lyons (Ganneron's, 2⅜; do. (Lafitte's) 3⅛; Tours and Nantes, 3⅛

Saturday Morning.—The English funds were firm yesterday, with an upward tendency. Consols closed at 98¾ to ⅞. In the Foreign House, Mexican advanced to 38. The Share Market was generally flat. London and York advanced a point, but afterwards receded to their former quotations. Prices were the same as the previous day.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. MONCKTON MILNES, M.P.

To be a "Lord and a great leader" at once is, says our fine old dramatist, Massinger, seldom vouchsafed to one born in the ermine. To be a poet and a legislator is almost rarer, for though Shelley lays it down as an ascertained fact that poets are the "unacknowledged legislators of the world," they are very seldom acknowledged members of the House of Commons. In the first place, constituencies are dear, election expenses run high, and the charges of an adverse petition in a committee would, in these days, beggar all the poets from Homer downwards, even supposing they ever had any property, in the first place, and were able to club it in defence of an ambitious brother, degenerated into a politician, in the second. Still there are exceptions; sunbeams do go astray occasionally, and several poets there really are at this present time on the benches of the collective wisdom. In fact, when we come to counting, there are more than might be expected; Lord John Russell has been guilty of a tragedy, and is answerable for some very fair and readable translations from Dante. "Evadne" may be proved against the brilliant member for Dungarvon, Mr. Sheil; and, passing several minor stars on the Whig benches, is there not Macaulay, with his masculine and spirited "Lays of Rome?" crossing the House to the Treasury side, we come to a soil less propitious to the Muses. Sir Robert Peel is not a poet; but he has furnished to others the experience of three separate bards; his supporters are being deprived of the "Pleasures of Imagination," for he is not quite what they pictured him; in his old opinions, which he has forsaken, he leaves them the "Pleasures of Memory," and in his new lines the Whigs have the "Pleasures of Hope." Sir James Graham does not go to the Home Office with his "singing robes about him," but he has written nevertheless, and his pamphlet on Corn and Currency possesses great merits as a work of fiction.

MR. MONCKTON MILNES, M.P.

Old England, we confess, is rather deficient in the fine frenzy; Apollo had nothing to do with the Income Tax, which we cannot admit to be a work of inspiration. But Young England makes up for it: in its ranks poets abound; passing over the author of "Coningsby," who has dealt mostly in prose, there is Mr. Smythe with his "Historic Fancies," and Lord J. Manners with his lament for the "Old Nobility," and last, but not least, there is Richard Monckton Milnes, the member for Pontefract, of whom we present the reader with (though we say it ourselves) an excellent portrait. He sits on the Ministerial side of the House, and would, perhaps, think it a misnomer to be called anything but a Tory. Yet how he can claim the title we know not, seeing that in almost every speech he makes he forfeits it. His Toryism would certainly have frightened the Percivals and Sidmouths and Eldons of old from their propriety, and sounded to them very much like Radicalism. His mind is more liberal than the creed of the party he has adopted, and hence some discordances arise like that of Tuesday evening last when his speech in support of the Maynooth grant was one that on the platform of Exeter Hall would be called Popery in disguise, or the too kindly testimonials to it of one seduced by the blandishments of the scarlet woman. Could anything be more heterodox, for instance, than his denial of the allegation that making a clergy comfortable in worldly matters renders them more able to gain proselytes? No, says Mr. Milnes, the Established Church has been lapped in riches and comforts for some two centuries, and is just where it was! But we will give a short specimen of the hon. gentleman's style, and that shall be a passage from his last speech, which makes us almost fear that in his last tour he stopped too long at Rome:—

> There was no safety in dallying with the discontent of 6,000,000, and the country must either be prepared to re-enact the penal laws of Ireland, or else to follow out the course indicated by the present bill. One or the other of these two courses must be pursued, and that without further delay. He could conceive no bigot so injurious to the cause which he supported as an amiable bigot, like the hon. member for Oxford. When it was recollected that Lord Bacon had declared Popery to be at an end in Ireland, and when Swift was found declaring that in a few years there would be no more Roman Catholics in that country, the fact could only be referred to the mysterious decrees of Providence, that the priesthood there were at the present moment more powerful than ever. The cruelty of the policy which had been pursued towards Ireland was such as to humiliate every Englishman who looked back on the history of that country, and no penance could be too great to expiate the past, nor was any danger too great to be risked, if by any means the recollection of past injuries could be effaced, and the persecution of the past be made the means of present reconciliation.

Mr. Milnes is by no means a bad orator; but he is a far better poet; and we advise those who disagree with his political opinions, to turn to his "Flight of Youth," his "Lay of the Humble," his "Long Ago," or his "Men of Old," and we promise them they will not lay them down without admiration for his genius. There are lines and passages in all of them, that once read never quit the memory. As we have given an extract from his official language, let us mount with him for a moment above the smoke and stir of that dull spot which men call St. Stephen's, into the purer element—poesy. We are perplexed for choice, but will take the first we named—the "Flight of Youth." It is too long to give entire; but much of it may be read with Coleridge's beautiful stanzas on the same subject, and lose nothing by comparison:—

Alas, we know not how he went,
We knew not he was going,
For had our tears once found a vent,
We' had stayed him with their flowing.
It was as an earthquake, when
We awoke and found him gone,
We were miserable men.
We were hopeless, every one!
Yes, he must have gone away
In his guise of every day,
In his common dress, the same
Perfect face and perfect frame;
For in feature, for in limb,
Who could be compared to him?
Firm his step, as one who knows
He is free, where'er he goes,
And withal as light of spring
As the arrow from the string;
His impassioned eye had got Fire which the sun has not;
Silk to feel, and gold to see,
Fell his tresses full and free,
Like the morning mists that glide
Soft adown the mountain side.
* * * *
In his hand was poised a spear,
Deftly poised, as to appear
Re-ting of its proper will,—
Thus a merry hunter still,
And engarlanded with bay,
Must our Youth have gone away,
Tho' we half remember now,
He had borne some little while
Something mournful in his smile—
Something serious on his brow.
* * * *
Now, between us all and Him
There are rising mountains dim,
Forests of uncounted trees,
Spaces of unmeasured seas:
Think, with Him how gay of yore
We made sunshine out of shade,—
Think with Him how light we bore
All the burden sorrow laid;
All went happily about Him,—
How shall we toil on without him?
* * * *
If he deigned our lips to kiss
With those living lips of his,
We were lightened of our pain,
We were up and hale again:—
Now, without one blessing glance
From his rose-lit countenance,
We shall die, deserted men,—
And not see him, even then!

The father of Mr. Milnes represented the same borough for many years; he is connected by blood with the Galway family, with Lord Gambier, and the Countess of Cork and Orrery; he therefore holds an influential position, and it is not exclusively poetry or politics that seated him in Parliament. He was born in 1809. The ludicrous effect with which some old and forgotten errors of a "Random" writer, have been this week raked up against the author, almost scares us from attempting anything in the shape of personal description; but we may venture to add, that he has a well-formed head, and the full eye that phrenologists say indicates the organ of language. He is not tall, and a critical observer might perhaps perceive a tendency in his frame to become "more fat than bard beseems."

MADAME WEISS AND THE VIENNESE CHILDREN.

Madame Weiss, a remarkably portly and good-humoured lady, who has outwitted all the diplomatists, with the great Metternich at their head; put to the blush all maitres de ballet, and created a revolution on the stage, is clearly a genius. A few words as to the origin of her infant troupe, and the manner in which she has brought them, despite the negociations of ambassadors and the interference of crowned heads, to this country, will, therefore, be of interest to our readers.

Madame Weiss had been for a long time maitress de ballet at the Theatre of Josephstadt at Vienna. About four years ago, Pokorny, the director of this theatre, in getting up a new piece, found himself in want of a ballet of children. In this emergency he applied to Madame Weiss. Children were sought for in every direction, and by dint of perseverance, twenty children, taken from dark cellars and burning garrets, from the lowest class of society and in abject poverty, were got together, and placed under the tuition of Madame Weiss. Shortly afterwards, the organisation of this little corps de ballet was found so perfect, that every one went to see the new piece; the little dancers became the fashion, and one performance of the same kind followed another. The manager was making a fortune by the infant troupe, and parents of a far more respectable class of society confided their children to the charge of the worthy maitress de ballet.

About a year and a half afterwards the engagement of Madame Weiss with the Theatre of Josephstadt expired. She then engaged the children on her own account. By the contract then made, she was allowed the charge of them for four or five years, and permission to travel where she would. Then commenced the series of triumphant progresses of Madame Weiss and her thirty-six little pupils. Pesth, Brunn, Berlin, Frankfort, Cologne, and Hamburg, were successively visited by the little marvels, and their success at each of these places was extraordinary and the receipts immense. So far all was right, but at Frankfort discord arose between Madame Weiss and four of the mothers, who had accompanied the little Viennoises, and who wished to wrest from the good lady that share of profit which was due to the remarkable talent and pains with which she had disciplined her little unruly troupe. Another trouble befel Madame Weiss; her passport would not carry her beyond the limits of Germany, and the authorities of Frankfort decreed that the whole corps de ballet should be sent back to Vienna for the enjoyment of the Austrian Emperor. Madame Weiss gave them them the slip; she escaped to Cologne, thence to Brussels, and afterwards to Paris, where her immense success fully compensated for all the trouble and alarms she had undergone. The question of the journey to

THE VIENNESE CHILDREN, AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

England, however, set all the diplomatists to work; the Empress of Austria and the Queen of France became suddenly alarmed for the religious faith of the little Viennoises. Count d'Appony put forth all his diplomatic powers; his colleague in London did the same the other day, but in vain; Madame Weiss was by this time in countries where even slaves become free when they do but touch the soil, and as regards the laws of the country, she had not only the sanction of her own conscience, but she was armed with duly framed legal instruments from the parents, several of whom have arrived in England with her.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE MARQUIS OF DOWNSHIRE.

The news of the sudden death of this nobleman has been received with regret in this country, and in Ireland. Arthur Blundell Sandys Trumbull Hill, Marquis of Downshire, &c., in the Irish peerage, Earl of Hillsborough, &c., in the peerage of England, and Lord Harwich, &c., in that of Great Britain, was born on the 8th of October, 1788; he succeeded his father, Arthur, second Marquis, on the 7th of September, 1801, when only thirteen years old. On the 25th of October, 1811, he married the Lady Maria Windsor, eldest daughter of Ather Hickman, fifth Earl of Plymouth, by whom he leaves three sons and two daughters.

The noble marquis, on coming of age, took his seat in the House of Lords, and was a supporter of the administrations of Mr. Percival, Lord Liverpool, the Duke of Wellington, and Sir Robert Peel. Previous to 1829, his lordship opposed the Catholic claims, but eventually voted for the Relief Bill. He also voted in favour of Parliamentary Reform, but generally he was adverse to the measures of the Grey and Melbourne Ministries. He did not, however, assume a prominent part in politics, only now and then speaking in the house, and but occasionally coming forward in public affairs. In private life he was more distinguished. He was a man of large possessions, and he managed his estates with good feeling and ability.

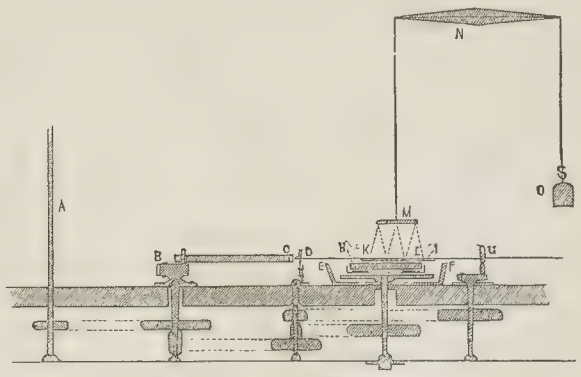
He interested himself much in the condition and welfare of the people of Ireland, amongst whom it was his practice to reside during many months in each year, advancing the interests of agriculture, and promoting the happiness of his tenantry. The Marquis was Lord Lieutenant of the county of Down, Colonel of the South Downshire Militia, and Vice-President of the Royal Society of Dublin. His death was of a sudden and awful nature. He had arrived in Dublin from Hillsborough Castle, Downshire, on Friday, the 11th instant, with the intention of attending the Spring Cattle-show of the Royal Dublin Society, in the ensuing week. Availing himself of the interval of a few days, he left the Gresham Hotel the following morning, the 12th, to visit his estate of Blessington, in the county of Wicklow, fifteen miles from Dublin. On coming there, he was met by his agent, who had a horse in waiting. His lordship mounted, but had not proceeded more than a few paces, when he was seized with a fit of apoplexy, and fell upon the road side. Assistance was at once obtained, but the unfortunate nobleman was found to be quite dead.

THE LATE MARQUIS OF DOWNSHIRE.

The Marquis is succeeded by Arthur Wills, now fourth Marquis of Downshire. This peer, who has, since 1836, until his father's demise, represented the county of Down in Parliament, was born on the 6th August, 1812, and married, the 23rd August, 1837, Caroline, eldest daughter of the first Viscount Combermere. The house of Hill, formerly De la Montayne, is of Norman descent, and one of more than ordinary distinction, especially in Ireland. The founder of the family there went over with the Earl of Essex, in 1573, to suppress O'Neil's Rebellion. The creation of the first Irish title, Baron Hill, bears date 1717, and that of the Marquis of Downshire, 1789; the English dignities of Earl of Hillsborough and Viscount Fairford, are of the year 1772, and that of Baron Harwich in the peerage of Great Britain of the year 1756.

THE EARL OF ABERGAVENNY.

The Rev. John Neville, Earl of Abergavenny, Viscount Neville, and Baron Abergavenny, was born on the 25th Dec., 1789; he was the third son of Henry, sixteenth Baron and second Earl of Abergavenny, by his wife Mary, only child of John Robinson, Esq., of Wyke House, in the county of Middlesex, for many years Secretary of the Treasury; he succeeded his father as third Earl on the 27th March, 1843, and has thus enjoyed the family honours for little more than two years. His lordship was in holy orders, and passed his life in that dignified retirement which became his sacred avocation. He meddled not at all in political life; his continued delicate state of health, indeed, did not permit him to do so; and he never appeared in the House of Lords but one night after his succession to the peerage. His death, which was caused by apoplexy, occurred on the night of Friday, the 11th inst., at his seat, Eridge Park, near Tunbridge Wells. His lordship, having never married, is succeeded by his next and only surviving brother, William, now fourth Earl of Abergavenny, who is also in holy orders, he is vicar of Frant, in Sussex, and rector of Birling, in Kent, and has married Caroline, second daughter of the late Ralph Leeke, Esq., of Longford Hall, Shropshire, and has two sons and three daughters.



The family of the Nevilles, Earls and Barons of Abergavenny, is one of ancient and illustrious descent. The early ancestors possessed a feudal barony of Bergavenny, in the time of Henry III., and their first writ of summons to Parliament by the same title, dates the 23rd November, 1392. Richard Beauchamp, Lord Bergavenny, and Earl of Worcester, in 1420 left an only daughter and heiress, the Lady Elizabeth Beauchamp, who gave her hand to Sir Edward Neville, a son of the first Earl of Westmoreland, and uncle of the King-making Earl of Warwick. By this marriage, Sir Edward became possessed of the heiress's castle and lands, and was himself summoned to Parliament as Baron Bergavenny, the 5th September, 1450. His lordship was a stanch Yorkist in the wars of the Roses, and enjoyed the confidence of King Edward IV.; he was succeeded by his son George, the second baron, who received knighthood at the celebrated battle of Tewkesbury, in 1471. From this warrior's second son, Sir Edward Neville, who was also a knight-banneret and a soldier of high reputation, and who perished on the scaffold in the reign of Henry VIII., the present family lineally derives. With the seventh baron, Henry, we find the title of Bergavenny changed to the more modern appellation of Abergavenny. George, the fifteenth baron, the grandfather of the Earl recently deceased, was advanced to the dignities of Viscount Neville, and Earl of Abergavenny, on the 17th May, 1784.

DISCOVERIES WITH THE GREAT ROSSE TELESCOPE.

THE GREAT ROSSE TELESCOPE.

"Marvellous rumours are afloat respecting the astronomical discoveries made by Lord Rosse's Monster Telescope. It is said that Regulus, instead of being a sphere, is ascertained to be a disc; and, stranger still, that the nebula in the belt of Orion is a universal system—a sun, with planets moving round it, as the earth and her fellow-orbs move round our glorious luminary." We quote these rumours from the Literary Gazette; and they suggest the present as the best opportunity for introducing to our readers an illustrated description of the gigantic instrument by which these astounding discoveries are reputed to have been made. For this purpose we shall quote the following communication to the Times, by Sir James South, of the Royal Observatory, Kensington:—

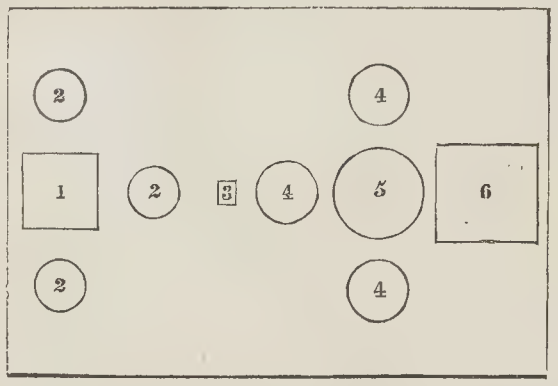
MACHINE FOR GRINDING AND POLISHING THE SPECULA.

In the Times of September last (says Sir James), I had the gratification of announcing to the public that the construction of the large telescope, by the Earl of Rosse, was so far advanced, that the instrument had actually been directed to the heavens, and that, too, with satisfactory results.

The great speculum, however, as then used, had been only approximately polished, and was inserted in the tube merely to ascertain if its focal length coincided with that which it was designed to give it.

The difference being inconsiderable, it was suffered to remain in the tube, without having been used by the noble lord, till Dr. Robinson's and my arrival at the Castle, at the commencement of February last; but a continuous series of bad weather having precluded all possibility of observing any other object than the moon, on the 21st of February the large speculum was removed; and on the 4th of March, having been re-ground and re-polished, it was reinstated in the tube.

The diameter of the large speculum is 6 feet, its thickness 5½ inches, its weight 3¾ tons, and its composition 126 parts of copper to 57½ parts of tin; its focal length is 54 feet—the tube is of deal; its lower part, that in which the speculum is placed, is a cube of 8 feet; the circular part of the tube is, at its centre, 7½ feet diameter, and at its extremities, 6½ feet. The telescope lies between two stone walls, about 71 feet from north to south, about 50 feet high, and about 23 feet asunder. These walls are as nearly as possible parallel with the meridian.



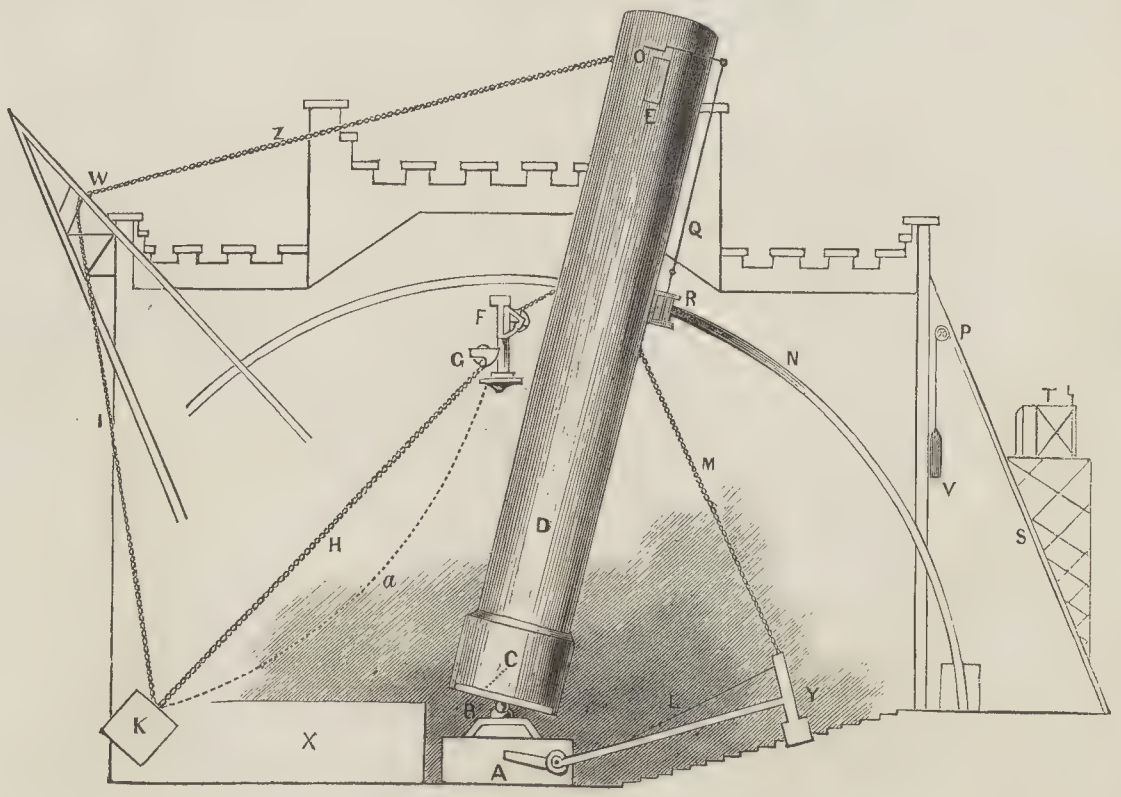
In the interior face of the eastern wall, a very strong iron arc, of about 43 feet radius, is firmly fixed, provided, however, with adjustments, whereby its surface facing the telescope may be set very accurately in the plane of the meridian—a matter of the greatest importance, seeing that by the contact with it of rollers attached to one extremity of a quadrangular bar, which slides through a metal box fixed to the under part of the telescope tube, a few feet from the object end of the latter, whilst its other extremity remains free, the position of the telescope in the meridian is secured, or any deviation from it easily determined, for on this bar lines are drawn, the interval between any adjoining two of which corresponds to one minute of time at the equator. The tube and speculum, including the bed on which the latter rests, weigh about 15 tons.

The telescope rests on an universal joint, placed on masonry about 6 feet below the ground, and is elevated or depressed by a chain and windlass; and, although it weighs about 15 tons, the instrument is raised by two men with great facility Of course, it is counterpoised in every direction.

At present, it can be used only between 14 degrees of southern altitude and the zenith; but, when completed, its range will embrace an arc between 10 degrees of altitude towards the south and 47 degrees north; so that all objects between the pole and 27 degrees south of the equator will be observable with it; whilst in the equator any object can be viewed with it about 40 minutes of time on either side of the meridian.

The observer, when at work, stands in one of four galleries, the three highest of which are drawn out from the western wall, whilst the fourth, or lowest, has for its base an elevating platform, along the horizontal surface of which a gallery slides from wall to wall by machinery within the observer's reach, but which a child may work.

When the telescope is about half an hour east of the meridian, the galleries hanging over the gap between the walls, present to a spectator below an appearance somewhat dangerous; yet the observer, with common prudence, is as safe as on the ground, and each of the galleries can be drawn from the wall to the telescope's side so readily, that the observer needs no one else to move it for him.



GROUND PLAN OF THE FOUNDRY.

The telescope lying at its least altitude can be raised to the zenith by the two men at the windlass in six minutes; and so manageable is the enormous mass, that, give me the right ascension and declination of any celestial object between these points, and I will have the object in the field of the telescope within eight minutes from the first attempt to raise it.

When the observer has found the object, he must at present follow it by rackwork within its reach. As yet, it has no equatorial motion, but it very shortly will, and at no very distant day clockwork will be connected with it, when the observer, if I mistake not, will, whilst observing, be almost as comfortable as if he were reading at a desk by his fireside.

The night of the 5th of March was, I think, the finest I ever saw in Ireland. Many nebulæ were observed by Lord Ross, Dr. Robinson, and myself. Most of them were, for the first time since their creation, seen by us as groups or clusters of stars; whilst some, at least to my eyes, showed no such resolution. Never however, in my life did I see such glorious sidereal pictures as this instrument afforded us. Most of the nebulæ we saw I certainly have observed with my own large achromatic; but although that instrument, as far as relates to magnifying power, is probably inferior to no one in existence, yet to compare these nebulæ, as seen with it and the 6 feet telescope, is like comparing, as seen with the naked ye, the dinginess of the planet Saturn to the brilliancy of Venus.

The most popularly known nebulæ observed this night were the ring nebulæ in the Canes Venatici, or the 51st of Messier's catalogue, which was resolved into stars with a magnifying power of 548; and the 94th of Messier, which is in the same constellation, and which was resolved into a large globular cluster of stars, not much unlike the well-known cluster in Hercules, called also 13th Messier.

Although, however, the power of this telescope in resolving nebulæ into stars hitherto considered irresolvable was extremely gratifying, still it was in my mind little more than I had anticipated; for experience has long since told me that a telescope may show nebulæ, even those resolvable by it, very well, whilst, when directed to a bright star, with a very moderate magnifying power, its imperfections will be actually offensive. During Sir W. Herschell's life time, with the 20-feet reflector at Slough I saw, amongst others, 3 Messier, 5 Messier, 13 Messier, 92 Messier, the annular nebulæ of Lyra, and the great nebula of Andromeda. No telescope of its size probably ever showed them better; yet on the same night the same instrument, when directed to Alpha Lyræ (a star of the first magnitude) broke down under a power of about 300.

Perfection of figure, then, of a telescope must be tested, not by nebulæ, but by its performance on a star of the first magnitude. If it will, under high power, show the star round and free from optical appendages, we may safely enough take it for granted it will not only show nebulæ well, but any other celestial object as it ought. When about to buy my large object glass at Paris, in 1829, I directed it to Aldebaran, viewed it in the telescope, certainly not one minute, and paid for it the next, without any one of the astronomers of Paris then present, and by my side imagining I had even had the telescope on the star, much less that I had purchased it in consequence. Regulus on the 11th being near the meridian, I placed the 6 feet telescope on it, and with the entire aperture and a magnifying power of 800 I saw with inexpressible delight, the star free from wings, tails, or optical appendages: not, indeed, like a planetary disc, as in my large achromatic, but as a round image resembling voltaic light between charcoal points; and so little abberations had this brilliant image that I could have measured its distance from, and position with, any of the stars in the field with a spider's line micrometer, and a power of 1000, without the slightest difficulty; for not only was the large star round, but the telescope, although in the open air and the wind blowing rather fresh, was as steady as a rock.

On subsequent nights', observations of other nebulæ, amounting to some 30 or more, removed most of them from the list of nebulæ, where they had long figured, to that of clusters; whilst some of these latter, but more especially 5 Messier, exhibited a sidereal picture in the telescope such as man before had never seen, and which for its magnificence baffles all description.

Several double stars were seen with various apertures of the telescope, and with powers between 360 and 800; and, as the Earl had told us before we should,—before the speculum was inserted in the tube, in consequence of his having been obliged to quit the superintendence of the polishing at the most critical part of the process—we found that a ring of about six inches broad, reckoning from the circumference of the speculum, was not perfectly polished; and to that the little irradiation seen about Regulus was unquestionably referable.

The only double stars of the first class which the weather permitted us to examine with it were Xi Ursæ Majoris and Gamma Virginis; those I could have measured with the greatest confidence, whether however it would have separated some of the closest or of the most difficult double stars I cannot say.

D'Arrest's comet we observed on the 12th of March, with a power of 400, but nothing worthy of notice was detected.

Of the moon, a few words must suffice. Its appearance in my large achromatic, of 12 inches aperture, is known to hundreds of your readers; let them imagine that with it they look at the moon, whilst with Lord Rosse's 6 feet they look into it, and they will not form a very erroneous opinion of the performance of the Leviathan.

Thus, then, the difficulty of constructing a Newtonian Telescope of dimensions never before contemplated is completely overcome; but to render the part on which I am about to enter more generally intelligible, let me say, that the Newtonian Telescope is composed of a large concave speculum, of a small flat speculum, and of an eyeglass. The large concave speculum lies in the closed end of the tube at right angles to the tube's axis. The small flat speculum si placed near the open end of the tube in its centre, but at half right angles with the tube; whilst the eye-glass (a hole for the purpose being pierced in the tube's side) is fixed opposite the centre of the flat speculum. The rays from the object to which the telescope is directed fall on the large concave speculum, are reflected from it into a point called the focus, in which the image of the object is formed; this image falls on the flat speculum, and is reflected from it to the eye-glass, by which it becomes magnified, and enters the observer's eye. But only a part of the light which falls on the large concave speculum is reflected on the small speculum; and again only a part of that which falls from the large speculum on the small one is reflected from the latter to the eye-glass. Newton, to avoid this loss of light by the second reflection, proposed the substitution of a glass prism for the small flat speculum; but from some difficulties which have attended its use, it has (perhaps too hastily) been laid aside.

In 1728 Le Maire presented to the Academie des Sciences the plan of a reflecting telescope, in which the use of the small flat speculum was suppressed; for by giving the large concave speculum a little inclination he threw the image formed in its focus near to one side of the tube, where an eyeglass magnifying it, the observer viewed it, his back at the time being turned towards the object in the heavens;—thus the light lost in the Newtonian telescope by the second reflection was saved.—Vide Mach. Appr. par l'Acad., tom. vi., p. 61.

No one, however, seems to have availed himself of this form of construction till 1776, when Herschel, with a ten feet reflector, tried it and rejected it. In 1784 he again tried it with a 20-feet reflector, but again abandoned it. In 1786 he adopted it, eulogized it very much, amongst other advantages, for "giving almost double the light of the Newtonian construction," and called it "the front view." Subsequently to this period, all his 20-feet telescopes, as well as his 40-feet telescope, were constructed as Le Maireans.

The excess of light, however, is very much overrated by Sir W. Herschel; for experiments since made indicate that the diameter of the Newtonian telescope must be increased about one-fifth only to obtain equal light with one of the Le Mairean construction.

That we might have a practical proof of the advantages of the light of the Le Mairean construction, the 3 feet Newtonian of 27 feet focus which stands in the demesne by the side of the Leviathan was temporarily fitted up as a Le Mairean. Stars of the first magnitude were seen, not well defined as in the Newtonian form of the instrument, but the superiority of the Le Mairean, where a large quantity of light was required, was most decided. The small pole star was as bright as a star of the fourth magnitude when seen in a 5 feet achromatic of 3¾ inches aperture. The dumb-bell nebula, or 27 of Messier, was resolved into clusters of stars in a manner never before seen with it. The annular nebula of Lyra, brilliant beyond what it had ever yet appeared, was surrounded by stars too bright to escape immediate notice, although neither the dumb-bell nebula nor the annular nebula had more than 15 degrees of altitude when I placed the telescope on them.

On the 15th of March, when the moon was seven days and a-half old, I never saw her unillumined disc so beautifully nor her mountains so temptingly measureable. On my first looking into the telescope, a star of about the 7th magnitude was some minutes of a degree distant from the moon's dark limb. Seeing that its occultation by the moon was inevitable, as it was the first occultation which had been observed with that telescope, I was anxious that it should be observed by its noble maker; and very much do I regret that through kindness towards me he would not accede to my wish; for the star, instead of disappearing the moment the moon's edge came in contact with it, apparently glided on the moon's dark face, as if it had been seen through a transparent moon, or as if the star were between me and the moon. It remained on the moon's disc nearly two seconds of time, and then instantly disappeared, at 10h. 9m. 59.72s. sidereal time. I have seen this apparent projection of a star on the moon's face several times, but from the great brilliancy of the star this was the most beautiful I ever saw. The cause of this phenomenon is involved in impenetrable mystery.

The only telescopes, in point of size, comparable with Lord Rosse's 3 feet and 6 feet, are Sir William Herschel's 20 feet and 40 feet Le Mairean's. The 20 feet had a speculum of 18.8 inches diameter, and the 40 feet one of 4 feet.

The Le Mairean of 18.8 inches diameter in point of light is equal to a Newtonian of 22½ inches diameter.

The Le Mairean of 4 feet diameter is equal to a Newtonian of 57 inches and 4-tenths.

The Le Mairean of 3 feet is equal to a Newtonian of 43 inches.

And the Le Mairean of 6 feet is equal to a Newtonian of 86 inches.

By substituting then the Le Mairean form for the Newtonian, the present 3 feet Newtonian will be made as effective as if it were 43 inches diameter, and the 6 feet as if it were 86 inches in diameter; or the quantity of light in each telescope, after the alteration, will be, to its present light, as 7 to 5 nearly, or almost half as much again as it now has.

Seeing, then, that the change from the Newtonian to the Le Mairean construction will be attended with such an accession of light, Lord Rosse, having determined geometrically the form of the curve requisite to produce with it a definition of objects equal to that which each of the telescopes at present gives, is devising mechanical means for producing it; but, as he is in about a fortnight coming over to England to attend his Parliamentary duties, it is probable that this important desideratum will scarcely be effected till autumn comes upon us.

What will be the power of this telescope when it has its Le Mairean form it is not easy to divine;—what nebulæ will it resolve into stars; in what nebulæ will it not find stars;—how many satellites of Saturn will it show us;—how many will it indicate as appertaining to Uranus;—how many nebulæ never yet seen by mortal eye will it present to us;—what spots will it show us on the various planets;—will it tell us what causes the variable brightness of many of the fixed stars;—will it give us any information as to the constitution of the planetary nebulæ;—will it exhibit to us any satellites encircling them;—will it tell us why the satellites of Jupiter, which generally pass over Jupiter's face as discs nearly of white light, sometimes traverse it as black patches;—will it add to our knowledge of the physical construction of nebulous stars;—of that mysterious class of bodies which surround some stars, called, for want of a better name, "photospheres;"—will it show the annular nebula of Lyra merely as a brilliant luminous ring, or will it exhibit it as thousands of stars arranged in all the symmetry of an ellipse;—will it enable us to comprehend the hitherto incomprehensible nature and origin of the light of the great nebula of Orion; will it give us, in easily appreciable quantity, the parallax of some of the fixed stars, or will it make sensible to us the parallax of the nebulæ themselves; finally, having presented to us original portraits of the moon and of the sidereal heavens, such as man has never dared even to anticipate—will it, by Daguerreotypic aid, administer to us copies founded upon truth, and enable astronomers of future ages to compare the moon and heavens as they then may be, with the moon and heavens as they were? Some of these questions will be answered affirmatively, others negatively, and that, too, very shortly; for the noble maker of the noblest instrument ever formed by man "has cast his bread upon the waters, and will, with God's blessing, find it before many days."

Our Illustrations of the Monster Telescope have been engraved from a Treatise which has lately been published by Messrs. Sheilds, of Parsonstown, the same locality in which the Monster Telescope, and another instrument, of smaller proportions, have been erected.

This brief Treatise, then, in a most clear and satisfactory manner, gives a detailed account of all the processes connected with the construction of the instruments.* It is divided into two parts: the first treats of the experiments which were instituted by his Lordship in the manufacture of the smaller instrument which was erected previous to the Monster: the second part is devoted to the manufacture of the Speculum, six feet in diameter, and the machinery of the Monster Telescope itself. In the 71st No. of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, we gave an account of the manufacture of the specula, and a sketch of the smaller telescope; and as these are the subjects which chiefly occupy the first part, we will pass that over, merely observing that it is clearly and simply written; giving a great deal of information in a small space, and well deserving a careful perusal. It is illustrated by a view of the smaller telescope, and a lithograph of the machine used for grinding and polishing the specula. We present our readers with a copy of the latter.

MACHINE FOR GRINDING AND POLISHING THE SPECULA.

A is a shaft connected with a steam engine; B an excentric adjustable by a screw bolt to any given length from 0 to 18 inches; C a joint; D a guide; E F a cistern of water in which the speculum revolves; G another excentric adjustable like the first from 0 to 18 inches. The bar D G passes through a slit and therefore the pin at G necessarily turns on its axis at the same time as the excentric; H I is the speculum in its box, immersed in water to within an inch of its surface, and K L the polisher, which is of cast iron, and weighs about two hundred and a half; M is a disk of wood, connected with the polisher by strings hooked to it in six places, each two-thirds of the radius for its centre. At M there is a swivel and hook, to which a rope is attached, connecting the whole with the lever N, so that the polisher presses on the speculum with a force equal to the difference between its own weight and that of the counterpoise O.

Of the motions performed by this machine the author says:—

Instead of either the polisher or the speculum being stationary, both move with a regulated speed. The ring of the polisher, and therefore the polisher itself, has a transverse and a longitudinal motion; it makes 80 strokes in the minute, and 24½ strokes backward and forward for every revolution of the mirror, and at the same time 1 72-100 strokes in the transverse direction. The extent of the latter is 27-100 of the diameter of the speculum. The polisher has another motion independent of the ring, for at the turn of the excentric, being for a little time free, it is carried for a short distance round, lying on the speculum. In this way it makes one revolution for every fifteen of the mirror.

The second part of the work is descriptive of the "Monster" Telescope, which is engraved as the frontispiece.

The author says, in page 32:—

To describe the processes by which this six foot speculum was manufactured, would be repeating what we have already said of that three feet in diameter. The composition of the metal and the manipulation of the casting, grinding, polishing and annealing were the same, except of course on a larger scale, and the only alteration which took place was in consequence of its greater size.

So that for the several steps in the manufacture of the speculum we must again refer to our number of September, 1843. A ground plan of the foundry in which the casting took place is given, which we copy.

1 is the chimney; 2 2 2 the furnaces; 3 the crane for lifting the crucibles from the furnace to 4 4 4 the iron baskets; 5 the mould; and 6 the annealing oven. The first 6 foot speculum, which was 3 tons in weight, was cast on the 13th of April, 1842, at nine o'clock in the evening. Lord Rosse has since cast another, of the same diameter, and 4 tons in weight. He can now with perfect confidence undertake any casting, so great an improvement has the form of mould which he has invented proved.

The Engraving shows a view of the inside of the eastern wall, with all the machinery seen in section. A is the mason work in the ground; B the universal joint, which allows the tube to turn in all directions; C the speculum in its box; D the tube; E the eye-piece; F the moveable pulley; G the fixed one; H the chain from the side of the tube; I the chain from the beam; K the counterpoise; L the lever; M the chain connecting it with the tube; Z the chain which passes from the tube to the windlass over a pulley on a truss-beam, which runs from W to the same situation in the opposite wall—the pulley is not seen; X is a railroad on which the Speculum is drawn either to or from its box.—part is cut away to show the counterpoise. The dotted line, a, represents the course of the weight R as the tube rises or falls; it is a segment of a circle of which the chain I is the radius.

With a little attention to these several points, the working of the machinery, we think, will be easily comprehended. The weight on the lever L sinks only fifteen feet under the horizontal position; it then rests on the ground, and is, of course, no load on the tube, which is, when this happens, 30 degrees above the horizon. Below this point the tube is sufficiently heavy to descend when the windlass unrolls the chain. Then suppose the tube makes the angle of 30 degrees with the horizon, and that it is required to elevate it, the windlass is turned, and the chain being shortened, the desired effect is produced; but the labour of this would be immense, if the counterpoise K did not assist: this nearly balancing the tube, leaves but little exertion to be made at the windlass. However, the weight of the tube according as it ascends, is gradually becoming less and less, until it produces no strain at all on the windlass when it is quite upright. This must evidently be the case from the first principles of mechanics; for making the tube a lever, the length of its arm continually decreases as it approaches the perpendicular; therefore, if the counterpoise continued the same weight on the tube towards the end as it was in the commencement of the ascent, it would be too heavy, and would keep it in its perpendicular position. In fact, the counterpoise must become lighter as gradually and as evenly as the tube itself, in order to continue to be just the same support to it all through its movement. The plan adopted to effect this is beautifully simple: a weight hanging freely in a perpendicular direction, exerts its greatest force on the suspending point; if it be moved from the perpendicular, as much power as is required to effect this, is taken off from the same point; as will be evident to any person pushing aside a hanging body, he must supply a certain degree of force to keep it out of its perpendicular position; and this might be mathematically proved to amount to exactly the degree of weight that is taken off the point from which the body hangs. Now, it will easily be at once seen, how, when the tube is ascending and loosing its weight, also lengthening the chain H, that on account of the chain I, whose length is always constant, the counterpoise K is moving from the perpendicular position under G, and, therefore, loosing its power on the tube, and approaching the perpendicular under W, and for this reason, transferring all its weight to the fixed chain I: when the tube passes the perpendicular, the chain H is again shortened, and the counterpoise begins once more to draw it back, so that the action of this tends to keep the tube always upright to whatever side it may point, and its power is always equal to the varying weight. Under these circumstances we see how easily and evenly the windlass can elevate the Telescope, and turn it to the north; but when it arrives there it must be brought back again; and this is accomplished by the lever L. As we have seen that the action of the tube and counterpoise is so regulated, that in all positions the weights, although always changing, are equal to one another, so must the weight of the lever vary with its position in order to be a perfect balance on the tube; and this it evidently does. We said that when the tube was perpendicular, the weight on the lever is most effective; for it is at the farthest distance it can be from the support; it, therefore, pulls down the tube when the windlass is unrolled; but we saw that the tube as it descends increases its weight; so that if the lever continued acting with the same power with which it commenced, the weight of both would be constantly increasing; this is prevented by the lever loosing its force as it falls; for the weight thereby, of course, approaches the support, and cannot be so active: but the approach to the support by its descent is so regulated to the increasing distance of the end of the tube in its descent by the chain M, that in the same degree as the latter gains weight the former looses it; and in this manner there is a constant equilibrium kept up between them. When the tube reaches within thirty degrees of the horizon the lever rests on the ground, and the tube is thence able to descend by its own weight. When the tube points to the north, the lever is elevated above the horizon, and has not, of course, so much power as when it coincided with it; but it is in this case helped by the counterpoise K, which always tends to bring the tube to the perpendicular. This continues to help it until it becomes itself sufficiently able, from its horizontal position, to do all the work; it then commences opposing it; but it now has the help of the increasing weight of the tube itself and so all the parts are elegantly blended into one another with the most perfect concord and efficiency.

The unavoidable length of the last quotation prevents us entering fully into the manner in which the tube is moved from wall to wall; it is accomplished, however, by the ratchet and wheel at R, in the above cut; the wheel is turned by the handle O, and the ratchet is fixed to the circle on the wall. The ladders in front, as shown in the large sketch, enable the observer to follow the tube in its ascent to where the galleries on the side wall commence; these side galleries are three in number, and each can be moved from wall to wall by the observer, after the tube, the motion of which he also accomplishes by means of the handle O. We can do no more than just notice these parts of the machinery, referring to the book itself for more ample details.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

VISITORS TO LONDON.—Gentlemen (or Gentlemen and their Wives not requiring a private Sitting Room) can be accommodated with entire or partial Board and Lodging, with the use of Dining and Drawing Rooms, in a respectable private family near Charing Cross.—For Address, apply by letter (free) to B. Z., 135, Strand.

CADETS and ASSISTANT SURGEONS.—Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co. have prepared the most complete and detailed SCALES of EQUIPMENTS for CADETS and ASSISTANT SURGEONS, comprising efficiency with the utmost economy, and showing at one view the total expense of an equipment for India, including the passage, and every other expense.—Apply at 16, Cornhill, or 8, St. Martin's-place, Charing-cross

LEGHORNS, MILLINERY, and STRAW BONNETS.—BRIGHT'S, 12, LUDGATE-STREET, (two doors above Everington's.) M. BRIGHT begs to announce her return from Paris, supplied with every novelty. Beautifully fine Leghorns, 20s.; Fashionable Millinery Bonnets, 21s.; Fancy Straws an immense variety, Dunstable Straws of every kind. Children's Bonnets, Leghorn, Tuscan, and Straw Hats of every size. The largest assortment in London, all bearing a fixed ready money price, at the lowest scale of profit.

DAVIES'S FINE WAX-WICK MOULDS, 6d. per lb. Candles, 5d.; Botanic Wax, 1s.; German 1s. 2d.; Fine Wax, 1s. 5d.; Sperm, 1s. 10d.. Transparent Wax, 1s. 10d.; Genuine Wax, 2s.; Price's Composite, 8½d. and 10d.; Hale's ditto, 9½d; Yellow Soap, 46s., 52s. and 58s. per 112lbs.; Mottled 60s and 64s; Windsor, 1s. 4d. per packet; Brown Windsor, 1s. 9d.; Rose, 2s.; Almond, 2s. 6d. Sealing Wax, 4s. 6d. per lb. Ogleby's Patent Oil, 4s. 6d. per gallon; Solar, 3s. 6d.; Sperm, 7s. 6d. For Cash, at DAVIES'S Old-Established Warehouse, 63, St. Martin's-lane, opposite Slaughter's Coffee-house

A CARD.—Gratis.—GOVERNESSES (daily, weekly, or resident), COMPANIONS to LADIES, and HIGHLY RESPECTABLE HOUSEKEEPERS.—The Nobility and Private Families in want of the above, are respectfully invited to inspect Mr. BULGIN'S REGISTER, free from any charge; and their attention is the more particularly requested, as the Office is established with a view of usefulness. Governesses and Companions to Ladies can receive prospectuses, upon application.
No commission upon Salaries.—221, Regent-street.

THE MODISTES OF PARIS did not display their elegances for the Season, until the Monday following Long-Champs; DISON being in Paris at that exact time, had the advantage of culling, day by day, the choicest Novelties, as they were produced, from the most celebrated Ateliers, of the Rue Vivienne, Rue Richelieu, &c They are now arrived, and will be ready for the inspection of Ladies, on Monday, the 21st instant. The ensemble will be found to embrace all that is elegant and new, in Mantles, Capes, Canezous, Chemisettes, Cuffs, Sleeves, Cambric Handkerchiefs; Violettes black and white; Laces of all kinds, real and rare Imitations; to which an early attention is necessary to secure a good choice at DISON'S, (Her Majesty's Lace-man), 237, Regent street.

POUR RENDRE LA PEAU BLANCHE, patronised by her Majesty and the Royal Family.—MEEN FUN, or the Celestial Skin Powder, a truly wonderful cosmetic, which has for centuries been in constant use among the Chinese, possessing properties of a character unparalleled. Its application entirely counteracts those disagreeable appearances to which delicate skins are subject, more especially at this season of the year; it allays and averts discoloration and coarseness, at the same time rendering the skin beautifully white, smooth, and soft. The component parts are so perfectly harmless and simple in themselves, that those with the most delicate complexions may apply it with safety. Sold retail by all Perfumers and Chemists, in boxes, price 3s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. each; and wholesale, by the sole Proprietors, FABIAN and Co. (late Watson, Fabian, and Co.), 24, Mark-lane London, without whose signature on the labels none are genuine.

RESTORATION and ENLARGEMENT of ST. DUNSTAN'S, STEPNEY.—This Church, among the oldest in the Kingdom, tracing its origin beyond the days of the Saxon Saint Dunstan, is the mother of nine of the largest parishes in the Tower Hamlets, containing in the aggregate a population of 250,000 souls: it is also the only provision under the Establishment for upwards of 20,000: while around it, large and splendid Temples to the service of God have arisen, off-shoots of its own—it has itself been left in a state of neglect and dilapidation. It is proposed to Restore and Enlarge it; and for this purpose, more than £3000 will be required. The population is chiefly poor, and cannot raise the sum, for which reason this appeal is made to the Public. Subscriptions will be received by WM. COTTON, Esq., at the Bank of England; or by ALFRED HEAD and WM. HAWKINS, Esqrs., Mile-end, Stepney.

NEW PATENT CARRIAGE—the CURRICLE TRIBUS.—This elegant and useful vehicle offers advantages never before combined—convenient seats for three persons, an open or close carriage at pleasure, and so extremely light in draught, that even a slight horse will work well in it. The shafts are made to shift with ease, to give place to a pole, when it becomes an elegant Curricle for a pair of horses. The body hangs low, particularly safe, and the coachman's seat is so placed as to give him command of the reins, and enable him, at the same time, to open and shut the door. Those who seek a comfortable and elegant Carriage, with an eye to economy, and particularly in horseflesh, ought to see the Curricle Tribus. The Patentee respectfully solicits the Nobility, Members of Parliament, Professional and Country Gentlemen, to inspect his Carriage, the only one at present finished, at the Bazaar, Baker-street, Portman-square

FRENCH LACES, 85, Oxford-street.—W. BAUER, having just Returned from the Continent, invites the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, to an Inspection of his Novelties, recently imported. They consist of an assortment of above 1500 Pieces of Lille, Mechlin, Valenciennes, Point de Paris, and his so justly and much-admired Point de Geneva, which latter got the preference over Brussels Point, and being only one-fourth of the expense. 500 pieces of Black Wire and Point Ground Laces, from 3d. to 30s. per yard; a great Variety of the newest shapes and materials, in Berthes, Pelerines, Capes, Canezous, Collars, Sleeves, &c.; as also an endless assortment of Muslin Embroidered Goods, French Cambric Handkerchiefs. The whole will be offered at fair and reasonable prices. Milliners and Dressmakers supplied at wholesale prices.—Observe, 85, Oxford-street, opposite to Messrs. Oxenham's Auction Rooms.—P.S. A few black real Chantilly and Lace Dresses, Scarfs, and Spanish Mantillas, not to be matched in England, to be sold cheap.—WANTED, two experienced SALESWOMEN: they must be well acquainted with the lace trade.

PATENT BELMONT MOULDS, 6½d. per Pound, of a dark colour, but burning without snuffing, as well as the finest wax or sperm. PATENT BELMONT WAX and SPERM, 1s. per pound, expected to be within a short time the only candles used by the upper classes. PATENT BELMONT COMPOSITES, 10d. per pound. PATENT BELMONT SPERM OIL, purer than the finest animal sperm, 4s. per gallon. Any or all of these, as also the Price's Patent Candles, and the Vauxhall Composite Candles may be ordered through any dealer in town or country, and are supplied wholesale to the trade in London, by Edward Price & Co., Belmont, Vauxhall; Palmer & Co., Sutton-street, Clerkenwell; and Wm. Marchant, 253, Regent Circus, Oxford-street: in Manchester, by Richardson & Roebuck, Market Place: in Bath, by T & G. Butcher, No. 4, Saw Close: and in Cheltenham, by Mathews & Co., 400 High-street, and in Salisbury, by C. Stokes and Son. Parties wishing to try any of these articles, but finding difficulty in obtaining them, are requested to write to EDWARD PRICE and Co., Belmont, Vauxhall, who will then send the address of a dealer whom they know to keep the Candles and Oil, or should there be no such dealer in the neighbourhood, will take other measures to furnish samples.

WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty.—W. and Son's establishment for the manufacture of watches and clocks is the oldest in London, having continued in Cornhill 134 years. An extensive stock for selection, finished with the utmost care, at the lowest prices consistent with security for the finest manufacture and the maintenance of that reputation for superior workmanship which has distinguished their house for so many years. Compensated duplex and lever watches, to counteract the variations of temperature, upon the principle of their chronometers, to which Government awarded the prizes three years in succession; small elegant lever and horizontal watches in gold cases, engraved or engine-turned for ladies or gentlemen; small flat silver detached lever and horizontal watches, for youths, at very moderate prices; marine and pocket chronometers, new and second-hand; ornamental and every description of clocks; regulators upon the most approved principles. Superior workmen are employed upon the premises in the repairing department for English and foreign work. The utmost value allowed for old watches in exchange.—WEBSTER and SON'S Publication, with their Equation Table for the Present Year, will be sent free on the receipt of two postage stamps.—74, Cornhill.

SILVER SUPERSEDED, and those corrosive and injurious Metals, called Nickel and German Silver, supplanted by the introduction of a new and perfectly matchless ALBATA PLATE.—C. WATSON, 41 and 42, BARBICAN, and 16, NORTON FOLGATE, aided by a person of science in the amalgamation of Metals, has succeeded in bringing to public notice the most beautiful article ever yet offered; possessing all the richness of Silver in appearance, with all its durability and hardness—with its perfect sweetness in use, undergoing, as it does, a chemical process, by which all that is nauseous in mixed metals is entirely extracted—resisting all acids—may be cleaned as silver, and is manufactured into every article for the Table and Sideboard.

C. WATSON begs the Public will understand that this Metal is peculiarly his own, and that Silver is not more different from Gold than his metal is from all others: on its intrinsic merits alone he wishes it to be tested—and, from the daily-increasing eulogiums he receives, he is convinced that nothing can prevent its becoming an article of universal wear.

C. WATSON'S handsomely ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE and PRICE CURRENT, is just published, and families who regard economy and elegance, should possess themselves of this useful book, which may be had Gratis and Post-free from the above Address.

GREAT NOVELTY IN PERIODICAL LITERATURE.
On the First of May next,

THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE
WILL BE ISSUED AS
A BOUND VOLUME,
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

The issuing of a Magazine in bound volumes monthly, will remove the great objection to periodical publications when sent out in paper covers. They are always unsightly, are frequently lost by being scattered about, and give an appearance of carelessness and neglect to the drawing-room, or library table, where neatness and elegance of arrangement are so desirable.
The plan on which the New Series of the ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE will be issued will obviate these objections; it will furnish every month, to the book-case or library,
A HANDSOME BOUND VOLUME,
(PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE)
in small 8vo., which will be enriched with the best ARTISTIC and LITERARY talent of the day VOLUME IV. of the OLD SERIES, containing the last Six Months' Parts, is Now Ready handsomely bound in cloth, gilt. ANOTHER REMARKABLE CURE OF ASTHMA BY DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS.—Mrs. Willing, 71, Redcross-street, Southwark, has had an Asthma for 14 years; nothing ever gave her relief until she took Dr. Locock's Wafers, four boxes of which have all but cured her. Nov. 5, 1844.
Dr. Locock's Wafers give instant relief and a rapid cure of asthma, coughs, and all disorders of the breath and lungs. To singers and public speakers they are invaluable for clearing and strengthening the voice; they have a most pleasant taste. Price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11s. per box. Agents—Da Silva and Co., 1, Bride-lane, Fleet-street, London: sold by all medicine venders.

THE CHESTER INFIRMARY and HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—A short time since William Bullock, a bricklayer, was in the Chester Infirmary for nine weeks, for an ulcerated leg of very long standing, where he derived not the least relief. He was also for seven weeks under the care of Mr. Alexander Webber, surgeon, at Wellington, Somersetshire, without receiving any benefit. When all other means had failed, he cured himself by these wonderful medicines, which he purchased of Mr. J. H. Clarke, chemist, of Birkenhead, who can attest the facts of the case. However desperate wounds, sores, or ulcers may be, these Pills and Ointment will cure them. Sold at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand, where advice may be had gratis, and by almost all respectable Vendors of Medicines throughout the civilized world.

COD LIVER OIL.—This natural Remedy, and certain Cure for GOUT, RHEUMATISM, SCROFULA, &c. &c., is, without exception, one of the most valuable discoveries of the present age; it is prepared, by a peculiar process, from the liver of the cod fish, and its efficacy in curing the above complaints, when all other remedies have failed, is attested by the highest medical authorities: so many cases of complete cure have now been published, and so many are daily occurring, that they are now considered as the result of every day practice. Prospectuses, containing a few only of the most remarkable Cures effected, are given with each genuine bottle of this remedy, and bear the signature of the only mercantile agents, JONES and Co., 201, Strand. Sold by all Medicine Vendors, in bottles, at 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.
Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844.

WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz.:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing. The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means. From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.
This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other Utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.
 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.
Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular in asking for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

IMPORTANT AND LABOUR-SAVING DISCOVERY.

SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, for cleaning Gold and Silver Plate, Jewellery, Silver Plated Goods, &c., &c.—The following Letter, from Dr. URE the eminent Chemist, at once establishes the usefulness of this new discovery:—
"I have examined the preparation invented by Messrs. JONES, for cleaning silver, called SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, and find it to be safe, effectual, and instantaneous in its operation. Being founded on chemical principles, it merely removes the tarnish on plate, and restores the white silver lustre without abrading or wearing the precious metal itself in the slightest degree. ANDREW URE, M.D., F.R.S., &c.
Professor of Chemistry and Analytical Chemist
London, 13, Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, March 8th 1845.
It is of little consequence whether the article to be cleaned has been laid by for days or years whether it be only one ounce or tarnished as black as a hat, immediately on the application of the SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM the discoloration is removed, and then, with a soft and clean washleather, a most brilliant and virgin white polish may be produced. In chased silver the deepest nook and corner, where dirt and corrosion are so difficult to remove, become equally polished with the level surface by simply using a soft plate brush. The manner of using it is so simple that a child may in a few seconds produce a polish which in the ordinary way could not be given by an experienced plate cleaner in as many hours.
Sold in Half Pint, Pint, and Quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s.; and Sample Bottles at 9d. each, by all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Ironmongers.—CAUTION.—Every genuine bottle of this compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, JONES and Co., Light-House, 201, Strand, London.

SMALL FARM or COTTAGE RESIDENCE—WANTED to RENT or PURCHASE, near the Brighton or Dover Railway, and within about 30 miles from London.—Address, A. Z, Messrs. Waterlow, Birchin-lane, London.

EVERY ARTICLE IN BABY-LINEN and Ladies' Underclothing charged much below the usual prices at R WILLIAMS' Lace, Muslin, Embroidery, Baby-linen, Hosiery, and Outfitting Warehouse, 57, Mortimer-street, Cavendish-sq.

INVALIDS' and CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES.—Children's Chaises, Vis-a-vis Waggons, Phaetons, Barouches, &c. &c., from Ten Shillings to Twenty Guineas. Invalids' Wheel Chairs, from £3 to £35, with hoods. Second-hand, as well as new. Spinal and Self-acting Chairs. Immense and varied collections on sale or hire.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers or any other house.—Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a 2d. stamp.

GINGER WINE, 16s. per Dozen.—This article will be found very superior to the British Wines usually sold. Good strong CONGOU, 3s. 6d.; very strong do., 4s. Good Ceylon COFFEE, 1s. 4d.; Jamaica, 1s. 8d.; Costa Rica, 1s. 10d.; choice old Mocha, 2s. Every other article at equally low prices, at HOBSON'S Grocery and Italian Warehouse, 6, Connaught-terrace, Edgeware-road.

PEOPLE mindful of Economy, will do well to observe that the EAST INDIA TEA COMPANY are supplying Six Pounds of either Black or Green Tea for 17s Six Pounds of Coffee for 5s.; and other descriptions of Teas and Coffees at prices in proportion to their respective qualities.—Offices, No. 9, Great St. Helen's Church-yard, Bishopsgate.

THE MINARET PARASOL, from the elegance and symmetry of its form, is by far the most beautiful yet introduced. The price does not exceed that of ordinary parasols, although a very graceful improvement has been effected in its construction. The attention and patronage of the public is requested to this elegant novelty, which can be had at any of the respectable drapers, &c.; and wholesale at all the wholesale dealers. OBSERVE—The silver runner is stamped with the word "Minaret."

BETTS'S PATENT BRANDY, CAPSULED, sold at 3s. 6d., bottle included, by the most respectable dealers in town and country. Lists obtained at the Distillery, where quantities of Two Gallons and above, are supplied, in bulk, at 18s. per gallon, and bottled, bottles and cases included, at 20s. Attention is especially requested to the security afforded by the Patent Metallic Capsules, embossed "Betts's Patent Brandy, 7 Smithfield-bars"

THOSE who know the taste of, and are desirous of using in all its native freshness and purity, Old MOCHA COFFEE, can procure it at Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard, where the rarest and very best, which, like good old port wine, has become, from its age, mellow in ripeness and richness of flavour, is sold by DAKIN and Co., Tea Merchants, whose vans will deliver this choice Coffee within eight miles of Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard.

DURANT, M.A., assisted by German and Italian Masters, and a Graduate of Oxford, continues to attend Families and Schools, and receive Classes and Private Pupils (Terms moderate) for the French, German, Italian, Spanish, Greek, Latin, and English Languages. Evening Tuition.—122, Regent-street.

CERDOE'S LIGHT WATERPROOF FROCKS, FOR SPRING AND SUMMER.—These well-known and gentlemanly garments will be found most agreeable substitutes for any other outside coat They are made in the best manner, and are thoroughly respectable—equally free from vulgarity and singularity; are guaranteed (without confining perspiration) to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A Large Stock of First-rate Garments, in new and greatly-improved materials (manufactured expressly for W. B.) now ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited.—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill (north side).

COUGHS, COLDS, and CATARRHS, Effectually CURED by KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.—The value of these Lozenges (which are under the patronage of Royalty, Nobility, and Clergy) admits of no possible question, both on account of the numerous orders constantly received, and the most various and respectable testimonials gratuitously forwarded. Thirty years' experience has fully proved their great utility, not only in ordinary cases of cough and cold, but in various kinds of asthmatic and consumptive complaints, whether constitutional or otherwise. They possess, also, the very desirable recommendations that they produce no inconvenience, require no precaution, and effect a cure of these maladies in an incredibly short space of time.—Prepared and sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d.; and tins, 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 10s. 6d. each, by THOMAS KEATING, chemist, &c., No. 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London; and by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the Kingdom.

NEW ENVELOPE.—In consequence of the great variety of Counterfeit Envelopes of ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, and other disreputable means resorted to by unprincipled individuals for imposing on the public their highly pernicious compounds under the title of "KALYDOR," the Proprietors and sole Preparers of the Original and Genuine Preparation, acting under a sense of duty, and regardless of expense in the attainment of their object the protection of the Public from Fraud and Imposition have employed those celebrated artists, Messrs. Perkins, Bacon and Co., who have succeeded, at great cost, in producing from a steel plate a New Envelope of exquisite beauty. It comprises a highly-finished engraving of the Grecian Graces standing on a classic pedestal, on each side of which is a rich profusion of flowers springing from an elegant cornucopia: these tastefully blending with Arabesque scrolls and wreaths, encircle the Royal Arms of Great Britain, surmounting the words, "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," &c., &c, whilst a plinth at the foot displays the Signature of the Proprietors, in red, thus—

GREAT MEETING OF THE LADIES' INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION, NEW YORK.

GREAT MEETING OF THE FEMALE INDUSTRY ASSOCIATION, NEW YORK.

The female industrial classes of New York have lately met in vast numbers; and, according to the New York Herald, whatever may be the ultimate effect of these assemblages, "there can be no doubt that their condition is one which very urgently demands the attentive consideration of the community. The condition of these females, in this city, is very rapidly approaching that state of abject wretchedness which prevails in London and some of the other large cities of Europe. The rate of wages is constantly decreasing, and immense numbers of these females are unable to earn, even by a daily amount of labour ruinous to health, a sum sufficient to maintain a comfortable existence. Many of them cannot, by the most unremitting toil, earn more than one dollar and a half per week, and immense numbers earn but two dollars. It is certainly very painful to contemplate such a state of things."

The Engraving shows one of these great gatherings on the afternoon of the 6th ult.,—a mass meeting of the Young Women's Industry Association, in the Supreme Court-room, City Hall.

At four o'clock, according to notice, about one thousand working ladies, attached to the different trades, assembled here, for the purpose of remonstrating against the injustice heaped upon them by their employers. On the motion of Mrs. Eliza Hone, Miss Elizabeth Gray was called to the chair, and made a touching appeal to her sex, respecting the oppression of the southern employers, whose agents in New York had hardly paid them sufficient for bare subsistence, having had to work at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars per week. She said the time had arrived for the working women of all trades to strike for their rights, and teach their oppressors that, though women, they could show that spirit which became the daughters of the patriots of '76.

On the motion of Miss Susan Hoffman, it was

Resolved, That a member attached to each trade should get a list of their employers who refuse to pay them the scale of prices set down by the association, and present the same at the next meeting.

Miss Henrietta Adams offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That any labouring young woman who shall go to work for a boss who has refused to pay the prices, shall not be deemed a fit member of the association, and that we will not work with her hereafter in any establishment.

A number of delegates from the following trades entered their names to act as a Committee to regulate future proceedings:—tailoresses, plain and coarse-sewing, shirt-makers, book-folders and stitchers, cap-makers, straw-workers, dress-makers, crimpers, fringe, and lace-makers, &c.

Other resolutions were also agreed to.

The Court in which the meeting was held, is a superbly-decorated Hall, with a white coved ceiling, having in its centre a handsome rosette; the supporting fluted pilasters and rich composite cornice are very handsome; the drapery behind the seat of the president, or chairwoman, is of dark crimson and bright gold stars; and the ceiling of the alcove is decorated with gold rays and clouds on a dark blue ground.

NEW CONVENT AT CHELSEA.

NEW CONVENT AT CHELSEA.

A Convent of the Order of St. Joseph, with convenient schools attached, represented in our engraving, have recently been erected in Cadogan-street, Chelsea. The bounteous founder is Mr. Knight, the eminent botanist, of King's-road, who purchased the property, at a cost of nearly £5000, and built the convent and schools entirely at his own expense. The design consists of a centre and two wings, or a convent for the religious persons, and separate schools for the boys and girls, with a small chapel attached, for the use of the establishment; the whole fronted by a wall, in which are four entrances. The edifice has its roof and gables characteristically surmounted with the cross.

The establishment was opened with great ceremony, about a fortnight since; when, the Hon. Edward Petre, and other gentlemen of rank and influence, accompanied by a large number of ladies of distinction, took a foremost part in the proceedings. The children went in procession from the Catholic Chapel in Cadogan-terrace, accompanied by several clergymen, and the other parties above-mentioned, and, on their arrival, the children were formally introduced to their ew preceptors, consisting of five nuns from the Convent of Mercy at Bermondsey, and several monks from some of the Catholic colleges in the north of England, of the Trappist order, celebrated for their learning, devotedness to the instruction of youth, and piety. Mr. Petre addressed the assembly at great length, and commented on the charity of the founder; and, after some further proceedings, the company separated.

CATHOLIC MEETING IN FAVOUR OF THE GRANT TO MAYNOOTH.

On Tuesday, a large assembly of English members of the Roman Catholic Church was convened at Freemasons' Tavern, at the instance of the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, the Earl of Shrewsbury, Lord Camoys, Lord Beaumont, Lord Stourton, Lord Petre, Lord Stafford, the Hon. Charles Langdale, the Hon. Edward Petre, the Hon. H. V. Stafford Jerningham, and J. Towneley, Esq., M.P. The Earl of Arundel and Surrey was in the chair, and the resolutions were severally moved and seconded by Lord Camoys, the Rev. Mr. Sisk, Lord Beaumont, the Hon. Edward Petre, Lord Edward Howard, the Hon. Charles Clifford, the Hon. Charles Langdale, the Hon. H. V. Stafford Jerningham, Mr. Sergeant Shee, Mr. C. Towneley, Mr. P. Howard, M.P., and Mr. W. Jones. The object of the meeting was to express its approval of the measures introduced by her Majesty's Ministers, and in this sense the various speeches and resolutions were conceived. With the exception of one or two asperities, the proceedings were marked by great temper and moderation. Petitions to both Houses of Parliament were agreed to, "acknowledging with gratitude the progress already made in the bill, and most earnestly praying that it might be passed."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—"H. J.," Hamilton-terrace.—The game should be drawn. White's best play is Kt to K's sq., upon which, Black King must be moved to his 7th, (any other move losing the game) then the Kt may be played to Q's 3rd, and Black should follow with K to his 6th, drawing easily.

"Caro."—The King may have been checked a hundred times, and still retain the privilege of castling, provided he has not been moved.

"J. F. R."—The account of the electric game in Bell's Life in London is incorrect in many particulars. No match as a friendly trial of skill was made, or thought of, and no game, properly speaking, was won by either party. A private game on Wednesday was attempted for the purpose of familiarising the persons employed at the telegraph with the chess notation to be adopted on Thursday, but owing to some mistakes in the moves trans mitted the game became inextricably entangled, and was left unfinished.

"Alfin."—The players in "the game of chess by telegraph" were Captain Kennedy and Mr. Staunton against Messrs. Buckle, Perigal, Tuckett, Walker, and Captain Evans.

"H. A.," Winchester.—Mr. Tuckett and Captain Kennedy are of the same force. Their relative strength with the two players named is best shown by mentioning the odds they receive—viz.: from Mr. Walker the P and move, and from Mr. Staunton the P and two moves. They are both highly efficient members of the celebrated St. George's Chess Club.

"H. S. F.," Cambridge.—The work mentioned is very serviceable to beginners at chess.

"Londonensis."—The laws of chess, as revised by a committee of the London Chess Club in 1843, will be found in the "Chess Player's Chronicle." See also the last edition of Lewis's "First Series of Lessons in Chess."

THE GAME OF CHESS BY TELEGRAPH.

In the hurried report of this interesting experiment, which we gave last week, there were two or three inaccuracies, which we take the earliest opportunity to correct. The game was not, as we supposed, conducted by Messrs. Staunton and Kennedy at one end of the Telegraphic line, against Messrs. Walker and Tuckett at the other, but by the two former gentlemen opposed to five or six of the finest players in the kingdom, amongst whom Mr. Buckle, Mr. Perigal, and Captain Evans, shone conspicuously. The contest lasted eight, not nine hours, and would have terminated much earlier but for the great delay occasioned by telegraphing the moves from Gosport to Southampton, as well as to London. In one instance, when the game had reached about the 12th move, a pause of nearly twenty minutes took place in its progress, while some amateurs of chess at Southampton were made acquainted with the moves already made up to that point. With the exception of the interruptions this double duty gave rise to, everything went smoothly enough; not a single error in the transmission of the moves occurred during the whole day, and messages and notes were freely interchanged between the opposing parties with the same facility as if they had been domiciled together, instead of being nearly one hundred miles apart. The accuracy indeed with which these intercommunications were made was absolutely marvellous. Absorbed by interest in the game, we had ourselves overstayed the hour at which the last train starts, and should have been subjected to very serious inconvenience, but that while bodily present in the station at Gosport, we were enabled, at five minutes warning, to despatch an emissary from the Vauxhall Terminus to a distant part of London!

One of the most gratifying circumstances connected with the day was the perfect unanimity which prevailed among all classes connected either with the Railway or the Telegraph, in their endeavours to accommodate the visitors whom this novel sight had brought together. At the Nine Elms Terminus a noble room was thrown open for the reception of the ladies and gentlemen present, and refreshments of every description had been considerately provided by the Directors. Nothing indeed was wanting which could add to the comfort and satisfaction of the assemblage. We must not omit to add our warmest acknowledgments of the courteous attention we experienced at Gosport from Mr. Hoffmeister, and his friends of the Portsmouth Chess Club; and from Mr. Watkins, the Superintendent of the Telegraph Room.

ANNIVERSARY DINNER OF THE LONDON CHESS CLUB.

The dinner annually given by the members of this celebrated Chess Club, to commemorate its establishment in 1807, is appointed for this evening, Saturday, the 19th. We have made arrangements which will enable us to give a copious report of the meeting in our next number.

THE TOILS OF PARLIAMENT.

THERE is an old ballad that opens with an appeal to the "Gentlemen of England," who "live at home at ease;" we question if such an invocation could be made now, with anything like applicability: the "gentlemen of England" are beginning to be the most hard-toiling of mortals; and it is to Members of Parliament we must apply the designation of "the labouring classes."

There are loud and frequent complaints in the vicinity of St. Stephen's of the amount of business thrown on the shoulders, or, rather, the heads, of Hon. Members. It gives a dignity to a man, certainly, to know that in all the business of mankind—the quicquid agunt homines—he has a voice potential, and that a fleet cannot sail, or a piece of bog-land be drained, without his consent. But dignities must be paid for in some shape or other. The most worthless are those bought with money; the most creditable, those earned by toil. The last is now the price paid for the honour of a sequent M.P. to your name.

The manner of life led by an industrious and conscientious Member of Parliament—supposing him a good Ministerialist, and bound to watch for divisions, if not to join debates, and to give his vote, if not his speech—is something of this kind. He is down, of course, for a Railway Committee, and takes his seat at the table, in a very small and very crowded room, with an atmosphere closely resembling that of the Black Hole of Calcutta, at about eleven of the forenoon, to listen, with his brothers in misfortune, to counsel learned in the law of railways in general, and as it applies to that line in particular, till four o'clock in the afternoon, when the announcement that the "Speaker is at prayers" closes the business, and all are released for the day, except the unhappy member. He proceeds to the House, and takes his seat again to listen to others who may or may not be learned, as it happens, but who have a power of talk perfectly legal, and used as copiously as if they were paid for it. The evening begins to grow into night, and he ventures into the side gallery, converts his hat into a pillow, stretches himself on the bench like a stone Crusader on a monument, and the impressions of the day and night become first blended together, so that he sees a bevy of Maynooth professors working as railway navigators, and then all is for a short space oblivion—a dull, humming sound, as monotonous as the fall of distant waters, alone excepted; and which he knows, by a sort of instinct that does not tax any reasoning faculty, is the voice of the gentleman "in possession of the House." Night has tapered off into the small hours, and the small hours again are beginning to swell into large ones, and he is awakened by the tumultuous cheers amid which the Premier has just resumed his seat, rubs his eyes and rushes down stairs to vote, or he is roused by some friendly hand, and told that the debate is adjourned, and he may depart in peace. Thus runs the world away for that twenty-four hours; and he begins the next by hurrying the matutinal shave at the risk of unintentional suicide; compressing breakfast into a kind of phantom or ghost of that most pleasant of meals, when there is the due time and material; does not even look at the paper—for the fifteen columns of debate are appalling; and again enters that cave of despair—the Committee-room, to live the life of yesterday over again, and to dispose of part of one of the sixty-nine speeches on the twenty-three bills that he has to decide upon—such being the calculation of Mr. Thomas Duncombe, in his touching description of the legislative travaux forcés to which the necessities of society condemn those who represent it. At last he finds how use doth breed a habit in a man—becomes resigned, if not contented; and, knowing there is no escape, at last ceases to hope for it :—

> From to-day, and from to-night,
> Expecting nothing more
> Than yesterday and yester night
> Have yielded him before.

But, speaking seriously of what is beginning to be a great evil, the business of which Parliament has to dispose is outgrowing the powers of that assembly; the machinery is unequal to the task imposed on it. It is no fault of the members of that body, for it may be said to their credit, that during the session very little time is lost, and in the present one the application to business has been exemplary. The time occupied by the sittings of the House has been gradually and steadily increasing for some years. It must be in the recollection of many that the House of Commons once—like the Peers at present—rarely did anything of a Wednesday: from necessity it was gradually invaded, and for years there has been no distinction between that and any other day. Saturday was always regarded as a blank day, but recent sessions have appropriated that also. Four o'clock was uniformly considered the only possible hour of meeting; since the dynasty of railway companies commenced, the Speaker has frequently been compelled to take the chair at twelve. The days have been shortened by early beginnings; the nights have been lengthened by protracted sittings; everything has been done short of "adding Sunday to the week," and to that apparently we shall come at last; and yet the physical and mental energies of the members cannot get through more than a certain amount of work; and much is daily falling into arrear; much is wholly neglected and pushed aside; and much also, to the still greater injury of public interests, is carelessly, because hastily, done, the defects of a law only being discovered by its bad operation.

This "press of business" arises from natural and inevitable causes; a vast empire with a trade and commerce daily increasing, with colonies and settlements of themselves large enough to form many kingdoms, is all virtually governed by a limited number of gentlemen sitting nightly for one-half the year in a shabby-looking apartment at Westminster. There every question comes, from the policy of India and the deposition of a Governor-General, to a Bill for making a road from some spot nobody ever saw to some other no one ever heard of, or an Act empowering some unfortunate husband to seek a better wife in a second than he found in a first. Enterprise is ever active, and new projects and schemes seeking the sanction of Parliament crowd the table with Bills; but most of all the present embarrassment has arisen from the enormous amount of business arising from projected railroads.

There is no chance of this torrent ceasing; we are rather in the infancy of the railway system than its maturity; the world in all other respects will go on requiring government, and society will still need new laws or changes in old ones, all requiring time and discussion to bring into action. Parliament is limited in number, that number can do no more than is to be expected by ordinary mortals. What then is the remedy for a daily increasing evil?

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAM-SHIP, ON TUESDAY LAST.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

The time has evidently arrived when Parliament must delegate some of its inferior functions to other bodies, retaining a controlling or confirming power over them. The forms of the government that sufficed amply for the England of a century and a half ago are wholly unequal to the requirements of the England of to day, and Parliament might relieve itself of much irksome business with advantage to itself and the public. Why the merits of a Scotch Inclosure Bill, or an Irish Drainage Act, should have to be inquired into at Westminster, we cannot exactly see; it is done at more expense and done far worse than it might be on the spot, and greater powers of government are granted to local knowledge and integrity in every Municipal Corporation in the kingdom. Of all this kind of local business Parliament might get rid; the Court of Chancery, when suitors and suits grew too numerous, created three other courts with similar powers. The Common Law Judges have been increased in number to meet the increasing business. Parliament alone remains fixed, unchanged, unexpansive, though it has absorbed the functions of two others, the Scotch Legislature and the Irish, the business of each of the three kingdoms having increased threefold since the fusion of the three Parliaments into one. Our forefathers were much less timid than ourselves of adopting their means to their ends; and we shall be soon compelled to imitate them. As they called their Parliaments at London, or Winchester, or York, as exigency required, we shall be obliged to delegate or divide the functions of our Legislature so as to equalise its powers to its work. Over all those imperial questions of taxation, of peace and war, and those laws by which the people are actually governed, it must retain supreme control. But those acts which only authorise the people to apply their own skill, capital, and energies in their own way—those road bills, drainage and enclosure acts, and lastly, all those gigantic railway projects—it might delegate to the inquiry of another power. It may be as well to think of it in time, for to some such expedient we shall in time be driven, from the absolute breaking down of the present system under the weight of work required from it.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAMER.

On Tuesday afternoon her Majesty and Prince Albert paid their intended visit to this extraordinary vessel. The day was remarkably fine, and many thousands of persons assembled, both at Greenwich and Blackwall, to await the arrival of the Royal party. Her Majesty and the Prince left Buckingham Palace at half-past two o'clock, attended by the Marchioness of Douro, Lady Jocelyn, Lord Hawarden, Colonels Bouverie and Arbuthnot, and Lord George Lennox and Sir Frederick Stovin, and proceeded over Vauxhall-bridge, through Camberwell and Peckham, to Greenwich, where it was arranged the royal party should embark, for which purpose the Dwarf, her Majesty's steam-tender, was dispatched from Woolwich to Greenwich early in the day, to be in attendance to convey her Majesty to the Great Britain. A Board of Admiralty, consisting of Lord Haddington and Captain Gordon, had previously arrived at the Royal Hospital, Greenwich, to receive her Majesty, and accompany her on board the Dwarf.

The Greenwich Pensioners were drawn out in array, and loudly cheered her Majesty as she embarked. Carpets were laid down the whole length of the distance from where her Majesty alighted to the water's edge.

Her Majesty arrived at Greenwich at about twenty minutes past three o'clock, and immediately proceeded on board the Dwarf.

The Lord Mayor, attended by the usual civic functionaries, left London-bridge in the City state barge, a few minutes after one o'clock, and was towed to Greenwich by the Waterman's steamer No. 10, to attend upon her Majesty, in his official capacity as Conservator of the Thames. Upon her Majesty's embarkation, the Lord Mayor, in the state barge, still in tow of the steamer, preceded the Royal yacht to Blackwall. Several of the river steamers, completely crowded with spectators, accompanied the yacht on her passage to the Great Britain, and the river in the neighbourhood of Blackwall was teeming with small boats filled with people. Two or three of the vessels of the Royal Thames Yacht Club were present, among which were the Mystery, Lord Seaham, and the Dolphin, Mr. Perkins, which latter vessel manned her yards as soon as the yacht hove in sight. A platform was fixed alongside the Great Britain, on which the accommodation-stairs, to enable her Majesty to get on board, were rigged. Both the platform and stairs were covered with carpets. The height of the platform was so arranged that it should be equal with the deck of the Dwarf, so that her Majesty should have no difficulty in getting on board, but be enabled at once to step from the steamer on to the platform.

The following Directors of the Great Western Steam-ship Company were on board to receive her Majesty:—Messrs. Bush (chairman), T. B. Were, John Miles, Thomas Pyecroft, and Captain Claxton, R.N. Messrs. Guppy, the constructor of the vessel; R. Brunel, engineer; and Smith, the patentee of the screw propeller, were also on board. As the Royal yacht neared the Great Britain, she slacked her speed, and proceeded slowly round her, from the starboard quarter and under her bows to her port beam, by which means her Majesty was afforded an excellent opportunity of viewing the exterior of the vessel.

Upon the Queen's arriving on board the Great Britain, her commander, Lieutenant Hosken, R.N., was presented to her Majesty by Lord Hawarden, and that officer conducted the Royal party through the vessel. Her Majesty appeared quite amazed at the enormous length of the ship, which is one-third longer than any line-of-battle ship in the service, being 322 feet in length, while the Queen, 120, which her Majesty visited when at Spithead, is not above 210. In order to obtain a full fore and aft view of the length of the ship, her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by Captain Hosken, went right aft and stood by the wheel, and then proceeded forward to the bows, viewing the vessel from the raised forecastle. Her Majesty frequently expressed her astonishment at the extraordinary length of the ship. The singular appearance of the six masts, so out of the ordinary mode in which ships are rigged, also attracted her Majesty's attention, and formed a subject of comment. From the forecastle the Royal party descended into the forward saloon and state rooms, which, having inspected, her Majesty returned on deck.

A model of the midship part of the ship, and a working model of the engines, with the screw, were then shown to her Majesty, and Mr. Brunel explained its mode of working and the manner in which the screw propelled the vessel, and how they were enabled to back astern. After having inspected this model, her Majesty and Prince Albert went down into the engine-room, to view the engines. These were shown to her Majesty by Mr. Guppy, the constructor both of the vessel and the engines. Her Majesty expressed her admiration of their workmanship, and inquired their power, and was informed that they were of 1000 horse power. The immense chain which turns the screw shaft seemed particularly to engage her Majesty's attention, which was described to her to revolve at the rate of twenty-five miles per hour. After leaving the engine-room her Majesty next inspected the after promenade saloon and state-room, and expressed her astonishment at the size of the dining-room. At the extremity of this apartment there were three models of different screws, one with six blades, similar to the screw with which the Great Britain is now fitted; another with four blades, which is to be used as a reserved screw for the ship, and a third model, with only three blades. Whilst the Royal party were inspecting these models, Mr. T. P. Smith, inventor and patentee of the screw-propeller, was presented by Lord Hawarden to her Majesty and Prince Albert as the inventor. Mr. Smith presented a very appropriate model in gold, in an appropriate case, of the propeller that he has recently applied to her Majesty's new tender yacht Fairy, which has recently obtained such a rapid speed as to surpass all other steamers on the river. Her Majesty was graciously pleased to accept the model, which was handed over to Lord Hawarden.

Captain Claxton presented her Majesty with two copies of the description of the Great Britain which her Majesty was also graciously pleased to accept. Her Majesty while in the dining-room sat down on one of the chairs, which was placed in such a position that enabled her to see the effect of the mirrors, which made this extensive apartment appear almost boundless.

Her Majesty, just previous to her departure, addressed Captain Hosken, and said, "I am very much gratified with the sight of your magnificent ship, and I wish you every possible success on your voyages across the Atlantic."

Prince Albert asked when it was intended to start on the voyage, and upon Captain Hosken informing his Royal Highness that it would be either the latter end of July, or the beginning of August, the Prince remarked, he supposed that Captain Hosken wished to save the equinox. Capt. Hosken replied that that was not so much the object as to make one or two voyages as speedily as possible, in order that the public may be perfectly convinced of the safety of the ship.

After remaining on board about three-quarters of an hour, the Royal party returned to the Dwarf.

Previous to the departure of the Dwarf, his Royal Highness called Captain Hosken to him, and requested him to convey to Mr. Smith her Majesty's thanks for the model of his screw.

No extra ornamental work had been done to the ship on the occasion of her Majesty's visit, but it was shown to her in its ordinary state, with the exception that the decks had been cleaned and holystoned, and the carpets were laid down in the saloons and on the staircases leading to them and to the engine-room.

The band of the first Life Guards was on board, and played some of the national airs during her Majesty's stay.

The Dwarf, upon leaving the Great Britain, returned to Greenwich, preceded, as before, by the Lord Mayor in the state barge. His Lordship did not come on board during her Majesty's visit, but remained in his barge at a little distance off.

There were no persons allowed on board except those we have named, and their ladies. Captain Routh, the Managing Director of the Blackwall Railway, was also on board. With these exceptions, there were no other visitors save those in her Majesty's and Prince Albert's immediate suite.

Her Majesty disembarked at Greenwich, and immediately left for Buckingham Palace, escorted by the detachment of Dragoons which had accompanied her down.

A guard of honour from the Royal Marines, with the excellent band of that corps, received her Majesty on her arrival from town, and on her return from the Great Britain. The barge used for her Majesty's embarkation and debarkation was steered by Captain Sir Francis Collier.

The Great Britain was dressed out in colours, as also every vessel in the vicinity of Greenwich and Blackwall.

The Trident, which conveyed her Majesty from Scotland, was lying at a short distance from the Great Britain, and saluted her Majesty both going and returning.

Immediately after her Majesty's departure the ship was thrown open again to the inspection of the public, and in a short time was completely thronged.

Her Majesty has expressed her great satisfaction at her visit.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The annual publication of a statistical account of crimes and offences which have occurred during the preceding year, forms a picture of many-coloured life, of vast interest, not only to legislators, but to the moral student. A tabular resumé is issued by the administrators of the Government. This document serves as a thesis to two classes—the one discovering in the apparent growth of crime what they deem incontrovertible proofs of the growth of public demoralization—the other, presuming that the publicity of daring acts of wickedness throws a sort of halo of notoriety around the perpetrators, which promotes the increase. The statistics just published are those of 1843, and they give a total of 7226 offenders. The most general classification is that of crimes directed against the person. I find that 2233 are of the first, and 4933 of the second class of crime. From 1826 to 1830 crimes against the person diminished regularly. In the last few years public opinion has been fixed on the number of persons poisoned; but the official account does not confirm the public belief. The mean number of victims during ten years—from 1830 to 1840—has been 50 per annum; since which there has been a partial diminution. In 1841 there were 40; in 1842, 41; and, in 1843, the scale had descended to 38. No doubt the interdiction by Government of its general sale has tended, in a great measure, to this improvement. The increase of suicide is considerable. There is a surplus over 1840 of 268—the total number is 2708; 1098 by drowning; 954 by hanging or by analogous means; 450 by firearms; and 206 by suffocation induced by the combustion of charcoal. Among the number I may direct your attention to the astounding fact that 15 of the number were children who had not reached their sixteenth year. And yet, can you wonder at this dreadful picture of self-murder, when you reflect that the number of mendicants has increased four-fold since the year 1830.

What think you of the peace-loving minister Guizot becoming, not only the apologist, but the apostle of duelling. Guizot, above all men in the world, advocating the duello of the middle ages; yet this is the fact, and one despite the legal principle which accounts death accruing by this mode of settlement as an assassination. MM. Donzon and Taillandier presented a motion for its suppression; when, to the astonishment of all, the Minister for Foreign Affairs became its strenuous apologist—remarking that, so far from its being a prejudice, it was the sign of the progress of civilization, of social amelioration, a positive necessity, that the duel interfered usefully in certain cases which were beyond the reach of penal punishment. This, as we may suppose, has set all the bellicose tongues in dear old Paris singing—fathers of families anathematizing—young ladies are literally shaking in their satin slippers, and the bêtes féroces are polishing their pistol barrels. All thinking men will desire that the pacific proposition of the two honourable deputies will be dismissed in the Chambers—or, at least, that it will not be adopted without being submitted to important modifications.

Tom Thumb is exhibiting his person at the Salle Vivienne: I need not add that his levees have been crowded. The greatest curiosity is shown to approach his diminutive generalship. Amongst the visitors have been several of the medical profession, who feel his pulse, measure his head, &c. Yesterday a grave personage, dressed in black, his hair powdered, and carrying a splendid Malacca cane, with gold mounting, approached the dwarf, and manipulated his person; upon leaving, he presented him with a small silver snuff box. The pigmy general was in extacies; but, alas! he soon discovered that the grave gentleman had contrived to steal the gold watch which had been the much-prized gift of Queen Victoria. Information was instantly given to the police.

After various delays Alexandre Dumas's action for libel and defamation against M. Eugene de Mirecourt, has been adjudged in favour of the plaintiff. The libellous matter appeared in a pamphlet entitled "Fabrique de Romans, Maison Alexandre Dumas et Compagnie." Every spot of the Chambre Conectionnelle was crowded, and the excitement and curiosity were really marvellous. When Dumas was questioned by the President whether he persisted in the action, he replied, "Most positively against the author, but not against the publishers." Mirecourt was sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment, and that the judgment should be inserted in ten newspapers to be selected at the choice of the plaintiff. I have just read the offensive brochure, and though the matter was made up of scandalous absurdity, I think it was scarcely worthy the notice and the legal persistance of Dumas, whose moral and literary reputation are beyond the reach of the shafts of the satire of a feuilleton, or the small shot of a pamphlet.

There is no longer any doubt of the death of poor M. de Mesnars—a sort of fatality appears to be connected with the name. Mesnars was an admirable officer, and a skilful and bold seaman. Six young men of good families, of the same name, and of the same grade in the naval service, have within an equal number of years come by their deaths at an age when the future opened to them a long course of success and glory. The first Lieutenant Mesnars, of the brig Faune, was assassinated at Mahon, and his body discovered hacked to pieces. A Lieutenant Mesnars was killed in a duel at Marquises, the year before last. An officer of the same name attached to La Favourite, died at Païta, by the epidemic which decimated the crew. Another of the same name died suddenly at Toulon; another died at the Antilles, of yellow fever. This, at least, is strange; but there are more things in heaven and earth than is dreamt of in our philosophy. The coincidence forms one of the leading subjects of conversation; were it not that the circumstances are really melancholy, the various absurd systems that are broached, and the ridiculous superstitious notions which it has given rise to, would suffice to strike a stranger with a very small respect for the much-boasted enlightenment of the French people.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers received at the early part of the week contained an announcement calculated to excite great interest, if not apprehension. M. Guizot was on Sunday morning taken suddenly ill. The Débats thus described the nature of the illness. It said—

"The Minister of Foreign Affairs was this morning seized with a slight indisposition, a sharp pain suddenly rising in the region of the liver, which yielded promptly under the influence of some simple precautions."

We are happy to find, however, by the latest accounts, that M. Guizot was recovering, and that no danger existed then. According to a private letter from Paris, however, there was a period when some alarm prevailed. The disease was inspissation of bile, and not the common influenza, as first reported, although symptoms of that malady also existed. The King expressed great anxiety on the subject of M. Guizot's health, and was incessant in his inquiries at the moment when doubts were entertained by his physicians.

The Moniteur of Tuesday contains five Royal Ordinances creating as many new peers. They are the Duke de Valancay; Lieut.-General Count de Latour-Maubourg; Count de Tilly, an ex-Deputy; Baron Bois le-Comte, Minister Plenipotentiary at the Hague; and M. de Kerbertin, President of the Court Royal of Rennes. Several more members are, as would appear, to added to the Chamber of Peers after the present session.

The recent division, of course, excites great interest among the Parisian journalists. Sir Robert Peel's speech is particularly noticed. Several of the papers appear to think the conclusion of it indicates that a collision with the United States about the Oregon territory is inevitable.

M. de Mouchy, Honorary President of the Royal Court of Amiens, died on the 15th inst., in the 85th year of his age. He was the last member of the Parliament of Paris.

Among the domestic news we notice the marriage of M. Leon Michel, the dancer, usually called St. Leon, to Mademoiselle Cerito. The ceremony took place at the Batignolles Church near Paris.

The marriage between the daughter of Duke Decazes and Baron Lefebyre, of Tournay, took place last week at the chapel of the Chamber of Peers.

The Minister of Public Works has presented to the Chamber of Deputies the Paris and Strasburg and the Tours and Nantes Railroad Bills.

The Paris and Chartres Railroad Bill is said to be ready for presentation.

M. de Saussure, the celebrated naturalist and chymist, died at Geneva on the 17th inst., in his 77th year.

There has been another disturbance among the pupils at the Polytechnic School, of which the National gives this account. It says that a pupil committed an act of violence against one of his companions. The other scholars who wished to interfere formed an assemblage in the court, which the superior police of the school summoned to disperse. The pupils, who have for some time been ill-disposed towards the system introduced into the school by General Rostolan, the present governor, opposed resistance. Thence occurred some unpleasant and unprecedented scenes. We are assured that some of the adjutants, and some even of the superior officers, were struck by the pupils in a moment of excitement. In consequence of the disturbances, 24 pupils have been confined in the prison of the school, and 11 in the military prison of the Abbaye. The Council of Discipline has commenced an investigation of the affair.

SPAIN.

Madrid papers and letters to the 16th instant have been received. There is little in them worth mentioning. The discussion on the estimates of the war department was proceeding, without any incident, in the Chamber of Deputies. It was believed that the Queen would leave Madrid for Barcelona towards the 15th of May, and successively visit that city, Valencia, Saragossa, Tudela, Pampeluna, St. Sebastian, Bilboa, Vittoria, and Burgos. Her Majesty is to be accompanied in her excursion by General Narvaez and M. Martinez de la Rosa.

SWITZERLAND.

There is nothing of importance from Switzerland.

The Constitutionnel gives the result of the meeting of the Swiss Diet of the 16th. The demand of Lucerne for an indemnity gave rise to a long and animated debate, which ended in a rejection, six votes only appearing for the affirmative. All steps to induce that canton to grant an amnesty would, it was said, fail, unless supported by money. The Diet adjourned without fixing a day for discussing the propositions of the commission.

We find the following in the Presse:—"Our private correspondence from Switzerland has brought us information which we give with the greatest possible reserve, although it comes from a trustworthy source. According to our letters the check sustained by the Free Corps has not discouraged the Swiss Radicals, who have not abandoned the idea of destroying the federal compact of 1815. It is announced to us that the cantons of Berne, Vaud, Soleure, Argau, and Basle Country, propose to separate from the confederation, and to form themselves into an independent Helvetic republic. We believe, however, that M. Neuhaus, the avoyer of Berne, to whom this extreme determination is attributed, will consider twice before he attempts to destroy a compact guaranteed by the great Powers, and which cannot be annulled without the consent of all the parties concerned."

On the 16th, the Prussian Minister presented a note of his Government to the President of the Diet. The note assures the President that any departure from the strict obligations of the Federal Compact would be fatal to the independence of Switzerland, which has been guaranteed by the Powers only on the condition that the constitution of the States, as approved of by them, shall in every part be religiously respected.

A letter from Berne, of the 17th inst. mentions, that the greatest insubordination prevailing among the militia, the Government had been obliged to disband the ninth battalion, which kept garrison at Berne.

The authorities of Vaud had ordered the removal of the military cordon from the frontiers of Valais, in consequence of a threat of the latter to regard that unnecessary blockade as a commencement of hostilities, and to act accordingly.

Private letters from Zurich of the 17th inst. state, that all the prisoners under 20 years of age had been liberated by the Government of Lucerne and sent back to their respective cantons.

THE RIVER PLATE.

Accounts have been received from Buenos Ayres to the 7th February, by the Odin. Nothing of consequence had occurred before Monte Video, but the English and French naval commanders still refused to acknowledge the closer blockade which Rosas had ordered to be established.

The letters received by the Odin state that the governments of Brazil and Paraguay had concluded a treaty, offensive and defensive, in which, amongst other things, they stipulate for a mutual right of navigation on the Parana and the other rivers which flow through the territories of both. This news, if true, is a death-blow to Rosas's designs on Paraguay.

When the Odin sailed, exchange at Buenos Ayres was at 4½.

THE WEST INDIES.

The Trent Royal Mail Company's steam ship has arrived from the West Indies.

The Trent left Jamaica on the 24th of March, Jacmel 26th, Porto Rico 29th, St. Thomas's 31st, and Fayal 14th of April.

We find by a file of West India papers, that the accounts from the island of Jamaica are very cheering. Although the weather had been exceedingly hot, the prospects of a fine sugar crop are very good. The information conveyed of the alteration in the sugar duties was, as might be expected, well received, and gave great satisfaction to the growers.

The Jamaica Morning Journal says, "We regret to find that there continue to be incendiary attempts to set fire to the city of Bridgetown, Barbadoes. Three of these attempts were made at one premises, but no discovery of the guilty incendiaries had been made. The weather had been dry and dusty, but had undergone a pleasing change, there having been cool light showers. Up to the 7th ult. more than 5000 hogsheads, and several hundred tierces and barrels of sugar had been shipped, and the utmost activity prevailed.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND INDIA MAIL.

The half monthly Overland Mail from India vid Calcutta, has reached town, with despatches from Calcutta of the 8th of March, from Madras of the 14th, and China of the 4th February. They arrived at Suez on the 5th of April, by the Bentinck; at Alexandria, by the Great Liverpool, on the 9th, Malta on the 13th, and Marseilles on the 19th instant.

The news, both political and domestic, is unusually barren of interest. The Punjaub remained in the same state, with little chance of its being disturbed until the cold season. The Khalsa army, 40,000 strong, had assembled within a short distance of Goolab Singh's position, and as its numbers were double those of his troops, might possibly muster courage to attack them. Of this, however, there appeared to be no immediate probability. The Scinde campaign, under Sir Charles Napier, appears to be at an end; Berjar Khan, the only remaining malcontent of any importance, having offered to surrender, on the condition that his life should be spared, and a portion of his present territory allotted to him. There is no political news from Calcutta. A large and respectably attended meeting took place on the 1st there, for the purpose of agreeing to a vote of thanks to her Majesty, for her gracious present to that city, at the suggestion of Dwarkanauth Tajore, of her own portrait, and that of Prince Albert. Dwarkanauth Tajore was about to revisit Europe. Sir H. Hardinge was still at Calcutta, and his interest on the education question seemed to be undiminished. The Bishop of Calcutta, who had been suffering from serious illness, was expected to leave India for England, with a view to the restoration of his health, in May.

From China we are told that Fow chow-foo and Ningpo are to be given up as trading ports, and Chusan retained in their stead. The Chinese were building extensively on that island. Another instalment of the Chinese indemnity money, amounting to £3,000,000, had been received at Whampoa, on board the Vestal.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

After the presentation of several petitions against the Maynooth grant, Earl POWIS gave notice that the Bill for the Union of the Sees of St. Asaph and Bangor stood for its second reading on Tuesday, the 29th. The report of the Railway Clauses Bill was brought up. Some other bills were advanced a stage and the house adjourned at half-past four.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The reading of the Agricultural and Commercial Bank of Ireland Bill was postponed till Friday next.

RAILWAY COMMITTEES.—Lord G. SOMERSET, in considering the first resolution of the Second Report of the Committee on Railways, moved that counsel should open the proceedings in railway measures, but be debarred from summing up. After some observations by several members, Lord George Somerset withdrew his motion.—Mr. HUME postponed his motion for the correspondence relative to Lord Ellenborough's recall until after the Government "were freed from annoyance on the Maynooth grant."

GRANT TO MAYNOOTH.—In answer to a question of Mr. J. Collett, Sir R. PEEL stated that in the event of the discussion terminating that evening, he proposed to go into committee with the bill on Monday.—After the presentation of some petitions, Mr. S. CRAWFORD rose, and deeply regretted his being compelled to vote against the measure.—Lord C. HAMILTON supported the bill.—Mr. MUNTZ spoke against the bill, and said, as the Government had deviated from principle, he should do all he could to change it. The Irish, he said, could subscribe for Repeal and other agitation, and they ought to subscribe to pay for their priests.—Mr. NEVILLE supported the bill.—Mr. BELLEW defended the grant. He said he thought it very hard that the Irish Church should be brought forward on every occasion as a reason for not granting what the Irish wanted. Considering the spirit in which the measure had been met by Mr. O'Connell and in that house, he hoped it would be the harbinger of better days for Ireland. (Cheers.) Captain TAYLOR gave his opinion that the present Ministers were more unpopular with the Protestants than the last, with the additional disadvantage that they had more power to carry their measures. Believing that the bill would be fraught with ruinous consequences, he felt bound to oppose it.—Sir F. TRENCH said he should give his zealous and anxious support to the bill.—Mr. COBDEN said he should vote for the bill, considering it only an educational grant. There was nothing in it for the endowment of the Catholic clergy, and he did not believe that in the present day they could pass a bill for the endowment of the Catholic Church, even if both parties united.—Mr. FERRAND denounced the Conservative party for having broken their pledges in regard to the Church. He said the Whigs in office were upright, honourable men, compared to the present Ministry. The conduct of the Government, he contended, had scattered the great Conservative party to the winds. Sir R. Peel, he said, was outraging all the pledges he had made on the hustings.—Mr. SHEIL argued with great energy that much evil would arise if the present measure were rejected. The rejection of it would give a signal impulse to the Repeal agitation, because it would prove that the Government was not disposed to act in unison with the feelings of the people of Ireland. The First Lord of the Treasury had said he would risk a civil war rather than submit to Repeal; but was not a series of such measures as the Maynooth grant better than a civil war? The measure proposed had his unqualified approbation, and he only was sorry that he (Sir R. Peel) had not brought it forward at an earlier period of his career. Mr. Sheil, in conclusion, alluded to the proposed visit of the Queen to Ireland, and expressed his confidence that her Majesty would be received with enthusiasm.—Mr. LAW (the Recorder) spoke against the bill. He was much interrupted, and, at one time, was called to order by Mr. Hutt, on the ground that he was reading his speech, contrary to the orders of the house. Mr. Law, in answer, said he was only reading the heads of his argument. Mr. Law, in concluding his speech, said that the question at issue was, whether the Act of Settlement should hereafter be a dead letter?—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE defended the Dissenters for their opposition to the bill, and expressed a hope that they would continue it. He asked if the numerous petitions were to be treated as so much waste paper. He was astonished at the gratitude of the Irish for this paltry grant, and that they were ready to worship the golden image which the right hon. baronet had set up. He did not believe the measure would conciliate Ireland, and he should resist it as long as he was able.—Lord J. Russell said he could have given a silent vote in favour of the second reading, had it not been for the numerous petitions and the various letters he had received. He took a general review of the bill, and explained the motives which induced him to vote for it. He regretted the strong expressions in the petitions against the Roman Catholics; he also regretted the strong prejudices which still existed against them, and that the spirit which existed at the time of the Reformation had not been softened. With these views, he could not consent to the petitions of the people. If they could not act kindly to the people of Ireland, they must agree to the repeal of the union. For himself, he would rather retire into private life than vote against a measure which he thought essential to its welfare. Ireland was not yet on an equality with England, and he himself would endeavour hereafter to obtain for them further rights. He should vote for the bill, in the hope of making Ireland, if not the most improving, at least the most happy, part of her Majesty's dominions. (Cheers.)—Sir R. Inglis spoke against the bill. He said the objection of himself and friends was not to the amount, but to the principle.—Sir R. Peel, in reply, said he should not review the course of the debate. (It was half-past one o'clock when he rose.) He urged the house, if it thought right, to withdraw its confidence, but not to incur the danger of rejecting that bill. It was said that they would forfeit their seats, and perhaps the existence of the Government; but was it natural that they should incur those risks if they were not fully persuaded of the advantage of the measure? Sir R. Peel then alluded to the condition of Ireland, and argued that the measure was calculated to restore tranquillity to it. He then read an account of the wretched state of Maynooth, and said it could not injure the Protestant religion if they raised the position of the students of the College. In concluding his speech, he said he believed it would be for the interest of good order, nay, for the interest of the Protestant religion itself, that this measure should be passed. It was not intended to facilitate the design of Catholic endowment, but he would not pledge himself that he would never make the proposal.

The house then divided. The numbers were—

The house adjourned at three o'clock on Saturday morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Grant to Maynooth.—Many petitions having been presented, on the subect of the additional grant to Maynooth, Lord Brougham expressed an opinion in favour of the bill. He said the amount did not alter the state of the case as to principle. He ridiculed the idea that the four corners of the world should be set in a flame by a report of the endowment of a Popish college, and said he felt humbled, degraded, and mortified, in the greatest degree, to see so many of his fellow-countrymen led away by such furious nonsense.—The Earl of Mountcashel said he could answer every word of the noble and learned lord. (Laughter.) He could prove the fallacy of what the noble and learned lord had stated, but the proper time was not yet come; when it did come, however, he should be ready to take up the subject.—Lord Brougham made a sarcastic retort. He said he felt deeply grateful to the noble earl for not inflicting upon him the punishment he had threatened—for not doing what he said he would—answer him. (Laughter.) No doubt the noble earl would answer him; but he hoped the noble earl would give him a further respite. (Laughter.) In fact, he did not wish ever to suffer under that infliction, after the specimen the noble earl had given that evening. (Continued laughter.)

Lord Lyttelton moved the second reading of the bill regulating the law of compensation in cases of death caused by accident. He said the principle of the bill was to make the law more plain, and to assimilate it to the law of Scotland and France. In some cases it might be desirable to grant an annuity to the wife and relations of a person who met with his death by accident, for their lives.—The motion was agreed to.

The house adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

Railway Committees.—Mr. T. Duncombe brought forward a motion to rescind the 11th section of Standing Order, No. 87, which requires committees on railway bills to make a special report of the reasons which induce the committee to adopt or reject the recommendations of the Board of Trade. His object in propounding this motion was, that the house might come to a distinct understanding of the relation in which it stood with respect to the Board of Trade, whose decisions had given great and general dissatisfaction.—Sir G. Clerk defended the railway department of the Board of Trade, whose reports, he believed, had given universal satisfaction, with the exception of the interests adversely reported against. The resolution of the house, appointing that department, by no means contemplated the idea of superseding the duties of the Legislature; its inquiries were altogether of a preliminary and accumulative nature, and intended to facilitate the business of the house.—After a long discussion, Mr. Bernal said he did not think that Mr. Duncombe's resolution would effect the alterations which he deemed requisite, and he, therefore, moved as an amendment an address to the Crown, praying that all papers of the Board of Trade relative to railways should be laid before the house, and that parties interested might be furnished with copies at their own expense.—Mr. Duncombe ultimately withdrew his motion in favour of the amendment of Mr. Bernal, which was agreed to.

The Maynooth College Bill.—Upon the proposal to go into committee on this bill, Sir R. Inglis made an objection on account of the lateness of the hour (a quarter past ten o'clock).—Sir R. Peel said he would not then proceed with the bill, because he would not give the opportunity of saying that he had unnecessarily hurried its progress; but he would not bring forward any Government measure until it had been disposed of. The further proceeding was therefore postponed till Wednesday.

The other business up to the adjournment of the house was unimportant.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The Railways.—Earl Dalhousie having moved the third reading of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill, Lord Brougham made another lengthy address, deprecating railway speculation and impugning the decisions of the Board of Trade. He objected to the extent of the powers granted to railway companies, and proposed some amendments to limit them. Lord Brougham also contrasted the course taken by this Government and that of France, giving his opinion that it was very unfortunate we allowed our neighbours in France to be so much ahead of us in the sound mode of dealing with these questions; for there the Government, though not without great opposition, in a manful and statesmanlike fashion, insisted on taking the matter into their own hands, allowing very few railways for some time, and then only leasing them for 45 years, or 35, or less, after which they were to revert to the public, who might renew the lease on condition of lowering the fares, or on other advantageous terms.—Earl Dalhousie declined to repeat his defence of the railway board, and said Lord Brougham had given about three quarters of an hour to the railway board and to gambling, and a quarter of an hour to the bill—only one pennyworth of bread to this huge quantity of sack. The noble earl then denied some of Lord Brougham's statements, and, in a very lucid, quiet, and convincing tone, argued that the amendments would prevent the formation of railways altogether. If (said Earl Dalhousie) his noble and learned friend wished to take credit for the very strong expressions which had fallen from him on a former occasion upon this subject—if he wished to take credit for the desire which he at one time expressed in such eloquent terms, that he might see the country yet covered with a net-work of railways, he should afford the necessary means for their construction. The noble and learned lord claimed the merit of still adhering to that opinion of the utility and importance of those great works, and he, therefore, did not object to railways in the abstract, but he, at the same time, took care to object to the construction of every particular railway in detail. (Hear, hear, and laughter.) Surely, if his noble and learned friend took away the only clauses by which a company could be enabled to construct a railway, it was no use to express his approval of the principle of railways generally. His noble and learned friend said he would agree to the formation of a company to make a railway from London to York; but he would take care that they should not have a barrow full of clay or a cart-load of gravel for the construction of the work. (Hear, hear.) His noble and learned friend was, in fact, ten thousand times worse than the Egyptian tyrant. He not only out-Heroded Herod, but he out-Pharoahed Pharoah. (Laughter.) The persecutor of the Israelites refused that oppressed people straw, while he compelled them to furnish bricks; but his noble and learned friend said, "You are to construct railways, you are to erect bridges and viaducts along the line, but you shall have neither bricks, nor clay, nor stones, nor gravel." (Hear, hear, and laughter.)—The amendments were rejected without a division, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

The house adjourned at half-past eight, till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The business to day was uninteresting. The house sat only about an hour and a half, which time was chiefly occupied in the presentation of petitions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The Maynooth College Bill.—On the order of the day for going into committee on this bill, Mr. Ward submitted the resolution of which he had given notice, "That it is the opinion of this house, that any provision to be made for the purposes of the present bill ought to be taken from the funds already applicable to ecclesiastical purposes in Ireland." Mr. Ward explained his object to be to amend this bill by grafting on it the proposition which he had just read, instead of throwing it out altogether. After getting rid of a charge of bad faith—which he said had been preferred against him for having betrayed a cause in which he had never embarked—he proceeded to state, that the concessions which he now asked the house to make to the Roman Catholics of Ireland were not of grace and favour, but of right; for he was of opinion that they were as much entitled to a Roman Catholic Establishment in Ireland as the people of England were to a Protestant Church Establishment here, or as the people of Scotland were to a Presbyterian Establishment there. Mr. Ward then argued that the house ought to accede to his amendment, as containing the only safe method of reconstructing the Church Establishment of Ireland. The only obstacle to that reconstruction was the state of feeling out of doors. To that feeling no one dared to give utterance in that house, for if any man did, it would justify a revolution in the land to-morrow. He then commented with great indignation on the language used by many of the petitioners — on the speech of Mr. M'Neile at Liverpool—on that of the Rev. Mr. Robinson, the rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn, and on those of several ministers of Dissenting congregations recently delivered in London. He contended that the resistance to this measure did not rest on its religious grounds. He thought that the resistance would have been less had the measure itself been larger, for at present it avowed a principle which it did not carry out, and fixed a taxation on the country which, he said, ought to come out of other funds. He argued that by a re-distribution of the church property of Ireland an arrangement might be made for the erection and endowment of this College of Maynooth, without injury to any interest whatsoever. Mr. Ward, in conclusion, gave his opinion that Sir R. Peel's speech last Friday must have made a bad impression in Ireland, as it led to the conclusion that England's weakness was Ireland's strength, and that we would yield to force that which we would not grant to justice. He said that in bringing this amendment forward it was not so much on account of the money as of the principle affirmed in it. If Sir R. Peel would give him the principle, he would give him in return unlimited credit on the Consolidated Fund, until the reconstruction of the Church property was completed.—The resolution was seconded by Capt. Berkeley.—Sir T. Fremantle reminded Mr. Ward that his motion would not be a fair test of the opinion of the house on the question he desired to raise, because many would be inclined to vote for, and others would vote against the resolution, with the intent of defeating or forwarding the Maynooth Bill. There were religious, political, and technical objections to the resolution, and he urged the house to give it a direct negative.—Sir Walter James said he had a great technical objection to the resolution.—Mr. M. Gibson spoke in support of it, and Sir J. Walsh against it.—Mr. Macaulay considered the amendment of Mr. Ward as equivalent to an action of ejectment, raising the whole question of the Irish Church. He had no hesitation in stating his belief, that the Church of Ireland was a bad institution—unmatched for absurdity in the history of the civilised world. Ireland was the only country on the face of the earth in which the church of the small minority was held to be sacred and supreme. That church had been tried for a period of 285 years—it was loaded with honours—its spiritual directors received much for doing little, and the only result of their exertions was a numerous Roman Catholic population, the most zealous in all Europe. The right hon. gentleman then contended that there was an uncertainty of principle about the measures of the Government which did not characterise the propositions of the Whigs, who had never proposed any measure which was not in accordance with their well-known sentiments. Sir R. Peel had conceded everything to fear, and if he remained five years longer in office, and if a war should threaten between this country and America, or France, or both, he would come down with a proposition respecting the Church Establishment, pleading the urgency of the circumstances as his justification for doing so. On the other hand, the Whigs would grant to Ireland all that she was entitled to frankly, but would yield nothing beyond, even if the existence of England amongst the nations were in the balance at the moment.—Sir J. Graham denied that the Maynooth proposition was extorted by fear from the Government, for it was announced to be the intention of Government to bring it forward so far back as the early part of last November, and long before there was any apprehension of a misunderstanding with America. Neither was it brought forward nor announced until the Government had put down the monster meetings and reduced the agitation in Ireland within limits which no longer left any reasonable ground for alarm. He believed he spoke the sentiments or his colleagues—he certainly spoke his own—when he declared that he could not agree with the right hon. gent. that the Irish Church was a bad institution and a nuisance. Believing it to be the duty of the Government to maintain the Protestant Established Church of Ireland, he must oppose the resolution.—Mr. Roebuck taunted the Government with having brought forward this measure through fear. Sir. R. Peel in his opinion was afraid of a war with America, and something like rebellion in Ireland at the same time, and he then said, "Let us give the Irish this sop." This was the sort of graceful concession of which the Government boasted. (Hear, hear.)—Sir Robert Peel assured the House that the bill was not brought forward from fear of the Irish, or in consequence of the threatening appearance of the United States. The right hon. bart. gave, as a reason for not answering the attacks made upon him, that, knowing the success of the measure depended on the support of hon. gentlemen opposite, it would not have been fitting in him to have alienated that support by party attacks. He then replied to the attacks made upon him by Mr. Macaulay, whose conduct upon the question he thought unworthy of the position of the right hon. gentleman in that house. The present measure was the reverse of former concessions, for it was uncalled for; no one asked for—no one expected it; there was no concession to agitation; it was the voluntary offering to the Irish people of that which was believed to be just, and that was precisely the reason why it had been so favourably received in Ireland. He sincerely hoped the house would not suffer it to be encumbered with the present proposition.—Lord J. Russell said he would vote for the motion of Mr. Ward, but he would decidedly oppose the motion intended to be moved by Mr. Law. The noble lord contended that it could never be satisfactory to the people of Ireland to have a large establishment for the Protestant minority, and no establishment whatever for the Catholic majority.

At one o'clock the debate was adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Royal Assent.—The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the Sugar Duties Bill, the Glass Duties Bill, the Customs Duties Bill, the Mutiny Bill, the Marine Mutiny Bill, the Thames Navigation Bill, and Britton's Divorce Bill.

Petitions were presented upon the subject of the Maynooth Grant, and respecting railways.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Some time was occupied with the presentation of petitions, and in the transaction of unimportant business.

Maynooth Grant.—The adjourned debate on Mr. Ward's motion was commenced by Mr. Colquhoun; he was followed by several hon. members, among whom were Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Osborne, Mr. Bernal, Mr. Ellis, and Lord Palmerston. The house then divided, the numbers were—

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.

New Writs.—New writs have been issued for the county of Denbigh, in the room of Sir W. Wynn, who has accepted the office of steward of one of her Majesty's manorial courts in Wales; for the county of Peebles, in the room of William Forbes Mackenzie, Esq., who has accepted the office of Lord of the Treasury; and for the borough of Leominster, in the room of Charles Greenaway, Esq., who has accepted the office of steward of the Chiltern Hundreds. A new writ has been ordered for Woodstock, in the room of the Marquis of Blandford, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

New Member.—On Tuesday, Walter Baine, Esq., the newly-elected member for Greenock, in the room of Mr. Wallace, took the oaths and his seat. The hon. member was accompanied to the table by Mr. Hume and Mr. Bright.

University of Dublin.—Mr. Wyse has given notice that he shall bring forward his motion relating to the University of Dublin, on Tuesday next, the 29th instant.

Maynooth.—Mr. S. Crawford has given notice of his intention, in committee on the Maynooth College Bill, to move that the portion of the grant to be applied to the extension, improvement, and furnishing the college, shall be taken from the revenues derived from the Crown lands in Ireland, under the control of the Board of Woods and Forests. Mr. Law has given notice of a resolution, that the several sums proposed to be payable shall not be charged upon or payable by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury out of the Consolidated Fund.

Fares on Railways.—Lord Granville Somerset intends on Monday next to bring forward a precise motion on the subject of the charges for fares on railways.

More Wonders of the Electric Telegraph.—The division upon the Maynooth grant, which took place in the House of Commons on Saturday morning last, at three o'clock, was known and printed at Southampton by half-past three, by means of the electric telegraph. On the same morning a gentleman, a passenger by the twelve o'clock down train to Bristol, from the Paddington terminus of the Great Western Railway, discovered, shortly before the train arrived at Slough, that he had lost his purse, containing Bank of England notes to the amount of £900, besides £2 10s. in gold and 3s. 6d. in silver. Immediately on the arrival of the train at the Slough station, he proceeded direct to the office of the electric telegraph in a state of great excitement, not knowing whether he had been robbed of his money in the railway carriage, or lost it before he entered the train. Information of the loss was instantaneously transmitted to the superintendent of the electric telegraph, at the Paddington station, who immediately proceeded to the booking-office where the gentleman paid for his ticket, where the purse and its contents were found untouched. Within five minutes from the time of the loss being made known at Slough, the gentleman had the satisfaction of knowing that, by means of this extraordinary invention, his property was safe, and he shortly afterwards received it by the following train.

The Silesian Gazette informs us that the states of Prussia, Posen, Silesia, and of the Rhine have pronounced, either unanimously or by a great majority, in favour of the petitions for the liberty of the press.

A letter from Constantinople, April 2, in the Augsburg Gazette, has the following:—Osmer Pacha, the hero of the campaign last year against the Albanians, has demanded his recal, which the Government hastened to grant him. He is immediately expected here. After his departure the Arnauts assembled to the number of 1000, and suddenly attacked and pillaged the convent of Arsemo. They then attacked another convent and assassinated three monks. Prince de Viasemski, attaché to the Russian embassy, left on the 29th ult. for Athens. The negotiations for peace between Turkey and Persia have not yet arrived at any result. Mirza Ishafer and Enverri Effendi, the two plenipotentiaries, endeavour by every artifice to gain the advantage one over the other, but without effect."

COUNTRY NEWS.

The Fatal Accident at Derby.—The inquest on the sufferers in the fatal accident at this place, which we announced last week, was resumed on Monday in the Town-hall. The bodies of the deceased had, in the interim, been buried in the churchyard of St. Peter's—that of Sans on Saturday, and Harlow on Sunday, amid an immense concourse of spectators. The evidence adduced contained no new facts regarding the accident. Some of the witnesses complained of the manner in which the arches had been constructed, the plans, it was alleged, being very defective. The jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," coupled with a rider to the effect that they regretted that the co-operation of the committee had not been directed to an inspection and knowledge of the work going on, and that after the previous accident, the committee had not appointed competent and proper persons to superintend the works, and those in whom confidence could be placed, and whose plans could be relied on."

The Garrison Ball in the Isle of Wight.—On Tuesday week the grand military ball of the garrison took place at the Green Dragon Assembly Rooms, at Newport (Isle of Wight). About 200 ladies and gentlemen were present, among whom we observed Lady Holmes, Lady William Russell, Lady Montague, and nearly the whole of the nobility and élite of the island. The walls of the rooms, both for the dancing and the supper, displayed great taste and skill of the messman, Mr. Thomson. The stewards were Lord William Russell, of the Rifles; Sir Hew Dalrymple, of the 71st Regt.; and Captain Forbes, of the 91st. At nine o'clock the company began to arrive, and shortly afterwards dancing commenced, and was kept up with great spirit until one A.M., when the company retired to the supper room, whose tables groaned with the luxuries of the season. Dancing was afterwards resumed, and kept up until daylight proclaimed the hour of departing. It is the general opinion in the neighbourhood, that no race ball was ever got up so lavishly, without regard to expense.

Execution of a Woman for Murder.—Sarah Freeman expiated with her life, at Taunton, on Wednesday, the diabolical crime of which she was convicted. This unhappy woman was committed upon four distinct charges of murder, viz., for having administered arsenic to her husband, her illegitimate son, her mother, and her brother, of whose murder she was convicted at the late Spring Assizes, which caused their death. The time appointed for the execution was 11 o'clock, but such was the anxiety to witness the death of this notorious murderess, that long before that hour thousands of people were congregated in front of the prison. The wretched culprit retired to rest at 12 o'clock on the previous night, up to which hour the chaplain was in attendance upon her. She slept soundly till six o'clock on Wednesday morning, when she got up and ate a hearty breakfast. She was visited early by the chaplain, the under-sheriff and the governor, and again strongly protested her innocence, saying that she bought the poison for herself, and that her brother John took it from her bag and gave it to her mother and brother. When entreated by the under-sheriff, about ten o'clock in the morning, to tell the truth, she very snappishly told him not to press her with any further questions on the subject. Shortly before eleven she appeared on the scaffold; she joined in the prayers, and again protested her innocence. In a few minutes the fatal noose was adjusted, and the drop fell. After hanging the usual time the body was cut down and buried in the precincts of the prison.

Fatal Accident to the Huntsman at Brocklesby Hunt.—On Friday week Mr. Smith, huntsman to the Earl of Yarborough, had the misfortune to fall from his horse in a field, situate in the parish of Barnoldby-le-Beck, near Grimsby. Mr. Smith had to pass a brook which was of so ordinary a character that he did not consider it to require more care than crossing a large ditch. Riding, however, with rather a slack rein, the horse leaped farther than he expected; and the consequence was that he was thrown, fell upon his head, and injured the spine. Assistance was immediately afforded, but he expired on Tuesday. Mr. Smith hunted the Brocklesbury pack for a quarter of a century.

THE DUC DE BROGLIE, AND THE RIGHT OF SEARCH.

The United British and French Commission on the Right of Search question is now sitting in the Premier's official residence in Downing-street. The Commissioners, as we have before announced, are Dr. Lushington for the English interest, and the Duc de Broglie for the French. Of the former gentleman it is needless to say anything in commendation of his admirable qualifications for the difficult and delicate task he has undertaken, as he is well known to the world as a profound constitutional lawyer, and the foremost champion, since the death of Buxton and the retirement of Clarkson, of the great anti-slavery cause. Of the Duc de Broglie less is known, but we may assure the public that not only is the joint honour of the two nations safe in his hands, but that the sacred principles of human freedom are likely not only to be upheld, but very materially advanced by his intervention. He is a man of noble bearing, of gentle spirit, of vast acquirements, of inflexible honesty, and, as such, has been chosen by the French Government to represent the jealous French people in the very nice points of dispute likely to be raised by the Commission.

Since the commencement of the business, and only so late as Tuesday se'nnight, a document has been published which is likely to have an immense influence on the questions at issue. It is a return, ordered by the House of Commons, showing the total number of African negroes landed, for the abominable purposes of slavery, on the islands and on the continent of America, from the year 1815 to the year 1843; and it appears that the gross total number of African negroes so landed, during the whole of the period comprised between the years 1815 and 1843, amounted altogether to 639,145; of whom 555,834 were landed in the Brazilian territory; 76,685 in the Spanish territory; 3423 in the French territory; 1123 in the Dutch territory; 200 in the Danish territory; and 1880 in the Montevidean territory. In the year 1843, 19,095 slaves were landed on the Brazilian, and 5627 on the Spanish territory. The number of negroes taken from Africa for the purposes of slavery, but captured and brought to, or driven on shore upon the islands and coasts of America, and there liberated, amounted to 18,042. The authorities of the Foreign-office assure the house, in this return, that the reports made by British functionaries of the arrivals of slave vessels in Transatlantic ports, from which the return is compiled, must not be considered as giving an account of all cases in which slaves have been imported, as will appear from the following extract from the reports alluded to.

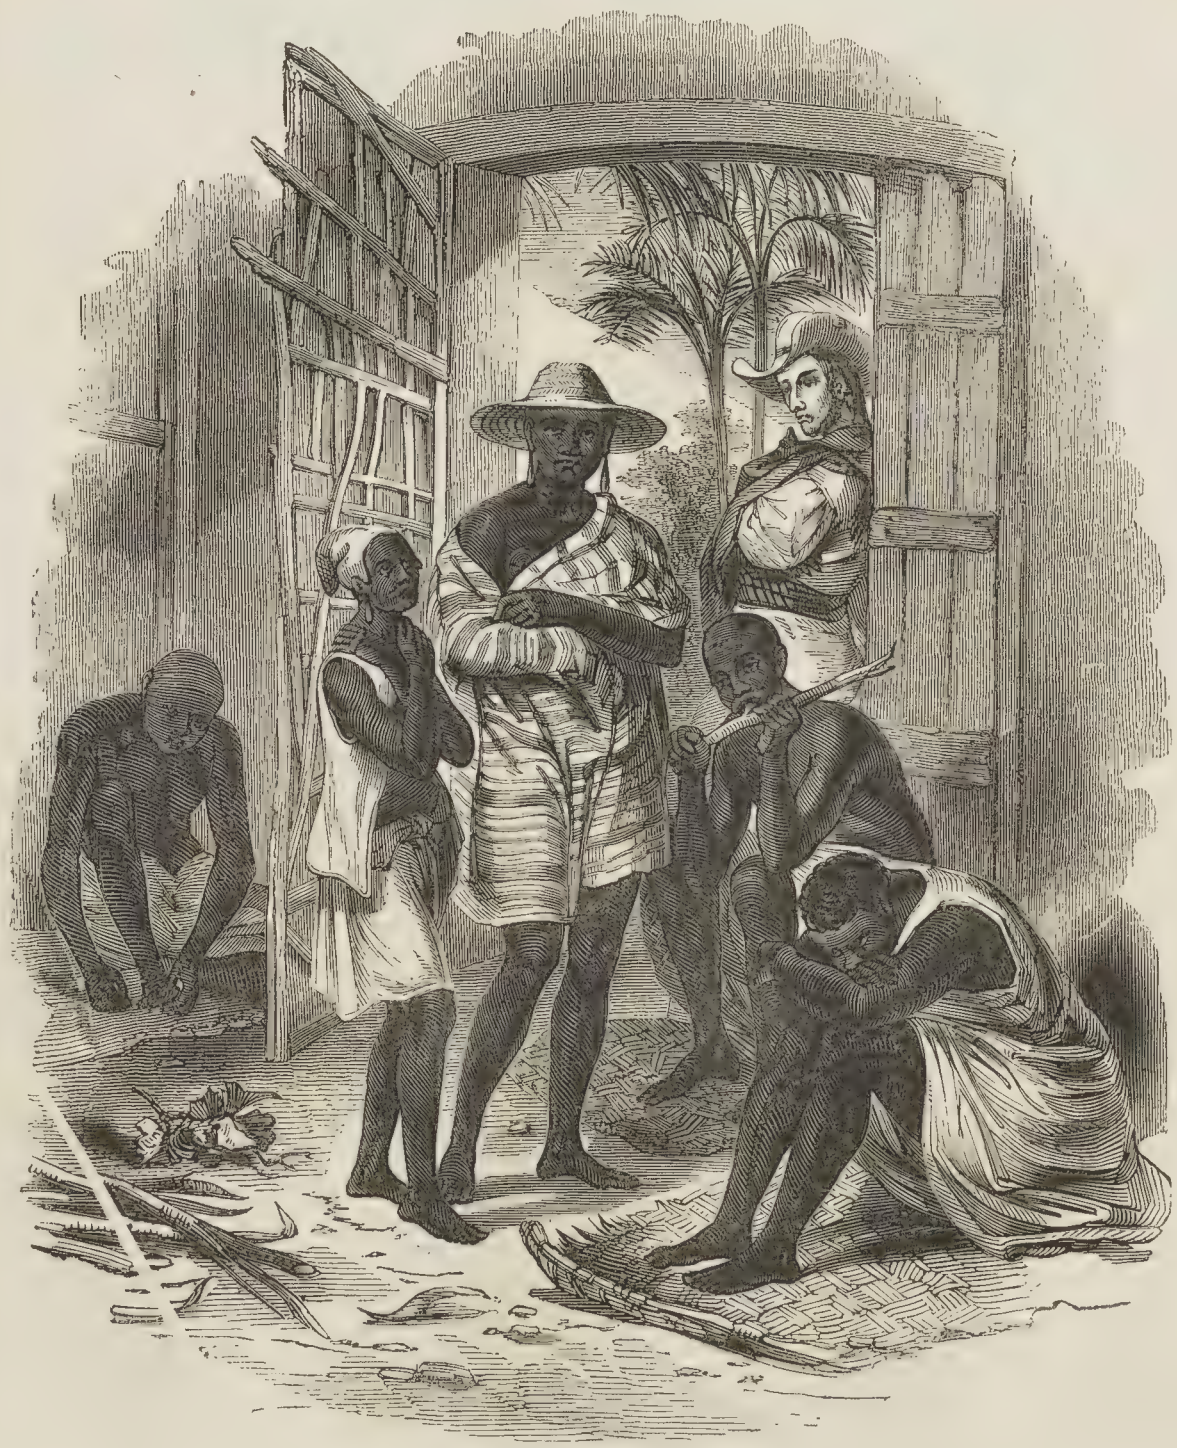
Her Majesty's Commissioners and her Majesty's Consul at Rio de Janeiro, writing on the 1st of January, 1844, says—"The accompanying return for this year exhibits the number of vessels said to have landed cargoes to be 37, total number of slaves 14,891. The total number of slaves, as thus shown, is not one-half of the actual number successfully imported. We are assured that nearly 40,000 have been landed within these provinces during that period."

The Consul at Bahia writes (July 30, 1843)—"The great secrecy with which the slave traffic is carried on, and the facilities which this extensive coast offers for the landing of slaves, together with the connivance and venality of the petty authorities, render it impossible to obtain a correct statement as to the number of slaves imported."

The English Consul at Pernambuco (July 27, 1839), writes—"The list does not exhibit either the number of slaves landed, or the names of the creeks and inlets in which they have been disembarked; for the utmost diligence of inquiry, or vigilance of research cannot arrive at a correct knowledge of those facts which are impenetrably veiled by the artful combination of those either directly or indirectly interested in the slave trade."

Her Majesty's Commissioners at the Havannah, in the island of Cuba, writing on the 1st January, 1836, say—"Fifty slave vessels have safely arrived in this port during the year just expired. In 1833, there were 27 arrivals; in 1834, 33; but 1835 presents a number of arrivals, by means of which there must have been landed at the very least 15,000 negroes."

The same authorities write on New Year's Day, 1840, as follows—"The average number of Africans introduced per annum is as well known as any other part of the statistics of the population; but have, therefore, the less hesitation in saying, that the average number of Africans brought here is said, and we believe it, to be about 18,000 per annum, and about 7000 more into the other parts of the island, making a total of 25,000."



The Commissioners of the Havannah further announce, on the 1st of January, 1842, that "They are glad to have it in their power to give a return of the vessels and cargoes that have arrived there or in the vicinity, including Matanzas, during the last seven years, as taken from the books kept at the store, used by the slave-dealers there as an exchange, or place of meeting; and, supposing these formed three-fourths of the importations into the whole island, a just opinion," they believe, "may be approximated on the subject."

It will be seen from this report that Brazil is the only country which has not acknowledged the fatal consequences of the importation of slaves, or rather which continues, in defiance of her reiterated promises and her own laws, to connive at the spoliation of Africa. Five-sixths of the negroes imported into America in the last twenty years have been landed in Brazil. Brazil stands alone in this abominable traffic; but the scale on which she carries it on equals the slave-trade of all nations in the last century combined. The moral responsibility of the continuance or suppression of the slave-trade rests upon that empire; and it may well be doubted whether the rights of national independence can be allowed to shelter one single state in the practice of a criminal traffic which all others have renounced and proscribed. At this very time, even the Minister of the United States at Rio de Janeiro has instituted proceedings in the courts of justice there against persons engaged in the slave-trade; and if neither humanity, reason, nor the true interest of the country can obtain the abolition of the traffic in Brazil, we trust that it will be demanded with authority by all nations, as the rightful claim of justice, and an essential part of the public law of the civilised world.

Our second cut will come in aid of the feelings likely to be raised by these considerations. It represents a party of recently-imported slaves, under guard, on their way to a Brazilian farm. We will not attempt its description, as the despair, idiocy, and outraged decency of the poor creatures is sufficiently apparent.

THE DUC DE BROGLIE.

HALT OF BRAZILIAN SLAVES.

Meantime the merchant prosecutes his trade
Without a qualm, or a reproach being made;
Sits at his desk, and with composure sends
A formal order to his Gold Coast friends
For some five hundred "bultos" of effects,
And bids them ship "the goods" as he directs.
That human cargo, to its full amount,
Is duly bought and shipp'd on his account;
Stow'd to the best advantage in the hold,
And limb and limb, in chains, as you behold;
On every breast, the well-known brand, J. G.
In letters bold, engraved on flesh, you see.
The slaves betimes are in their fetters used
To dance and sing, and forcibly amused,
To make the negroes merry when they pine,
Or seem to brood o'er some conceal'd design.
And when the voyage to its close draws near,
No pains are spared to make the slaves appear
In fit condition for the market stall.
Their limbs are greased, their heads are shaved, and all
These naked wretches, wasted as they are,
And mark'd with many a recent wound and scar,
Are landed boldly on the coast, and soon
Are penn'd, like cattle, in the barricone.
Trick'd out for sale, and huddled in a mass,
Exposed to every broker who may pass,
Rudely examined, roused with the "courbash,"
And walk'd, and run, and startled with the lash,
Or, ranged in line, are sold by parcel there,
Spectres of men! the pictures of despair.
Their owner comes; "the royal merchant" deigns
To view his chattels, and to count his gains.
To him what boots it how these slaves were made,
What wrongs the poor have suffer'd by his trade?
To him what boots it, if the sale is good,
How many perish'd in the fray of blood?
What cares the merchant for that crowded hold?
The voyage pays if half the slaves are sold!
What does it matter to that proud senor
How many sick have sunk to rise no more?
How many children in the waving throng,
Crush'd in the crowd, or trampled by the strong?
What boots it, in that dungeon of despair,
How many beings gasp and pant for air?
How many creatures draw infected breath,
And drag out life, ay, in the midst of death?
Yet to look down, my God, one instant there,
The shrieks and groans of that live mass to hear;
To breathe that horrid atmosphere, and dwell
But for one moment in that human hell:
It matters little, if he sell the sound,
How many sick, that might not sell, were drown'd?
How many wretched creatures pined away,
Or wasted bodies made their "plash" per day?
They're only negroes!—True, they count not here;
Perhaps their cries and groans may count elsewhere;

And One on high may say for these and all,
A price was paid, and it redeem'd from thrall.
If the proud "merchants who are princes" here
Believe his word, or his commandments fear,
How can they dare to advocate this trade,
Or call the sacred Scriptures to its aid?
How can they have the boldness to lay claim,
And boast their title to the Christian name?
Or yet pretend to walk in reason's light,
And wage eternal war with human right?

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED.

LADY STEPNEY.

This graceful and popular authoress was one of those ladies who have obtained for our female aristocracy high rank and standing in the literature of the day. Catherine Lady Stepney was the daughter of the Rev. Dr. Pollok, of Grittleton, in Wiltshire, the descendant of an ancient Scottish family, and himself a gentleman of remarkable attainments and profound erudition. He married a Miss Palmer, a Leicestershire heiress, and his two daughters (afterwards Mrs. Scottowe and Lady Stepney) imbibed from him, even in their childish days, an earnest thirst for learning. So strong, indeed, in this respect was their juvenile bent that their father, though a lover of books and a scholar, grew so fearful of ladies being too deeply read, that it is reported of him that he used to lock up his library, to prevent his daughters indulging too freely in their literary inclinations. His caution, however, proved of little avail. Lady Stepney, whose early letters, the production of one whom he considered a child, astonished him for their acuteness and vivacity, was hereafter to become a novelist; and Mrs. Scottowe, who, unfortunately, died at an early age, was distinguished for acquirements in the more abstruse pursuits of knowledge. The latter, when a mere girl, devoted herself to the severest studies, and would often, when the library door was barred, steal in at the window, to obtain the books of scientific research which were forbidden her: her journals, kept in German, French, and Italian, are such as have rarely originated in a woman's mind.

THE LATE LADY STEPNEY.

Lady Stepney married first, when very young, Russell Manners, Esq., a son of General Manners, and by him she leaves issue. Her second husband was Sir Thomas Stepney, Bart., the last male representative of the old and courtly family of the Stepneys, of Prendergast, in Pembrokeshire. His ancestor, John Stepney, was created a baronet by King James I., in 1621; and, through the union of the third baronet with the daughter and heiress of Sir Anthony Vandyke, the painter, who had married a grand-daughter of the Scottish Queen Margaret, sister of Henry VIII., the Stepneys mingled their blood with that of the Tudors and the Stuarts.

Sir Thomas Stepney died without issue, on the 12th September, 1825, when the baronetcy became extinct: and it was not until after his decease that Lady Stepney, a widow for the second time, appeared before the public in the character of an authoress. Her first novel was called "The New Road to Ruin:" this was followed by "The Heir Presumptive," and by another, entitled "The Courtier's Daughter." All her works are entertaining, and exhibit an observation cultivated by society, and a perfect knowledge of the world.

In private life, Lady Stepney was remarkable for her taste and love of the fine arts, and for her charming powers of conversation. Her house, a model in its way of the graceful and picturesque, formed the centre of a large circle of friends, and it was often wondered how the lady-author, so attractive and so sought after, found the time to write. Latterly, her ladyship became the prey of a long and severe illness, terminating in her death, which took place on the 14th instant, at her residence, in Henrietta-street, Cavendish-square.

ALEXANDRE SOUMET.

Literature in France has suffered a great loss in the recent death of Alexandre Soumet, one of the most eminent of the French tragic poets of the nineteenth century. M. Soumet was a native of the south of France, of that Provence, the country of the Troubadours and land of song, where first sprung into life the modern poetry of Western Europe. From his earliest youth he evinced a decided taste for the Muses; whilst a mere boy, he wrote verses which drew public attention to his abilities; and when scarcely of age he went to Paris to receive a crown of merit, from the Academie Française, of which he soon became a distinguished member. His touching and graceful elegies early gained him a high reputation; one of these, "La Pauvre Fille," is a chef d'œuvre of the sentimental style, and may fairly claim a lasting literary existence.

His next work was of a more animated tone; it bore for title, "L'Incredulité," and resembled, in earnest and pious fervour, the celebrated poem on religion by the younger Racine. Emboldened by the success of this production, Soumet took a higher flight, and, from an imitation of the son, proceeded to enter into rivalry with the genius and reputation of the father, Jean Racine, the great tragic poet of France. Adopting the plan of his illustrious model, M. Soumet wrote a series of tragedies on subjects taken either from classic story or the Bible—the latter, a sacred department of the dramatic art, which, in this country, was taken up so successfully by Mrs. Hannah Moore, and in which, it is to be regretted, more poets do not endeavour to excel. "Clytemnestra," and "Saul," by M. Soumet, are tragedies of surpassing beauty.

From dramatic to epic poetry the transition is natural enough; our author purposing to combine the style of Milton with that of Tasso, had employed his whole energies on a work in cantos, having for heroine the renowned Joan of Arc. But, alas! to celebrate the Maid of Orleans seems fatal to genius in France. His task approaches completion, when this great poet expires in the vigour of his age and talents, leaving a posthumous work, to rank perhaps in future ages with that immortal specimen of a sister art, the creation of Jeanne la Pucelle, which was chiseled by the hand of a Princess who perished in her youth. Joan, her victories, her innocence, and her dreadful death, form an all-engrossing episode in history; its romantic and melancholy interest will be enhanced not a little by the untimely termination to the life of the sculptor Marie of Wirtemberg, daughter of Louis Philippe, and by the early fate of this amiable, and in every respect excellent poet, Alexandre Soumet.

THE LATE THOMAS PHILLIPS, ESQ., R.A.

DELABERE PRITCHARD BLAINE.

Delabere Pritchard Blaine, a surgeon and naturalist of some eminence, was born in 1771. During the course of a long life of labour and industry, he produced various works of literary and professional merit; among others, we may mention his celebrated treatises on the Diseases of dogs and horses, and his Encyclopædia of Field Sports. Mr. Blaine died on the 1st inst., at his residence, Quay-street, Newport, Isle of Wight.

JOSEPH ANDREW DE LAUTOUR, ESQ.

Joseph Andrew De Lautour, Esq., of Hexton House, Herts, and Mudeford, Hants, High Sheriff of Hertfordshire in 1827, was distinguished for the fact that he was the representative in England of a branch of one of the oldest families in Europe, the great and ancient French house of De Latour, which boasts to have had among its members the famous Marshal of France, Henry de La Tour d'Auvergne, Viscomte de Turenne. The name of a "Sire de La Tour, Chevalier," occurs in French history so early as the year 900, and from that period to the present time, the De Latours have, in the reign of almost every monarch in France, been conspicuous and eminent either as warriors, priests, or statesmen.

Joseph François De Lautour, the father of the gentleman lately deceased, left France, his native country, early in life, came to England, and going thence to the East Indies, realised a fortune as a banker and merchant at Madras. Unable to return to his own land on account of the war, he finally settled in this country, and established his family here. His son and successor, the late Mr. De Lautour, born in Madras in 1785, adopted the military profession, and served for some time in the Grenadier Guards. He was also a magistrate for Hertfordshire, and a magistrate and deputy lieutenant in Bedfordshire. He married Caroline, only surviving daughter and heiress of William Young, Esq., son of Patrick, fifth Lord Elibank: by this lady he leaves four sons—one formerly, and one still, officers in the British army, and two in the East India Company's civil service; and four daughters, the eldest of whom is married to Colonel Louis Candido de Tavarez Ozorio, of the kingdom of Portugal. Mr. De Lautour died in France on the 28th ult., after a long and severe illness.

THOMAS PHILLIPS, ESQ., R.A.

The school of painting in England has to deplore, in the present week, another of its most eminent members, in the person of the Academician Phillips, who died, in the 75th year of his age, on Sunday last, and of whom we are enabled to present a very faithful portrait.

Mr. Phillips, who was a native of the town of Dudley, in Warwickshire, began his studies under the celebrated glass-stainer, Edgington, of Birmingham, with whom he remained some years, when, coming up to London, with an introduction to the President, West, he commenced portrait painting, at once, in the metropolis, with very tolerable success; and, pursuing that branch of the profession ably and indefatigably, he very soon acquired both proficiency and reputation. In 1809, he was elected a member of the Royal Academy of Painting, having, a few years before, had the honour of being chosen an associate. In 1821 he was placed in the Professor's chair of painting by the Academy, and from that delivered a course of lectures, universally acknowledged to be sound and able. These luminous discourses were subsequently published, and were esteemed worthy to range with the lectures of his great predecessors, Reynolds, Barry, and Fuseli. In 1830, Phillips, from the state of his health, was obliged to abandon his chair, but still continued to fulfil regularly the other duties of an Academician.

In 1844, he retired altogether from the toils of his profession, in which he had then achieved very great eminence as a portrait-painter, but did not long survive. He was attacked soon after by a disease, which, though at first not deemed alarming, proved eventually the cause of his death, which occurred on the 31st Anniversary of the Artists' General Benevolent Fund, an institution he was an active promoter of, and one of the Vice-Presidents.

Mr. Phillips leaves behind him an unblemished reputation, and a character for great benevolence. He married, soon after his establishment in London, a Scottish lady, by whom he had two sons and two daughters, who all survive him. His eldest son, Mr. J. Scott Phillips, has been for some years an officer in the Bengal Artillery.

Besides his lectures, Mr. Phillips wrote much on the arts; all the articles on the subject in "Rees's Cyclopædia" are from his pen, as are several essays in the other popular periodical works of his time.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT ON THE SHEFFIELD AND ASHTON RAILWAY.

A very lamentable accident has occurred in the neighbourhood of Ashton under-Lyne, by the falling of nine arches on that branch of the Sheffield and Manchester Railway.

About twelve months ago, the contractors for the Ashton Branch Railway commenced operations, and proceeded with the works to the entire satisfaction of the company. The line, which is only about two miles long, was nearly completed, and was to have been opened this summer. It was a double branch line, connecting the important towns of Ashton and Stalybridge with Manchester, and passed over a portion of the town of Ashton upon twenty arches, crossing the Huddersfield and Manchester canal and the river Tame on its way. The arches were built of stone, and appeared to be very substantial and well constructed, every one of which has been finished for some time, and the workmen were levelling the line with a view of having the rails laid down almost immediately. About thirty men were engaged in this work, and their labours were fast drawing to completion. On Saturday afternon, however, about three o'clock, nine of the arches gave way with a most tremendous crash, carrying with them the whole of the men employed upon the line and several buildings contiguous to the scene of this most distressing accident.

The first arch which gave way was that over the river Tame, on which several men were employed. The shrieks and cries of the unfortunate men were pitiful in the extreme, and in another moment were followed by eight arches, every one of which became a mass of ruins, burying beneath the fallen materials a large number of navigators and other labourers employed. The scene at this moment was most distressing, not only on account of the sacrifice of human life, but also on account of the perilous situation of those who were precipitated into the river over which the arch passed. The news of the accident, as a matter of course, spread in all directions, and numerous exaggerated reports were circulated.

Upwards of 100 men and a large number of horses were engaged during the whole of Sunday in removing the fallen materials, and up to nine o'clock twelve persons were found in the ruins, nine of whom were killed on the spot. The remaining three were taken out alive, but two of them are so severely injured that very little hopes are entertained of their recovery. From the best possible information to be obtained, there are from 18 to 20 persons killed, most of whom are single men.

The loss to the contractors is estimated at from £3000 to £4000.

The names of those who have been found dead are—George Collier, 45; James Bradbury, 26; John Cox, 35; Henry Rogers, 27; George Smith, 30; Samuel Smith (brother to George), 26; Adam Nowell, 20; William Leonard, 30, single men; Abraham Nowell, 47, father of Adam Nowell, who has left a wife and four children.

Taken out alive:—Charles Critchley, Richard Critchley, and Thomas Brown.

There were nine arches, which formed the viaduct over the river Tame and the valley through which it runs. These arches were supported by piers of 28 feet long, 4 feet 6 inches thick at the spring of the arch, and 6 feet 6 inches thick at the base. The span of each arch was 30 feet, and a rise from the spring of 7 feet 6 inches. They were all built of stone got in the neighbourhood, which is said to be of good quality. Some of the piers were founded on rock, and others upon what appeared to be solid clay.

On Tuesday afternoon an inquest was held at the Albion Inn, Ashton, before Mr. M. S. Rutter, on the bodies of the unfortunate men who were killed. There was no evidence of any novel character brought forward at the inquest. Several witnesses were called to identify the bodies, but none to speak to the cause of the accident. The only witness of consequence was Henry Morton, who deposed that he was in the viaduct a few minutes before the accident occurred. He was on the Lancashire side of the river, and observed a crack in the middle of the third arch from the abutment on that side, but apprehended no danger from it. The men had been laughing and talking about it, but none seemed to care any thing about it. He was quite sure the crack had not been there long or it would have been seen by himself and others.

Mr. Thomas Lomas—Had been an overlooker on the line for twelve months, but never apprehended any danger from the works; thought they were sufficiently strong for the purpose, and could positively say that the last had been completed about three weeks ago.

At the same hour an inquest was held at the Queen's Arms Inn, on the Cheshire side of the river, by Mr. C. Hudson, on the bodies of the sufferers who were taken out on that side of the water. In each case verdicts of "Accidental death" were returned. The inquiry was adjourned to Wednesday next, the 30th, to afford time for inquiry.

A letter from Ashton, dated Tuesday night, says:—"In the course of today three more of the bodies have been recovered by the unwearied exertions of the men who are employed in removing the fallen materials. The last was taken out from near the bed of the river, to which, in one part, the workmen have reached, the water being banked off by the stones, &c., of the fallen arches. It seems now to be pretty well understood that only two more of the workmen are still missing, and supposed to be under the ruins. One of those who were taken out alive has since died in the Manchester Infirmary, to which he had been removed, there being no public institution in Ashton for the reception of such cases. The funeral of seven of the deceased took place this afternoon, in the parish churchyard, and was attended by an immense crowd of spectators. The bodies were followed by the whole of the men who had been employed on the line at the time of the accident.'

THE BATTLE OF CULLODEN.

(To the Editor.)

Thinking it may interest your readers, I take the liberty of sending you the following information—this being the centenary anniversary of the famous insurrection of '45, though the battle of Culloden did not take place till this day in '46. In the church of Ifield, near Crawley, are the housings worn at the battle of Culloden by the famous Duke of Cumberland: they form the hangings of the reading-desk and pulpit; and the pulpit cushion is that which bore his coronet at his funeral. The late vicar of Ifield, the Rev. Spencer Lewin, who died in 1842, at the age of seventy-six, who was also lay rector, and in whose mother's family the property had been for many years, related to me that he had often been told this tradition by his grandfather, Mr. Nicholas Spencer, who died April, 1783, and lies buried in this church:—He received the property from a Mrs. Harsnett, who left it first to her brother, Mr. Henry Peck, for life, but he died without issue. This Mr. Peck was buried, December 12, 1748, in Ifield Church; he belonged to St. Margaret's, Westminster, and I have heard that he was a saddler. Hence, perhaps, he may have purchased the housings, and the cushion may have been purchased after the duke's funeral by Mr. Spencer, who, as well as Mr. Peck, was a liberal benefactor to the Church. I never heard exactly whether they were the gift of Mr. Peck or Mr. Spencer. Of Mr. Peck I find a memorandum on a blank sheet in the Registers—"Sept. 15, 1733, Mr. Peck generously gave to us a church bible, as SHE did likewise before some communion plate" (who this SHE is, is not very evident). Mr. Spencer, subsequently, gave the parish the pews of St. Margaret's, Westminster, when that church was repaired during the last century; and the church is NOW pewed with those same pews, but in very bad repair. We have gilt lions and crowns all over the church, which were the ornaments of the pew of the Speaker of the House of Commons; and in the rectory pew are the Speaker's prayer-books, with the arms of England and Westminster on the covers. The hangings of the pulpit and reading-desk have often attracted notice, from being scarlet instead of the usual church colour, crimson; but the cushion is crimson, and with velvet on both sides, whereas, usual pulpit cushions have moreen or stuff on the under side. We have some other curiosities.

A CONSTANT READER.

Ifield, April 16, 1845.

 A spirited Engraving of the Battle of Culloden will be found in No. 103 of our Journal.

A letter has been received at Havre from the captain of the Latour d'Auvergne, of that port, stating that he has discovered on the south-western coast of Africa, on an island which is not named, a bed of guano, superior in quality even to that of Ichaboe. The quantity, however, is small.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1845.

THE Maynooth debate closed on Friday last, when the second reading of the bill was carried by a majority of 147—a large number, considering the excitement against the measure among the constituencies, which will peril the seats of many of those who voted for it, at the next election.

The debate, under another form, was renewed on Wednesday, upon Mr. Ward's resolution, which, if carried, would pledge the House to take the grant out of the funds already applicable to ecclesiastical purposes in Ireland—that is, out of the revenues of the Established Church. The grant from the Consolidated Fund was carried for the Government by the assistance of the Opposition: of that there can be no doubt. It was supported by a minority only of the Conservative party itself. But Mr. Ward's motion will resolve parties back again into their natural condition, and restore them to their own relative proportions. The Liberals who voted for the "Appropriation Clause" of the Whig Ministry, will not all give their assent to this proposal, because, in the first place, it does not deal with an ascertained "surplus," but with the present revenue of the establishment as it stands; and in the second, it proposes to apply a part of those revenues, not to the purposes of general education, in which all might participate, but to the support of the priests of another church exclusively. The Conservatives must necessarily unite against it: it will be defeated by a large majority.

The debate commenced on Wednesday, was adjourned, the proposition gaining in importance by the support it received from Lord John Russell.

A BILL has originated in the House of Lords, which will remove an anomaly in our law often complained of. A person sustaining a bodily injury from the carelessness or inattention of others, can sue and recover damages; but, if death is the result of the same misconduct, a family bereaved of its means of support cannot recover a farthing: a sort of fine is inflicted, in the shape of a deodand, as often evaded as paid—and, even when paid, as it goes to that huge receiver-general, the Crown, it is utterly useless to the injured parties. As in some other matters, they manage these things better in France; but it is now proposed somewhat to assimilate our practice to theirs, and apply the principle of the law that operates in cases of accident causing wounds or mutilation, to cases of accident causing death. This is the object of a bill introduced by Lord Lyttelton, the want of which has long been felt, and, as it is supported, except in some points of detail, by the Lord Chancellor, there is every prospect of its becoming a law, unless it is thrown out in the Commons by the railway interest, fearful of future life annuities being entailed by it on their property, to the diminution of dividends.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER MAJESTY'S STATE VISIT TO DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

The Royal command given by her Majesty to the lessee of this establishment for the performances on Thursday evening, being the first state visit since the present management, induced Mr. Bunn to prepare for the reception of the Queen and Prince Albert in a manner worthy the occasion. From the flagstones to the Royal entrance in Russell-street was laid a new Brussels carpet; and from the staircase to the waiting-room a rich crimson cloth covering was arranged in emblematical designs, on the walls and ceiling, with festoons of blue and white satin and gold cord. The staircase was covered also with crimson cloth. Tripods, lighted, were arranged in various parts of the entrance and staircase.

The state-room was lined with buff and gold patterns, and the floor covered with a rich crimson cloth. A profusion of splendid mirrors adorned this apartment, in the centre of which was suspended a brilliant chandelier, in addition to six large gilt candelabra. A number of costly vases filled with the choicest exotics were also disposed in various parts of the chamber, and bouquets of flowers in gilt stands formed a portion of the arrangement, together with various articles of superb furniture. The Royal box, which was on the right hand of the stage, and over the orchestra, was fitted up with white draperies on the wall and ceiling, arranged in fluted columns; the floor covered with crimson.

The box extended three feet from the usual position it occupies on other nights, and was covered with velvet, in the centre of which were the Royal arms, in burnished gold, surmounted by a canopy of gold and silver, from which extended the figure of Fame, holding an elaborately-arranged drapery of velvet and gold, with wreaths of flowers, forming the Royal initials. A small and elegant lustre stood at the back of the box, and on two or-molu tables, ornamented with burnished gold, were vases and flowers, which completed, with the Royal chair, the furniture of the box. The two boxes on a line with her Majesty's, on this occasion were thrown into one, and furnished in a corresponding state of splendour, befitting the reception of her Majesty's state officers.

Her Majesty, and Prince Albert and suite, arrived at the theatre at seven o'clock, and were received at the Royal entrance by Mr. Bunn and Mr. Cooper, the stage-manager, in Court dresses, by whom the Royal pair were attended to their box. Her Majesty was received with great enthusiasm by a brilliant and crowded audience; and the National Anthem having been sung, the performances commenced with the opera of "Guillaume Tell," in which Duprez sung and acted with even more than his wonted vigour and taste; and her Majesty and the Prince appeared highly gratified with the performances. The after-piece was the operatic drama of "Clari."

THE QUEEN'S LEVEE.—Her Majesty held a Levee at St. James's Palace on Wednesday, which was most numerously attended. The fineness of the weather, and the interest exhibited to witness the brilliant spectacle, caused many thousands of her Majesty's loyal subjects to assemble in the Park at an early hour. Shortly before two o'clock, the Queen and Prince Albert, attended by the Great Officers of the Court and Household, and escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards, left Buckingham Palace for St. James's. On her Majesty's arrival, the military bands stationed in the gardens of the Palace played the National Anthem. The Sovereign and her illustrious Consort were loudly cheered as they passed through the Park. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, attended by Mr. Edmond Mildmay, his Royal Highness the Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, his Serene Highness Prince Ernest of Hesse Philippsthal, and his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar attended the Levee. Her Majesty received the foreign ambassadors and a long list of the nobility and gentry. A number of petitions and addresses were presented to the Queen against the union of the sees of Bangor and St. Asaph. After the Levee, her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the Royal suite, returned to Buckingham Palace.

HER MAJESTY'S RETURN TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—A correspondent at the Isle of Wight says, her Majesty will be at Osborne, on the 5th of May. Orders have been received at the dockyard to get the Royal yacht ready by that day. Letters have also been received from Lady Blachford, the late owner of Osborne, directing the furniture to remain at Osborne until after the 10th of May, so that it is presumed her Majesty will remain till that period.

THE DUCHESS OF KENT'S DINNER PARTY.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent had a dinner party on Wednesday, at her residence, Clarence House, St. James's. The company consisted of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge; their Royal Highnesses the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz; his Serene Highness Prince Ernest of Hesse Philippsthal; his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar; M. Dedel, the Netherlands Minister; Count Kielmannsegge, the Hanoverian Minister; the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch; the Earl and Countess of Delawarr, the Earl and Countess of Jersey, the Earl and Countess of Dalhousie; Baron d'Arniam; Lord and Lady Beauvale; the Equerry in Waiting to the Duke of Cambridge; Lady Anna Maria Dawson; the Countess Wratislaw, and Colonel Sir George Couper. Her Royal Highness had afterwards an evening party. Her Majesty and Prince Albert (attended by the Royal suite) and the Royal Family were present.

Lady Charlotte Dundas, sister to the Earl of Zetland, has resigned her situation as one of the three Ladies of the Bedchamber to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent.

Ensuing Marriage in High Life.—The preliminaries of a marriage are arranged between Lord Algernon St. Maur, the third son of the Duke of Somerset, and the daughter of Mr. Morier. We understand that the ceremony will take place in about six weeks.

Indisposition of Lord Melbourne.—We regret to announce that Viscount Melbourne has lately been suffering from indisposition, chiefly arising, we believe, from an accident which befel his lordship a few evenings since, on alighting from his carriage at the door of his mansion in South street. The noble viscount, it appears, caught his foot in the folds of a cloak in which he was enveloped, the consequence being, that he fell heavily upon the stone steps leading to the hall of the mansion. The whole of his lordship's left side was very badly bruised by the fall, and he has also suffered from the gout, but he has since been able to take carriage airings.

A Debutante in High Life.—At her Majesty's next drawing-room, on the 5th of May, Lady Blanche Somerset, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, is expected to make her début.

The Queen Dowager.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager received a distinguished circle at dinner, on Monday evening, at Marlborough House.

Death of Lady Isabella L. King.—We have to announce the death of the above lady, who died on Sunday morning, at Rock Ferry, Cheshire. Her ladyship was only surviving daughter of Edward first Earl of Kingston, and great aunt of the present earl.

Death of Lady Ridley.—We regret to have to record the premature death of Lady Ridley, wife of Sir Matthew White Ridley, Bart., and only surviving daughter of Baron Parke, who expired on Sunday last at Blagden Hall, the hon. baronet's seat, near Newcastle, Northumberland. We hear that her ladyship was confined only a few weeks back, and that she has been ailing ever since.

Funeral of the late Earl of Abergavenny.—In consequence of the family vault at East Grinstead being filled, the remains of the late Earl of Abergavenny were, on Tuesday last, deposited in a new vault under the family pew, at Frant Church.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Return of Dr. Wolff from Bokhara.—On Sunday morning a sermon was preached at Trinity Church, Gray's Inn road, by the celebrated Rev. Joseph Wolff, D.D., who has arrived in England from Bokhara. The rev. gentleman preached a most eloquent discourse from the 1st chapter of St. Luke, 30th to 33d verses inclusive, to a numerous congregation. After the service a collection was made on behalf of the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, and also for the Society for Promoting the Employment of Additional Curates in Populous Places, which amounted to £37 4s. At the conclusion of the service, and as the rev. gentleman took his departure from the church, a great number of persons were collected round the doors anxious to pay their respects to the celebrated and devoted philanthropist, with many of whom he cordially shook hands.

Sale of the Fleet Prison.—On Monday, the second portion of the sale of building materials of this "town in miniature" was resumed; the portions sold were the materials comprising the chapel, the coffee and wine rooms, and the northern wing of the prison. The produce of the day's sale was upwards of £1000.

The Additional Grant to Maynooth.—What is termed an "aggregate Protestant meeting" was held on Tuesday evening at Exeter Hall, the Marquis of Breadalbane in the chair. After letters from the Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell and other gentlemen, apologising for their absence, had been read, four resolutions were severally proposed and seconded by the Rev. T. Robinson (rector of St. Andrew's, Holborn), the Rev. A. Tidman, the Rev. C. J. Goodheart (of Reading), Mr. Edward Baines, jun. (of Leeds, a Dissenter), Mr. Cumming, the Rev. T. Mortimer, Sir Culling Eardley Smith, Bart.; Mr. W. Chalmers (a minister of the Free Kirk of Scotland), Mr. J. C. Evans (a Dissenter), Dr. Bennett (a Wesleyan minister), and the Rev. J. Burns. The resolutions expressed surprise and indignation that the House of Commons should have agreed to the second reading of the bill in spite of the public opinion shown in the numerous petitions against the measure; declared that the persons composing the meeting, though differing on other important subjects, were unanimous in opposing "the endowment of Popery, as at once involving guilt and peril;" approved the step taken by the Central Anti-Maynooth committee, in calling together the London Protestant deputations from all parts of the United Kingdom, in order to take measures for defeating the bill; and offered the acknowledgments of the meeting to those Members of Parliament who formed the minority on the division of Saturday morning. Several other similar meetings have taken place in the metropolis during the week.

The London Art Union.—The anniversary meeting of this body was held at Drury Lane Theatre on Tuesday. It was a very crowded one, and the proceedings excited considerable interest. The Duke of Cambridge took the chair amidst the cheers of the spectators. He was accompanied by his Serene Highness the Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz. There were also present upon the stage Sir C. Hopkinson, Sir G. Drummond, Admiral Sykes, Mr. Alderman Humphery, M.P.; Alderman Wilson, Mr. B. B. Cabbell, Captain Vernon, &c., and the following members of the Royal Academy:—Messrs. Deering, T. Uwins, Witherington, E. Landseer, Maclise, and Sir R. Westmacott, besides many literary gentlemen and supporters of the fine arts, and many ladies.—His Royal Highness expressed his gratification, that during the last year the subscriptions and contributions to the objects of the institution were increased upwards of £600, and that the whole amount subscribed was £15,400. The subscriptions of the first year of the establishment of the institution were £490; it might, then, be said, the institution was thriving. He (the Duke of Cambridge) hoped it would continue so to do. (Cheers). His Royal Highness having concluded, amidst loud cheering, the Secretary read the report, from which it appeared that the institution was progressing in success, though the misapprehension that Lord Monteagle's act, under which the distribution of that day was made, had in some degree operated upon that success, from the notion that no fresh act would be passed to place the association on a firm and permanent basis, whereas, there was every reason to believe that this would be effected by an act of Parliament to be brought in by the Right Hon. T. Wyse. The list of provincial and foreign secretaries had been increased, and now amounted to 338 persons. The prizeholders of last year had purchased 252 works of art. With regard to the selection, it was the painful duty of the committee to reprobate, in the strongest terms, the conduct of one of the prizeholders, who had sought unworthily to divert the funds of the association from their proper course for his own pecuniary advantage. His scheme had failed; but the committee deemed it right to make the regulations as to selection more stringent than they were before. The engraving due to the subscribers of last year, the "Castle of Ischia," would be delivered after the 7th of May next. The report went on to show the state of the finances of the association. It was unanimously adopted. The drawing for the prizes was then commenced,—Messrs. W. H. Roper, R.A., and Mr. Haggard assisting as scrutinizers, and Miss White and Miss Ray acting as the drawers of the tickets from the wheel.

New Lord of the Treasury.—Mr. Pringle having resigned the office of Lord of the Treasury because he could not vote for the Maynooth College Bill, Mr. W. F. Mackenzie, M.P. for Peebleshire, has received the appointment.

The Judges at St. Paul's Cathedral.—On Sunday, the first Sunday in Easter Term, the judges and several corporation functionaries, &c., attended Divine service at St. Paul's Cathedral, and the scene was one of the most impressive witnessed for some years. The Bishop of London preached, and selected his text from the 1st of Philippians, 21st verse.

Royal Society of Literature.—At the anniversary meeting, held on Thursday last, it was announced that the Earl of Ripon, President of the Board of Controul, had resigned the office of President, in consequence of the press of official business. The vacant office was filled up by the appointment of Henry Hallam, Esq., the eminent historian. The presents of new works during the year had been considerable, and her Majesty was amongst the list of subscribers to the amount of £100.

Westminster Improvements.—By a bill now before Parliament, it is proposed to carry out the project for a more direct communication between the neighbourhood of the Houses of Lords and Commons and that of Buckingham Palace, by means of a new street, eighty feet wide, from the Broad Sanctury, at the western front of the Abbey, to Shaftesbury-terrace, in the parish of St. Peter. The advantage to be obtained will not be limited to a convenient thoroughfare between points of increasing importance, but will comprise also a beneficial opening through a crowded and dilapidated district, long notorious as a haunt of crime. The localities to be traversed are, Little Dean-street, the Great Almonry, the Little Almonry, Jeffrey's-buildings, Cooper's-street, and Duck-lane. The bill seeks to empower the formation of a body of local commissioners, under guarantee of qualification and security, to carry out the design; and authorises the raising of a sum, not exceeding £100,000, on the credit of the rates in the district. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests are to aid the project by a supply of £39,000, with a further sum of £11,000 contingent on approval of the manner in which the improvements are completed.

Mortality of London.—The total number of deaths in the metropolis during the week ending last Saturday, as made up by the Registrar-General, was 928; and the number of births in the same period, 1,319. The weekly average of deaths during the past five years has been 936, and of the last five springs 888.

The Division upon the Maynooth Grant.—The Hibernia steamer sailed from Liverpool on Saturday afternoon for the United States. An express, with copies of The Illustrated London News, containing a report of the important debate and proceedings in the House of Commons on Friday night, reached Liverpool in the course of the day, and was despatched by the steamer.

Suicide at Camden Town.—At six o'clock on Tuesday morning some persons passing across Hawley-fields, near the Railway Tavern, Hampstead-road, discovered the dead body of a man beside a heap of newly-cut turf; in one of his hands was a rusty old pistol, with which the deed had been perpetrated, and the head was shattered to pieces. The pockets were searched by two policemen, but nothing calculated to afford information as to deceased's name or connections was found, the contents consisting of a small key, a pair of spectacles, some scraps of paper, and an empty snuff box. Deceased had on a velveteen shooting jacket with a great coat over it, a pair of blue trousers, and Wellington boots. He appeared about 45.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Death of a Veteran General Officer.—General Robertson, one of the oldest officers in the army, and who saw distinguished service in the last century, recently died at Edinburgh. From the date of his entering the army as a lieutenant of the 73rd Foot, on the 23rd of December, 1777, this gallant officer could not be much less than ninety years of age.

Death of Sir George C. Hoste, C.B.—We regret to announce the death of the above distinguished officer, who expired on Monday evening at Woolwich-common, from the combined effects of asthma and gout, under which he has suffered for some months past. The deceased officer filled the important post of Colonel-Commandant of Royal Engineers, at Woolwich.

Defence of Portsmouth Harbour.—The engineers and artillery are still busy strengthening the defences of Portsmouth Harbour. Southsea Castle has undergone some alteration and repairs. For a long time past this fortress has been without a single mounted gun, but the embrasures round the walls now bristle with formidable cannon. Within the last three weeks twenty-seven guns have been mounted; those facing to seaward being long 32 pounder ship guns, and those pointing inland long 24-pounder guns. On the top of the Castle, which is a square splinter-proof tower, four long 24-pounder guns are up, and will be mounted as pivot guns, to fire over the high parapet wall which surrounds the top, making in all thirty-one guns, the greater part of which commands the narrow part of the entrance opposite the Spit-buoy, and thereby constitutes one of the principal defences of the harbour.

Launching of her Majesty's Frigate Alarm, and the Lady Petrie East Indiaman.—On Wednesday there were two splendid launches on the river Thames, one at the Royal Dockyard at Sheerness, namely, that of the frigate Alarm, 26 guns; and the other, a large Indiaman, named the Lady Petrie, at Limehouse. The Alarm was christened by Miss Arthur, the daughter of the captain-superintendent of the dock, in the presence of a very large muster of naval and military officers and a vast concourse of civilians. Her dimensions are correctly described as follows:—Length between the perpendiculars, 131 feet; length of the keel per tonnage, 106 feet ½ inch; extreme breadth, 40 feet 6 inches; burden in tons, 911 12 94. The launch of the Lady Petrie, Indiaman, which is upwards of six hundred tons burthen, took place from the yard of Messrs. Curling and Young, at Limehouse. She is the property of Mr. J. Somes, M.P., the extensive shipowner; and a very fashionable company were present to witness the event. Lady Petrie officiated in naming the vessel after herself.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

Suicide at Mitcham.—An inquest was held on Monday, at the Nag's Head, Mitcham, by Mr. W. Carter, on the body of Mr. W. J. Chart, an auctioneer residing at the above village, who destroyed himself on the Friday morning previous. It appeared, from the evidence, that for some time past the deceased had been in a desponding state, and on the morning in question he was missed by the family soon after breakfast, and, on a search being made, he was found hanging in the loft over the stables, suspended by a horse halter from one of the rafters, and quite dead. The son-in-law of the deceased deposed, that for a considerable time his mind had appeared very much affected, and on the Tuesday before he committed the act his conduct and language were altogether incoherent, and he considered that his mind was wandering. Some other evidence, of a similar character, having been adduced, the jury returned a verdict, that the deceased destroyed himself, being at the time of unsound mind.

Fatal Accident to a Railway Workman.—An inquest was held on Monday, by Mr. Carter, at the Windmill, Croydon-common, on the body of a labouring man named William Davis, who was killed upon the Dover Railway on Friday morning. It appeared that the deceased was one of the men employed upon the works at present going on near the Croydon and Brighton Junction Line, for the purpose of carrying out the atmospheric principle of locomotion, and he was returning to his work from dinner, about one o'clock, at the time a down train to Brighton and an up train from Dover were passing upon the line. The deceased was walking between the up rails, and it is supposed that the noise of the down train prevented him from hearing the other; for although he was repeatedly called to, he took no notice, and the engine struck him to the ground, the wheels going over him, and he was almost instantly crushed to death. Not the slightest blame appeared to attach to the guard, driver, or any person connected with the train; and the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

The Late Robbery at the Railway Station at Reading.—On Saturday morning Thomas Henry Robinson and Ann Harriet Southall, the former charged with stealing and the latter with receiving a £50 Bank of England note, the property of the Great Western Railway Company, were brought up to the public office, before the magistrates for this borough, for final examination. The magistrates committed Robinson for trial at the adjourned borough sessions, to be held on the 9th of May. An application was made by Mr. Carrington to admit the prisoner to bail, which was objected to by Mr. Williams, who appeared for the prosecution; the Bench, however, assented, and stated that he would be discharged from custody upon his finding two securities in £100 each, and himself in £200, to appear at the sessions, and to give forty-eight hours' notice of his security. Southall was liberated upon entering into her own recognizance of £50 to be present at the next sessions.

Accident on the Grand Junction Railway.—On Sunday morning early, an accident occurred at the Stafford station of the line. The pointsman, George Scott, was handing over to the engineer of a train just starting a statement of the number of carriages, as is usual on the departure of every train, when unfortunately he slipped off the parapet, and fell under the wheels of the engine then in motion. His left arm was literally severed from his body, and his left leg so crushed as to render immediate amputation necessary. The poor fellow was carried to the infirmary, where the limb was taken off, the poor man enduring his sufferings with remarkable fortitude. We are happy to say he is likely to survive, the symptoms being as favourable as can be expected.

Singular Accident.—On Tuesday evening Mr. W. Payne held an inquest at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the body of William Brown, aged 27, a bookseller's warehouseman. It appeared that on Tuesday fortnight the deceased was smoking a pipe at the Cooper's Arms, Old Fish-street hill, when, in passing along the passage, he missed his footing, and fell forward, striking the pipe against a door. The deceased fell with such violence as to force about two inches of the pipe into the carotid artery. He did not apply for medical assistance on meeting with the accident, but went to bed. The following day he was received into the hospital, where he remained until Monday last, when he died from the effects of the injuries received. Verdict, "Accidental death."

Fatal Accident to a Stoker of the Great Britain.—On Tuesday afternoon, shortly before her Majesty's arrival on board the Great Britain, the body of a fine-looking man, attired as a sailor, was discovered floating up the river close to Blackwall pier. The Thames Police towed it ashore, and it was identified as that of a stoker belonging to the Great Britain steamer, who was lost as long as six weeks ago. The unfortunate man, it appears, was about proceeding from the shore to his vessel in a boat, when he accidentally fell overboard, and perished before assistance could be rendered him. The firing of the cannon, it is conjectured, caused the body to float, and it is somewhat singular that this should have taken place at so interesting a period, and so near the spot where he perished.

Attempt at Murder and Robbery.—On Monday night last, Mrs. Meredith, the wife of a gentleman residing at No. 196, Upper Thames-street, on going into her bed-room, between twelve and one o'clock, was much alarmed at finding a strange man standing in the room. Mrs. Meredith, with great presence of mind, was withdrawing from the room, when the villain rushed on her, and attempted to stab her in her kneck with a knife. On seeing him raising the knife she seized his arm, and in the scuffle her hand was cut, and the ruffian, extricating himself from her grasp, ran down stairs from the second floor, and effected his escape by the front door before any person could come to her assistance. The perpetrator of the outrage is described as being about forty years of age, rather tall, dark complexion, and dark whiskers, dressed in dark clothes. His coat is supposed to have been torn up the back, and the front of his shirt to be stained with blood from his having been seized there during Mrs. Meredith's endeavours to detain him.

Explosion in High Holborn.—On Wednesday morning, shortly after seven o'clock, an explosion of gas took place upon the premises of Mr. G. Thorpe, the Robin Hood Tavern, No. 281, High Holborn. It appears that shortly after the Robin Hood had been opened, the inmates were terrified by hearing a loud explosion, and an instant afterwards they found that the shop window had been blown out, and sent completely across the roadway, and had fallen against the front of the opposite houses. The inmates of the adjoining houses, many of whom were in bed at the time, were so alarmed, that they rushed forth into the street in their night clothes. The explosion was attended with a serious destruction of property, and the neighbours were much frightened. Mrs. Whitehorn, a lady residing at 19, Featherstone-buildings, was for some time considered past all means of recovery; fortunately, however, she ultimately rallied, and is now pronounced out of danger. The servants of Mr. Thorpe state that none of the gas burners had been lighted at the time. Mr. Thorpe himself considers that the accident was caused from a defect in one of the joints of the connecting main and gas-meter in the area. The damage done at the Robin Hood was of course the most extensive, the whole front of the shop being blown out, besides other parts of the building injured. Several shops in the neighbourhood also had panes of glass broken.

Mr. Kirk, the sculptor, died on Saturday morning at his house in Granby-row, Dublin.

Funeral of the Marquis of Downshire.—The funeral cortège of the late Marquis of Downshire passed through Dublin on Monday morning, en route to Hillsborough. The procession comprised six mourning coaches (in the first of which the present Marquis of Downshire was seated). A considerable number of horsemen, the tenantry of the Downshire estates, in the county of Wicklow, followed, wearing scarfs and hatbands.

THE HAMPSTEAD MURDER.

Some reports were in circulation on Thursday to the effect that a young man had given himself up to the custody of the police, who had acknowledged that he had been concerned in the murder of Mr. Delarue. It appears that he had written some letters to the convict Hocker, and this strengthened the supposition. The affair is at present involved in mystery, and we therefore forbear from giving circulation to the surmises which have been spread, particularly as the prisoner is about to be examined before the magistrates. Some of the police imagine that the object of this man is only to obtain notoriety.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Letters from Copenhagen state that the King of Denmark, while taking a walk on the 8th inst. had the misfortune to fall, from the effects of which his Majesty's knee was severely injured. Leeches had been applied, and according to the latest accounts from the Danish capital his Majesty was progressing favourably.

On the 18th inst. a young man of the name of Guilliame Joseph Doirvilliers, aged 17, was executed for parricide at Namur. He had murdered his father, an old farmer, 60 years of age, in a passion. He was executed at six o'clock in the morning on a platform, the whole of the married men of the town attending, and reading prayers for the murderer. The spectacle is described as having been of the most affecting character.

The King of Prussia left Berlin on the 13th to join his Royal Consort at Dresden, where her Majesty has been staying on a visit to her Royal sister, the Queen of Saxony. Previous to the King's departure his Majesty, attended by the Princes of Prussia, the Ministers of State, the military and civic authorities, repaired to the Brandenburg gate, at Potsdam, to witness the laying of the foundation stone of a new church to be built near that locality.

An act of the most wanton and barbarous character was perpetrated on a native Coptic Christian some days ago, at Damietta. This person was accused of having spoken slightingly of the Mahomedan religion, and the populace collected round him, gave him 500 lashes, paraded him naked through the streets mounted on a buffalo, with two dead dogs and a pig attached to his legs and shoulders, and afterwards beat him until he expired under the effects of the punishment. The European consuls have taken it up strongly, but the punishment inflicted on the principals has been limited to a five years' incarceration in the Castle of Aboukir!

The calamity of inundation that has fallen upon several provinces did not spare the town of Frankfort. The business of the great Easter fair has somewhat suffered from this calamity. Another disastrous accident has also befallen this town by the outbreak of a great fire, destroying several houses, and putting the whole city in an extraordinary alarm.

One of the letters by the Overland Mail says, "Railroads for India seem to be attracting the attention of the public both in England and in this country. As yet the only definite project before the public here is for a short line on the Bombay side, the patrons of which, however, seem to be waiting for the countenance and assistance of Government."

M. Guizot lately sent M. Rossi to Rome to negociate with the General of the Jesuits, Father Rootham, that he should withhold his assent to the fathers of that order establishing themselves at Lucerne. Father Rootham said he would refer the matter to the Pope, and abide by his decision.

Puckler Muskau has sold his estate, and with it his title of noblesse, to Count Edmund Hasfeldt Weisweiller, for 1,708,150 dollars.

The Journal des Débats publishes the following extract from a letter dated Copenhagen, the 11th inst.—"Doctor Witthusen, one of the Government physicians of Thorshanu, the capital of the Fereo Islands, who has lately arrived in our capital, states that during the memory of man there has not been experienced in the northern countries so mild a winter as the last. To his astonishment, when he approached the south he found the cold become every day more intense, and the navigation impeded by large masses of floating ice."

The electric telegraph between Paris and Rouen is completed, and will be brought into use in a few days.

The Augsburgh Gazette states, on the authority of a letter from Rome, that Count Trapani has declined to become a suitor for the hand of Queen Isabella II. of Spain.

Honduras papers to the 23rd of February contain accounts of another revolution in Guatemala city, and this time, for a wonder, a bloodless one. In the absence of General Carrera, chief of the republic, Monteroso, the former commandant of the city, had managed his escape from prison, and at the head of some hundreds of the disaffected, took possession of that capital. After two or three days, however, he evacuated it and marched on Quesaltenango, after levying a contribution of a few thousand dollars on the merchants. Property and persons were otherwise respected.

On the 8th instant the King of Denmark had a fall whilst walking, whereby he severely bruised his knee, but leeches being promptly applied, no serious result was feared.

Count de Latour-Maubourg, the French Ambassador at the Holy See, died on the 18th inst., at Marseilles, where he had arrived a few days before, on his way from Rome.

On Wednesday, a Court of Directors was held at the India House, when H. Dickinson, Esq., was appointed a provisional councillor for Madras, onthe vacancy occasioned by the decease of John Dent, Esq.

Proposed Repeal Meeting and Banquet at Cork.—Mr. O'Connell has accepted an invitation to attend a repeal meeting and dinner at Cork, on the 1st of June. He is to make a public entry into the city on the previous day.

Lieut.-General the Earl Cathcart, appointed Commander of the Forces in North America, will proceed to Quebec, en route to Montreal, in the Vesuvius steam sloop. Major Douglas, 79th Foot, will accompany the gallant commander as his lordship's aide-de-camp.

The French Press and the Grant to Maynooth.—The Journal des Débats, which at first blamed Sir Robert Peel for adopting the liberal policy of the Whigs in respect to Ireland, now says—"We should be sorry to see the impartial explanation that we have thought it our duty to give of the situation of parties, and of the state of the public mind in England, regarded as even an indirect disapprobation of the measure presented by the English Government. We have, for our parts, to look at these discussions merely in an historical point of view. We can comprehend the opposition which a measure like that just adopted in the House of Commons must meet with in a country profoundly Protestant, but we cannot take part in such passions. The Maynooth Bill, which inaugurates in Ireland the reign of toleration, and, after a time more or less distant, of religious equality, is only the consequence of the grave principle which the French revolution has established in the world. The English Parliament has just offered a noble example in refusing to give way to exterior passions which it did not take part in. It is an imposing spectacle to behold a Prime Minister risking, without hesitation, both his official position and his authority as the head of a party, to accomplish an act which he deems just, and the head of the Opposition generously lending his assistance to adversaries whom he could overturn, if not replace. Such conduct is above all praise."

[The following appeared only in our late edition of last week.]

The Queen's Visit to Ireland.—A meeting of the sub-committee of the Dublin Corporation took place on Tuesday, at the Mansion House in that city. The Lord Mayor, on taking the chair, stated that he had waited on his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, to ascertain whether there were any official grounds for the statement that the Queen intended to visit Ireland this summer. In reply, his Excellency informed him that he had received a letter from Sir Robert Peel, in which the strong probability of such an event taking place was stated; but that he would write to Sir Robert by that night's post, asking for a more explicit statement upon the subject. In anticipation of a favourable answer, the committee then adopted a resolution to the following effect—"That the Lord Mayor should proceed to London to present an address to her most gracious Majesty, requesting that she would honour the Corporation of Dublin with her august presence at dinner; and that the round or King's room should be put into such a state of repair as would render it worthy the reception of Royalty."

Inquest on the Body of the late Marquis of Downshire.—An inquest upon the body of the lamented Marquis of Downshire, whose sudden death we have recorded elsewhere, was held at six o'clock on Tuesday evening in the Court House, at Blessington. Doctor Kellet, of Naas, was examined, and gave it as his opinion that he died of an effusion of blood on the brain. Surgeon Cusack, of Dublin, was of a similar opinion. The jury found a verdict that his lordship "Died by the Visitation of God." The Marquis of Downshire arrived at the Gresham Hotel on Tuesday evening from London, and immediately proceeded to Blessington to make the necessary preparation for the interment of his noble and much-lamented father.

Election for Greenock.—On Thursday Mr. Walter Baine was elected for Greenock, in the room of Mr. Wallace. The numbers at the close of the poll were:—

For Mr. Baine	350
Mr. Dunlop	344

Public Dinner to Sir H. Pottinger at Glasgow.—On Wednesday the Corporation, the Trades-house, the Chamber of Commerce, and the East India Association of Glasgow, gave a grand dinner to Sir Henry Pottinger. The company was very numerous, and the speeches highly complimentary to the right honourable baronet. The Honourable the Lord Provost acted as the chairman, and Lord Dean of Guild Leadbetter, Deacon Convener Brownlie, William Sterling, Esq., of Kenmure, Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, and Henry Dunlop, Esq., Chairman of the East India Association, and Sir George Larpent, were present.

Execution at Warwick.—Yesterday (Friday) morning, James Crowley, who was convicted at the last Warwick assizes, of the wilful murder of Richard Tilsley, a servant of his father, was executed on the top of the gaol in Warwick. There were about 5000 persons present.

THE COLOSSEUM: THE CHALET, MER DE GLACE, MONT BLANC, &c.

RE-OPENING OF THE COLOSSEUM, REGENT'S-PARK.

It is now nearly sixteen years since this vast establishment was first opened for exhibition; and, during that period it has been visited by more than a million of persons. Circumstances, much to be regretted, prevented it being opened originally in a complete state; and when the property changed hands in 1835, some alterations were made which did not elevate its character as a place of public amusement. Its attraction, consequently, declined, until it appeared probable that this magnificent edifice would be taken down, and private dwelling-houses erected on its site. At this juncture, the property was purchased by its present spirited owner, who considered it possible that, with judicious alterations, improvements, and additions, the Colosseum might be altogether restored to public favour. In this hope, he consulted Mr. W. Bradwell, whose taste and skill in decorative art and scenic effects are well known; and this gentleman having designed plans for remodelling and renovating the entire establishment, they have been executed solely under his direction, by the most eminent artists. It is, at present, arranged that the whole will be opened for exhibition early in the ensuing week. In the meantime, we shall introduce to our readers two of the principal novelties:—The Mountain Scenery, or Model, in the rear of the main, polygonal, building; and the new Sculpture Hall in its basement.

The First Illustration shows a portion of the Exterior of the Chalet, or Swiss Cottage, with the Mer de Glace, and the snow-clad peak of Mont Blanc; whilst the Mountain Torrent, on the left, leaping over the nearest rocks, comes roaring down the precipices; and after forming a small lake in front of the cottage windows, overflows its stony basin, and, with a second fall disappears in the gulf below. This is, unquestionably, the finest specimen of Model Scenery executed in this country, either as regards extent, or characteristic sublimity: its mountain-passes, aguilles, and icy peaks, are admirably executed. "Mont Blanc," says a popular writer, "exhibits all the grandeur of the Alps on a small scale. High tapering pyramids, covered with eternal snow; extensive fields of ice, split to a great depth with wide cracks; glaciers of green colour descending from its sides, between bare dark-coloured perpendicular rocks, and skirted by forests of fir; and grottoes formed in the masses of eternal ice, in addition to all the other varieties of mountain scenery, attract great numbers of scientific travellers." And these grand features are presented, with extraordinary success, in the ingenious work before us, by the artist, Mr. Danson.

Our second scene shows the Glyptotheca, or Museum of Sculpture, an entirely new building, designed and erected by Mr. Bradwell. Those who remember what this apartment was as the Saloon of Arts, cannot fail to be struck with its complete transformation. In lieu of the calico draperies, which had the appearance of a large tent, temporarily fitted up, the visitor now beholds a lofty dome of several thousand feet of richly-cut glass, springing from an entablature and cornice supported by numerous columns. The frieze is enriched with the whole of the Panathenaic procession from the Elgin marbles, and is continued without interruption throughout the entire circumference of the hall, above which are 20 fresco paintings of allegorical subjects on panels; the mouldings, cornices, capitals of columns, and enrichments, being all in gold; modelled by Mr. Henning, jun.; painted by Mr. Absalom. Beyond the circle of columns is another of as many pilasters, dividing and supporting arched recesses, in each of which, as well as between the columns, are placed works of art from the chisels of some of the most eminent foreign and British sculptors. In the centre of the building is the circular framework inclosing the staircase leading to the Panorama; this hung with a classically-disposed drapery, from the summit of the arched dome to the floor concealing the stairs, and harmonising with the prevailing tints of the architectural decorations. Around this are seats covered with rich Utrecht velvet, raised on a dais, and divided by groups of Cupid and Psyche supporting candelebras in the form of palm-trees; the figures white, and the draperies, leaves, plumes, &c., heightened with gold. Various other figures support branches for lights around the outer circle; and the whole, whether viewed by daylight, or illuminated in the evening, is a fascinating coup d'œil. The figures, we should add, are tastefully modelled by Mr. Henning, jun. From this Hall the public will have, as formerly, the choice of two modes of ascent to the first gallery, to view the Panorama; either by the spiral staircase, just mentioned, or by the Ascending Room, which is handsomely decorated in the Elizabethan style, and lit by a stained glass ceiling.

We purposely abstain from detailing the further improvements at this fairy region of art; as they will be extensively illustrated in our Journal of next week. Meanwhile, we may state, generally, that the Conservatories have been entirely refitted and decorated; in the Exterior Promenade have been placed some exquisite models of classic ruins; and a Grotto of extraordinary extent and splendour has been constructed. The Grand Picture of London has been nearly repainted by Mr. E. T. Parris; and there has been added a New Panorama of London by Night.

The eastern entrance, in Albany street, is entirely new.

We shall only, at present, remark that the outlay has been unsparing; and we trust the public patronage will be in proportion; for under its new aspect, the Colosseum will present a most elegant succession of intellectual gratification for many months to come.

SCENES FROM THE HARROW STEEPLE-CHASES.

Of this spirited match, the closing one of the season, we gave the results in our journal of last week. We now annex two scenes—one from the first race, and its companion print from the second. The day's sport, for quantity and quality, has never been excelled in the vicinity of London; and, from the large sum collected at the gates (upwards of £150) we may fully anticipate some first-rate doings next year.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT GRAND MILITARY HURDLE RACE.

It was recently determined by the military stationed at Albany Barracks, at the Isle of Wight, to have a grand hurdle race on the Isle of Wight race-course. Thursday week was the day appointed for the race, and long before the hour of one had arrived, a large and distinguished party of the military, and the nobility, and the élite of the island, had assembled on the grounds: several gay equipages, with numerous cars and island vehicles, each filled with company, were drawn up in a line with the grand stand. The numerous depôts, stationed at Parkhurst, were present, who appeared to have a holiday treat; amongst which, most conspicuous, was that of the gallant 42nd, in their Highland costume, the whole affording a rich treat to the visitor.

The following was the programme:—

Garrison Handicap Hurdle Race. A sweepstakes of five sovs. each, with fifty added. Heats.

Lord A. Russell's b. g. Leatherstocking, 11st. 7lb.	(Owner)	1	4	4
Lieut. Ramsay's gr. g. Cigar, 11st. 7lb.	(Owner)	4	3	2
Lieut. Longfield's b. g. Irishman, 12st. 4lb. ..	(Owner)	3	1	1
Lieut. Sutton's b. g. Mammoth, 11st. 10lb. ..	(Owner)	2	2	3

The following started, but were not placed—Kilbuckie, Harlequin, Shamrock, Jenny Jones, Lass o' Gowrie, and Judy.

Remarks.—First Heat.—Eight horses started. Kilbuckie went away, taking the lead up to the first hurdle, which he refused. Harlequin swerved here, threw his rider, and never was able to recover his place in the race. The whole of the rest kept well together up to the fourth hurdle, when Leatherstocking went ahead and won cleverly; Mammoth 2nd, Irishman 3rd, and Cigar 4th, Kilbuckie, Harlequin, and Jenny Jones, being distanced.

Second Heat.—Five horses started. Cigar took the lead, keeping it up to the third hurdle, the other horses running so close together Here Irishman took up the running, hard pressed by Mammoth, and won by half a length—Mammoth, 2nd; Cigar, 3rd; Leather Stocking, 4th. Shamrock, in passing the fourth hurdle, in recovering himself threw his rider. This heat was admirably contested, the horses taking the hurdle together, and a "table-cloth" might have covered the whole five.

Third Heat.—Cigar again led at a great pace up almost to the last hurdle, the other horses well up; all jumped the last hurdle together, when, after a severe struggle, Irishman won by a length.

Handicap for the beaten horses.

Kilbuckie, 11st 9lb	1
Harlequin, 11st 9lb	2
Shamrock, 10st 7lb	3
Jenny Jones, 10st	4

Remarks.—Jenny Jones led, Harlequin held hard, allowing the rest to get some distance a head—Kilbuckie took the lead at the first hurdle, and kept it throughout. Harlequin made capital play at the run in, running a good second—Shamrock third and Jenny a good fourth.

Between the races much sport was afforded to the company by some foot races amongst the men of the depôt battalions for prizes given by the officers, and which served to pass the intervening time.

BATH RACES.—Tuesday.

The Produce Sweepstakes of 50 sovs. each, h. ft., for three-years-old colts, 8st 10lb, and fillies 8st 5lb. One mile. (12 Subscribers.)

Lord G. Bentinck's Miss Elis	(Nat)	2

The Bath Handicap, of 20 sovs each.

Sir S. Spry's Subduer	(Nat)	1
Mr. Kingston's Sparsholt	(A. Day)	2

NEWCASTLE ON TYNE SPRING MEETING.—Tuesday.

The Welter Gold Cup of £60, gent. riders, two miles, was won by Mr. D. Pack's Rival (Mr. J. Cookson) beating Mr. G. J. Caley's Beauclerk, aged, Mr. Johnson's Rufus, Hotspur, Ellen, and several others, after a fine race with two, by a length.

The Scurry Stakes of one sov each, 12st each, gent. riders, one mile, was won by Mr. Cookson's Rufus (Mr. Gregson) beating eight others in a canter.

A Novel Game of Whist.—A game of whist is about to be played by means of the electric telegraph. One of the players will take his position at Southampton, and his partner at Vauxhall; their adversaries to be, one at Gosport, and the other at Bishopstoke.

A letter from Florence, dated April 8, says "Julie, Countess de Survilliers, widow of Joseph Buonaparte, and formerly Queen of Spain, died here yesterday of a fit of apoplexy. She had long been in a state of ill-health. She was much beloved in this city, and her death will be felt by the poor, to whom she was very charitable."

Messrs. Chalon, Stanfield, Leslie, Christall, Stump, and Ward, have left in the packet-ship Victoria, for New York, it is understood, to paint the Hall of Congress of the United States. There was a large number of people to see them off. They left on Sunday last.

There died lately in the neighbourhood of Four-Mile-Water, (Ireland), a Mrs. Sweeney, aged 129 years. The deceased was born in the year 1716, the second year of the reign of George the First, and consequently lived through the reigns of five monarchs.

The Courrier du Havre mentions that the French Government intended to seize on the Sooloo Islands, situate between Borneo and Mindanao, and to form in them an establishment similar to that of the Marquesas and Tahiti.

THE HARROW STEEPLE CHASE.—THE LAST BROOK.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

"La Sonnambula" was given on Tuesday night, and Madame Castellan made her rentrée in this charming opera, confirming, though still evidently suffering from the effects of her late indisposition, the sudden and brilliant impression she had produced on the frequenters of this theatre at her début. Her Amina was, as before, a delightful impersonation. Though at times the voice of Madame Castellan might want that fulness and breadth of tone it ordinarily possesses, at other moments it rose more liquidly brilliant than ever, whilst the feeling and pathos with which she sang, and the simple and unaffected energy of her acting, produced their wonted effect. In her last scene her intense feeling triumphed over fatigue and weakness; she gave it exquisitely, and we can but express once more our wonder that Elvino, her supposed repentant lover, was the only person perhaps in the whole house who gave the least outward symptom of emotion at the touching tones of the heart-broken Amina. This apparent coldness was the more remarkable, as, in the former scene, Signor Mario had shown himself as he really is, when he chooses, a great lyrical actor. The "Ah Perchè non poss'odearti" was given by him with a force and energy that electrified the audience; and the singing of this eminent artist throughout possessed an unusual degree of breadth and timbre. Not content, as he occasionally is, with displaying the natural sweetness of his voice, he sang with spirit and expression, and in some places, as in the fine quatuor of the first act, his tones towered above those of the remainder of the performers.

We must now speak of the new ballet divertissement, "Kaya," which merits that notice, as to its execution, which last week we could only afford to give to its composition. We must, however, first give a passing notice to its mise en scene. The Norwegian mountains appeared undoubtedly a very unpromising locale for a ballet, in which warmth and cheerfulness of colouring are, we think, indispensable materials for effect; but all fears in this respect proved unfounded, for whilst the character of scenery of so cold a climate has been most faithfully adhered to, a brilliancy of light has been thrown over the whole, which, combined with the crimson dresses of the peasants, has a bright and gladdening effect. Lucile Grahn in this divertissement appears under a totally different aspect to that she bears in the poetical and dreamy ballet of "Eoline." The character of the merry coquettish village-beauty bears no more affinity to that of the fated Dryad, than the Norwegian dances, the "Pas descina sens," the new and exhilarating waltz with Perrot, do to the "Mazurka d'extase," and the other pas in "Eoline." Mdlle. Grahn has shown that she can excel in both. The grand feature in this ballet, however, is such as to eclipse all the rest—it is the "Pas des Moissoneurs" of the thirty-six Viennoise. This dance is not only, as regards the little performers, a marvel of precision and all graceful agility, but the grouping, the attitudes, and the colouring, show a degree of artistic skill and knowledge of effect which do the highest credit to the genius of Madame Weiss. We would defy any one, however stoical, however indifferent to this kind of amusement, or however prejudiced, not to be surprised into admiration and pleasure by the movements and groupings of these little sprites; for whilst every thing is here combined that can produce an effect on the most uncultivated mind, the degree of artistic lore and poetical conception displayed cannot fail to interest the most fastidious and refined.

On Thursday came the "Barbiere," that all-perfect work of Rossini, which the Italians hissed on its first production, because it was above the scope of their comprehension. It is the work which, perhaps, bespeaks most the natural inspiration of its two authors—Beaumarchais, who invented the plot, and Rossini, who reflected it to the life in the musical mirror. It was with the "Swan of Pesaro," a work of love, for—as all who know him are aware—he has all the playfulness and the love of mischief and satire of the French genius, without his latent under current of evil thought. The "Barbiere," being interpreted by the four first virtuosos of the day—accompanied by all the principal novelties of the week, with the addition of a Tarantella, to display Grahn's versatality—Thursday night was naturally a succession of ovations to genius, in which an audience assembled from far and near warmly enacted their part.

FRENCH PLAYS.

M. Ravel has become a complete favourite with the frequenters of the St. James's Theatre, and he attracts crowded and fashionable audiences every night he plays. He is a very finished and delightful performer, playing with perfect ease, and a complete master of the business of the stage. The absence of anything like straining after a point, renders his acting the more effective. A re-engagement has also been entered into with Mdlle. Plessy; and the audience have now the pleasure of seeing both these artistes on the same evening. Molière's comedy, "Le Tartuffe," was brought out on Wednesday evening, to a very full house, Mdlle. Plessy enacting Elmire; M. Cartigny, Orgon; and M. Oudinot, Tartuffe. We need scarcely say that the parts were excellently filled, and the entire performance warmly applauded: indeed, the notices of this theatre can be but reiterations of the same praise over and over again. We almost wish Mr. Mitchell would give us something to find fault with: it would be really refreshing to do so.

LYCEUM.

A one-act drama, called "The Drunkard's Glass," was produced here on Monday evening, but disappeared from the bills on Thursday. This want of success, however, we attribute rather to the piece being of a different class to those the audience are accustomed to look for at this house, than any inefficiency in its construction or dialogue. The sentiment of dissipated bricklayers—who were the chief characters in the play—has little in it to interest either the boxes or pit, although they are eventually restored to teetotalism and matrimonial comforts; and a Monday night gallery is usually more disposed to applaud merriment than morality. It was very well played by all engaged in its representation; more especially by Mr. Emery (a rising favourite and actor), Mr. Meadows, and Mrs. Wigan.

PRINCESS'

The reputation of Miss Cushman appears to increase with every succeeding character in which she appears; and we may rank her Julia, in the "Hunchback," as one of her best performances, if not her very best. Nor is it going too far to state that no actress, since Miss Fanny Kemble, has rendered the part in so admirable a manner: indeed, if the emotion and genuine applause of the audience be taken as a proof of the excellence of the actress, we must class the acting of Miss Cushman at least on a level with that of Miss Kemble. The play was, also, performed throughout with more general care than has been evident in some of the preceding productions. A miserable adaptation of a French piece—we think one of Bouffé's—called "Boquillon, à la Recherche d'un Père," was brought out at the end of the week, under the title of "Who's the Papa," and summarily condemned, notwithstanding which it was put forward for a second night's representation, but has now, we hope, been perfectly knocked on the head. We are convinced that the lessee will, ere long, feel the consequences of bringing out trashy pieces of this description, instead of paying authors of repute liberally, to write for the theatre. It is the most mistaken policy that a management can adopt, to screw down the remuneration of the dramatists, albeit there are numbers of hungry under-working playwrights at its command, to whom the disposal of a farce, for a few shillings, may be an unwonted piece of fortune.

A benefit took place on Monday evening, as we understand, at the OLYMPIC THEATRE, when the band disappeared in the middle of the performances, and left them to get on as they could, in consequence of not being paid; subsequently coming back again, upon which the anger of the audience broke forth in no very measured manner. We trust this may be the last occurrence of the kind, the reputation of the profession having been most seriously injured of late by these anything-but-respectable demonstrations. The same fevered thirst for self-glorification which leads a comedian to put up his bill for a benefit of this kind, induces a manager to open a theatre in that rash spirit of dramatic speculation which has of late become so prevalent. A half-appointed theatre is taken, or one with no appointments at all; a company is scraped up, chiefly consisting of those fourth and fifth-rate performers, whose lack of talent in the mistaken line they have chosen causes them to be perpetually in the market; pieces of a miserable class are rendered still more dreary by the inefficiency of the actors: a small fraction of the audience is taken from the better-conducted theatres; and, after lingering, struggling, gasping for a few weeks, salaries become scarce, the leading performers withdraw their services, and the speculation ends in disgrace and utter poverty. Yet, with this ruin staring in the face, the chances are that before a few weeks are over another "lessee" rushes in, and the same pitiable career again commences, to be stopped by the same results. The profession may rest assured that, whilst our warmest support will always be given to every theatrical enterprise we may think deserving of encouragement, however humble, so long as well-directed industry or intelligence is shown in its management; yet, on the other hand, we shall be equally ready to crush these wild speculations at their onset: indeed, by nipping them in the bud, we opine that we shall be doing the greatest kindness to all parties concerned.

There has been a rumour in theatrical circles that Mr. Macready is in treaty for Covent Garden, with the intention of opening it in the autumn. We hope this may be true, inasmuch as it will not only allow Mr. Macready to put forth those exertions for the welfare of the legitimate drama which have always distinguished his management, but will also put bread in the mouths of several hundred people.

THE "EXCLUSIVES'" COSTUME BALL.

One of the most brilliant réunions of the season took place at the Hanover-square Rooms on Wednesday evening, when the members of the above-mentioned ball gave a very splendid entertainment to nearly three hundred of their friends, it being their first meeting. The regulations as to costume were sufficiently stringent to ensure an effective assemblage; and about eleven o'clock, by which time all the company had arrived, the coup d'œil, from the royal box, was magnificent. Not less imposing was the view of the supper room, with its long lines of waving plumes and sparkling moyen age costumes, rendered more striking by the brilliant manner in which it was illuminated. The refreshments and wines, generally, were of first-rate order; and a programme of twenty-seven dances was gone through with unabated spirit to the end. Mr. Barnard had the direction of the band, and deserves every praise for his excellent selection of music, which comprised the Peri, Esmeralda, and Chatsworth Quadrilles; the Annen, Redowa, and Heiterer Sin Polkas, the Cellarius, the Post Horn Galop, with many other popular compositions.

MUSIC.

MISS CANEY'S SECOND SOIREE MUSICALE.

This soirée was fully and fashionably attended, and afforded universal satisfaction, both from the taste evinced in the selection of the programme, and the clever manner in which the various morceaux were executed by their several performers. John Parry, as usual, was the lion of the night. We have not space to give the detail.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

ROSSINI.—This great composer is flirting, it would seem, with public expectation. If his score be finished, he needs not the dreary rehearsals of Meyerbeer—he can be understood at once; and, if he have an opera really ready, let us have it forthwith.

THE POLKA DISCOUNTENANCED BY MAJESTY.—It is with infinite satisfaction we learn that the Queen has forbidden the barbarous dance called Polka to be performed in her presence. Our readers will recollect that from the beginning we denounced it as an outrage upon good taste; we were the first to set our face against the monstrous, graceless absurdity; and glad are we now to find we have the countenance of our fair Sovereign to (we hope) banish for ever from our land this infamous distortion of "fair proportioned limbs."

MR. C. KEMBLE'S READINGS OF SHAKSPEARE.—Mr. Kemble gave his reading of "As You Like It," at Marylebone Literary and Scientific Institution, Edward-street, on Thursday evening, which altogether was a melancholy affair. Mr. Kemble is not an impassioned reader; but the best reader in the world can make nothing of that which is intended to be personal and colloquial drama.

PANORAMA ROYAL, LEICESTER-SQUARE.

Mr. Burford has just painted a very interesting view of the City of Nanking, and the surrounding country, which was opened for exhibition on Monday last. The picture occupies the large circle, and far more picturesque than may be expected by those who frame their notions of "the Celestial Empire" from the landscapes of our tea-table.

Nanking is particularly striking, from its vast extent, and the great beauty of its situation, on the banks of one of the finest rivers in the world. The present view is taken from a considerable elevation on its southern side, commanding the whole interior, and a vast extent of the circumjacent country. The principal feature in the foreground, southward, represents a meeting between our plenipotentiary and the Chinese Imperial Commissioners; this being a licence of the artists to present portraits of the negotiating parties, and pictures of the costume and customs of the Chinese people. They are grouped at the foot of a hill, which is crowned with a devotional temple; then, we have a knot of Chinese gamblers and police, Tartar cavalry; portraits of the Governor of Nanking, and the chief priest of the porcelain tower, besides the authorities above mentioned: the Mandarins are looking somewhat suspiciously at the new comers. The scene supplies incident in the picture, but is, by no means, its most attractive portion. The eye soon turns northward, and recognises an old acquaintance, in the long-famed and beautiful nine-storied porcelain Pagoda, the most prominent object in the foreground: in its details it differs much from our penny-magazine pictures of this "wonder of the world," which is some sixty feet loftier than our London Monument, and cost more than half a million sterling. Beyond the suburb in which the Pagoda stands, is the wide canal, which partly surrounds the city, crossed by several bridges, of curious construction, and enlivened by native craft of various forms. Within the walls, varying in height from 35 to 90 feet, lies the outspread city; on the left, the Chinese portion stretches, for several miles, along the western wall; the low, even ground, presenting long lines of dull, narrow streets, with dense masses of houses, broken here and there by a triumphal arch, or high flag-staffs, with red triangular streamers; and intersected by two considerable canals; every commanding eminence being crowned by some large building. On the right lies the Tartar town, a portion of which, and the boundary wall, is hidden by eminences thickly covered with plantations of bamboo and underwood. The valley in which the city stands resembles a large garden interspersed with shrubberies, in which trees and plants of all climates flourish within a few yards of each other. The surface, in general, is picturesquely undulating, with occasionally abrupt ridges; whilst, on all sides, the view is bounded by graceful hills, and mountains of singular forms, and great diversity of colour. We must not, however, forget, in the distance, beyond the northern angle of the wall, the splendid river, the Yang-tsze-Keang, on which is seen part of the British fleet at anchor.

As this picture has been painted from drawings taken on the spot, and the artist has received much valuable information during its progress, from several officers of the expedition—this is, perhaps, the first accurate view in the interior of China, on a large scale, that the British public have had an opportunity of seeing: the scene has, therefore, much of the interest of a terra incognita. It is carefully painted throughout: the paysage is surprisingly minute, and the distance admirably managed. Altogether, it is a most sterling addition to the attractions of this sight season.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

When Spring bursts forth in blossoms through the vale,
And her wild music triumphs on the gale.

When the year is in its childhood, fresh and fair, and the lusty chorus of the chase has given place to the song of the nightingale, woodcraft rests still from its pleasant labour, and there is peace, for a space, in the moving business of flood and field. We have fallen upon the ambrosial time; the festival of birds and blossoms; the temporary blight of rural pastimes and recreations. From Easter to Whitsuntide racing is the only national sport in high season, for, as yet, the gallant galleys of the summer marine float "few and far between;" and the grim saturnalia of the steeple-chase have been brought to an end. The current week was not prolific of sport of any kind, still less of events of account. The Bath Meeting occupied two days at its commencement, and was, through grace of sunshine and sweet air, a most grateful tryst. It was chiefly remarkable as a continuation of the unprecedented good fortune which has marked the career of Mr. Wreford's three-year-olds this year. One of them won, as we recorded last week, all the leading three-year-old stakes of the Newmarket Craven Meeting; and another did the same at Bath; his colt Worthless (What's in a name?) having carried off the Produce Sweepstakes on Tuesday, and the Dyrham Stakes on Wednesday. Before taking leave of Lansdown it may not be amiss to make note of a Derby nomination that is, as yet, unknown to market fame. Plenitude, a son of Bay Middleton, won the Cup—a two miles and a half course—in a field by no means to be despised; and, although his weight was but 6st. 6lb., he ought not to be lost sight of. The fashion in which the Goodwood young stock can get a distance is extraordinary: the high courage of its running commands for it a first place among the studs of the day. Plenitude ran once at two years old, and was not placed. Worthless is also in the Derby: he ran for the Champagne, at Doncaster, but without getting a place.

Meagre, however, as the first six days were of sport, they have been overflowing with anticipations of what shall come of their successors. The first Spring Meeting, which commences on Monday, will be the most interesting anniversary of that generally important week that Newmarket has known for many years. It is brimful of events, in which all the great trainers and private stables have stock engaged—and the issue of the race for the Two Thousand Guineas will—there is good reason to believe—produce such a sensation in the betting circles, as the production of a contrivance which should supersede railroads would on the Stock Exchange. Inasmuch as hope is more excellent than expectation consummated, so far shall the contingencies of the Two Thousand Guinea Stakes be more pregnant with excitement, more replete with permanent interest, than the result of the Derby. What a galvanic battery it will open on the ring! . . . . The promise of sport for the mature season grows more brilliant with every number of the calendar. In that which was published on Wednesday last, the number of entries for the Goodwood Cup and the Emperor of Russia's truly Imperial Plate, at Ascot, were given: forty-eight for the former, twenty-six for the latter; including all the best horses in the world! Besides these there were matches for five hundred a side, and such like indications of the position of the turf in the middle of the nineteenth century. As a fitting finale to a week, so rife with good things for the dwellers in the south, more especially for the metropolitans—on its last day one of the most memorable sailing matches ever contested on the Thames, will come off: that for the Belvidere Cup, by the yachts of the Royal Thames Yacht Club. For this event such a fleet of twenty-five ton cutters is entered as never yet swam in salt water: a glorious levee for the Queen of Rivers.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The flatness of business this afternoon surprised everybody—a full and late attendance, commissions without number, only five weeks from the Epsom week, and yet little or nothing done. Our report, therefore, must in a great measure treat of the changes produced by offers to lay against and back horses, the actual transactions having been few in number. The great "pots" for the Chester Cup were Cataract, Obscurity, Ould Ireland, and Ratan, the odds returned were the very highest obtainable at the close; no others were in force. The "lions" for the Derby were Weatherbit (in immense favour), Pam, and Kedger; Old England also came into play, and a point more than the odds quoted against the two favourites, Newsmonger, Clear-the-Way, and Pantasa, would have been taken. THE OAKS: Lancashire Witch, reported to have broken down, went to 16 to 1—50 to 1 was offered the day before.

THURSDAY.—The room wag thinly attended, and betting only indifferently brisk. The Chester Cup horses were pretty steady, at the previous averages, with the exception of Ratan and Fitz-Allen, who were backed heavily, at improved prices; and Portrait, who is on the decline. Not much doing on the Derby: two or three changes, however, should be pointed out—and firstly, on Alarm, who has not been seen of late on the exercise ground, and is suspected to be amiss; secondly, in Old England and Worthless—two of John Day's lot—both backed at 25 to 1, and the former for large sums; and lastly, in Ironmaster, who, malgré Sweetmeat's running at Bath, was sent to the right about. The other movements were of little moment.

CHESS.

"H. S."—There is an excellent chess club at Liverpool.

"H. H.," Huddersfield.—Thanks. We were not aware that the problem alluded to had ever been published.

"C. Wood," Brighton.—The problem is only suited to very young players.

"H. T.," Reading.—Far too simple for publication.

"Civis."—Mr. Bryan, the author of the pamphlet entitled "A History of the Match between Mr. Staunton and M. St. Amant," is an American. Copies of the pamphlet may be had at the office of "The Chess Player's Chronicle," 13, Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn, price 1s. each.

"G. C. W." and "F. M——s."—There are two public chess clubs in London, one held at the George and Vulture Hotel, Cornhill, and the other in Cavendish-square; the subscription to each is only three guineas per annum.

"R. W. S."—Originally published in a magazine called "The British Miscellany," for which inquire at Goode's Chess Divan on Ludgate-hill.

"Oriental Club,"—Mr. Cochrane is now in India. His competitor, the celebrated Ghulam Kassim, is reported to have died within the last few months. Your third query is unintelligible.

"A. Y."—Mr. Lewis, the well-known writer on chess, conducted the automaton chess player for some time during its exhibition in London.

"F. O.," Wigan.—There must be nearly two thousand games and problems in "The Chess Player's Chronicle." Write to the editor: we have not space to enter upon the subject here.

"C. S.," Brighton.—Received with thanks.

"Baltasar."—Hereafter we may probably gratify readers of the higher class of chess-play, by devoting our weekly diagram occasionally to problems of the description mentioned. The two best of this sort we remember at the moment are the following, to which we invite solutions:—In the first, which is taken from a Sanscrit M.S. on chess, the pieces stand thus—White: K at his R's 6th, R at Q R's 5th, Kt at K B's 5th, and Pawn at K's 4th. Black—K at his R's sq. In this position, supposed to be the termination of a "marked pawn" game, White engages to mate with the Pawn in four moves. In the second, which is by Mauro, of Calabria, place the men as follows: White, K at his 6th, Kt at Q Kt's 5th, Kt at Q R's 6th; Pawns, at K B's 6th, K's 5th, K's 7th, and Q's 6th. Black, K at his sq, R at K R's sq, R at Q B's sq, and B at Q R's 8th. Here, White undertakes to mate with the Pawn now standing on his K's 5th, in five moves. Great care must be taken to place the pieces correctly.

"J. S.," Liverpool.—Surely before attempting to teach others chess, by the construction of problems, it would be well for you to learn the simplest rules of the game. Who ever heard of such a move as Kt takes P en-passant ?

"S. M. S.," Bayswater.—We have to minister to many capacities, and very difficult problems are not suitable to very young players.

"A. H.," Pimlico.—The move is allowed.

"T. R.," Walworth.—Next week.

12. B to Q 3rd	Q P two (b)

And Black mates in two moves.

(a) Feebly played. Q P two would have been much more to the purpose.
(b) It would have been bad play to take the Kt.
(c) This and the succeeding moves to the end of the game are very ably played on Black's side.

ANNIVERSARY DINNER OF THE LONDON CHESS CLUB.

By an unlucky mischance, our reporter did not receive his admission card for this meeting in time to avail himself of it, and we are unable, therefore, to furnish the particulars promised. From a gentleman present, we learn that a large party, consisting of members belonging to the Club, and visitors distinguished in literature, in science, and art, sat down to a sumptuous dinner, under the able presidency of A. Mongredien, Esq., of Liverpool. A succession of brilliant speeches, interspersed with witty converse, and some admirable singing, by the magnificent basso, Herr Staudigl, served to prolong the festivities to a late hour, when the party broke up, each delighted with his entertainment, and all cordially concurring in the wish most eloquently expressed by the Chairman, in the toast of the night, for "Prosperity and Permanence to the London Chess Club." Amongst the numerous visitors, the names of the following only reached us:—Messrs. Mahony (the inimitable "Father Prout"), C. Wilkins, Tindal Atkinson, H. Staunton, A. Mongredien, Captain Pilleau, Captain Evans, and Herr Staudigl.

LITERATURE.

The Child of the Islands. A Poem. By the Hon. Mrs. Norton. Chapman and Hall.

Taste, grace, elegance, and choice artistry have combined to make up this beautiful volume, that may vie with any, as an ornament of the drawing-room, in what relates to the external sense of vision. Were this all, it might put in its claim to a share of notice with numerous other volumes on mere extrinsic grounds; yet the elegant external casing is but the husk, the covering, to a treasure of infinitely greater price—the impassioned outpouring of the soul of a true and high-hearted woman in a stream of gushing poetry. The brain and the heart have been joint workers, and the critical intellect of the philosopher would scarce find a flaw in the rapid perceptions of the enthusiastic poet. We say rapid perceptions, for this poem appears poured forth without premeditation, but it is evidently the result of a mind that has read largely, observed acutely, and pondered deeply. Of a truth, the world is moving onwards, when forth from the ranks of fashion, from the haunts in which we are taught to believe conventionality and form are the presiding deities, appears this work of a strong human heart, enchaining together all the links of humanity with earnest sympathy; stripping away the hypocritic pretences of the conventional world, and branding selfishness in its very forehead with deep and unquenchable scorn. When we think of that fair face, we marvel at the strength beneath it and call to mind the words of Coleridge:—

O, lady! nursed in pomp and pleasure!
Whence learned you that heroic measure?

Imbue your class with your own emotions, with your own perceptions, and you shall convert this English land into a Paradise of Peace, eclipsing in its results all that has been yet done, mighty though it be. When true kindliness and confidence shall be enkindled between workers and directors, between the makers and the obeyers of laws, between rulers and citizens, all latent good will be developed, and the evil which is a result only of unfavourable circumstances, will be removed.

The plan of the poem is a comparison of the condition and circumstances of the young heir to the Crown with those of various classes of the poor and helpless. There is a prefix of quotations most appositely chosen, all bearing on the condition of the people of England, from Lord John Russell, the Hon. Sidney Herbert, Jeremy Bentham, the Times newspaper, Thomas Carlyle, and Horace, the Latin poet. Men of all shades of opinion come to the same conclusion as Jeremy Bentham:—

If the poor had more justice, they would need less charity.

And the injustice shown to the poor and helpless is the soul-stirring theme of the writer. Till our physical philosophy shall become wholly an "exact science," help and charity are rightful claims of the weak upon the strong. Mutual help is the great charm of life, and we should not court a state of existence in which all could sit on thrones apart in independent isolation. The highest charm with which riches can endow us, is the power of benificence.

We could fill columns with quotations, but our space is limited. There is a most graphic picture of a poor weaver doomed to banishment for pawning a web of silk to feed his famishing wife and child. The web is subsequently traced, till it forms the robe of a "lady of the land."

She that now wears it, and her lord may boast
No payment made, yet none dare say THEY steal.

This is a painful parallel between rich and poor put in the mouths of the rich:—

A life of self-indulgence is for Us;
A life of self-denial is for them:
For Us the streets broad-built and populous;
For them unhealthy corners, garrets dim,
And cellars where the water-rat may swim!
For Us green paths, refreshed by frequent rain;
For them dark alleys, where the dust lies grim;
Not doomed by Us to this appointed pain—
God made us Rich and Poor—of what do these complain?

There is a most exquisite picture of an imprisoned gipsy-girl, dying in her cell, and her wild lover's misery. Either we dream, or we have known the source of this inspiration.

Earnestly do we subscribe to the following:—

Yet doubly beautiful it is to see
One sit in the temptation of High Class,
Keep the inherent deep nobility
Of a great nature, strong to overpass
The check of circumstance and choking mass
Of various faults which youthful leisure woo;
Mirror each thought in Honour's stainless glass;
And by all kindly deeds that Power can do,
Prove that the brave, good heart hath come of lineage true.

There is another picture, beautifully drawn, of a fascinating opera-dancer, her charms and graces, and the process whereby she falls a prey to her seducer. The verse goes on:—

Grow old and starve: require true Christain aid;
And learn when that distress thy bosom wrings,
For whom was all that costly outlay made?
For SELF and not for thee the golden ore was paid!

It may be she will come some winter eve,
And, weeping like a broken hearted child,
Reproach thee for the days when she was thus beguiled.
* * * * * *

This is evidently a real case, and the indignant satire which follows is crushingly heaped on the powerful oppressor.

There is thy spacious library—where dwell
Philosophers, Historians, and Sages,
Full of deep lore, which thou hast studied well;
And classic poets, whose melodious pages
Are shut like birds, in lacquered trellis cages—
Let thy more educated mind explain,
By all experience of recorded ages,
How common-place is this her frantic pain,
And how that things have been and must be yet again.

This is a book which does infinite honour to the writer. The intellect in it is that of a man, with all the grace and beauty of a woman, conjoined with the soul of a hero.

Amusements in Chess. By Charles Tomlinson. London: J. W. Parker, West Strand. 1845.

The staple of these "Amusements" is an entertaining series of papers, descriptive of the History, Antiquity, and Curiosities of Chess, and a second illustrative of the game itself, which appeared in the "Saturday Magazine" during 1841-2-3 and 4.

In their collected form, with the advantage of re-arrangement and some additional materials, the selection of which evinces remarkable taste and judgment, they present certainly one of the most pleasing and instructive volumes of Chess varieties we have ever met with.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

Mr. Carus Wilson Remanded Back to Jersey.—In the Court of Queen's Bench, on Tuesday, another discussion took place on the validity of the return to the writ of habeas corpus. Mr. Wilson's counsel asked for further delay, but Lord Denman said that it could not be granted consistent with the due administration of public justice. The defendant had had plenty of time to answer all the substantial facts contained in the return, which was read at length when he was last before the court. In short, weeks and months had elapsed since he must have known the nature of the return; he was not, therefore, in a position to ask for further delay.—The Solicitor-General, Mr. J. S. Wortley, and Mr. Smith, having been heard in support of the decree of the Royal Court of Jersey, Lord Denman said he gave full credit to the Royal Court of Jersey for having administered a proper judgment. Contempt of a court of justice might not consist in the words uttered, but in the manner in which they were uttered, and those who presided in the court were the only judges of that fact. If there was an illegality in the proceedings (which, however, there did not appear to be) Mr. Wilson might appeal to the Queen in Council. Those who presided over the Royal Court of Jersey were satisfied that the prisoner's words and demeanour were disrespectful, and ordered him to be imprisoned until he asked pardon for his offence, and paid a fine; this he refused to do, and therefore he was clearly of opinion that the sentence of the court was legal and right, and that the prisoner must be remanded.—Mr. Wilson was then removed in custody.

The Insolvency of Mr. C. Mathews.—Mr. C. Mathews made another appearance at the Bankruptcy Court, on Tuesday, when an arrangement was made about some trifling claims, but the proceedings were of no interest. The proof of debts was finally concluded, and the assignee is now prepared to declare a dividend. It is not yet ascertained how much will be paid in the pound.

The Alleged Monster Frauds upon-the-Excise.—Thursday having been specially fixed for the trial of the cause in which the Attorney-General proceeds against the Messrs. Smith, of Whitechapel, for alleged frauds to a great extent upon the Excise, the Court of Exchequer was densely crowded long before the commencement of business. As soon as their Lordships had taken their seats on the bench, an argument took place between the counsel, on the point—whether or not the jury should view the premises. The jury themselves thought they could understand the model better than the premises; but Mr. Kelly, the counsel for the defendants, was anxious that they should do so, and the Court was also of opinion that it would be desirable. They consequently proceeded to the view, attended by Mr. Under-Sheriff Burchell and two "showers," appointed for the purpose. The trial was then proceeded with until five o'clock, when the Court adjourned till the next day.

POLICE.

Attempted Fraud at the Opera House.—At Marlborough-street, on Wednesday, a fashionably dressed young foreigner, who gave the name of Louis Boissonnade, was charged with having attempted to procure some orders of admission to the Italian Opera from Mr. Lumley the lessee, by fraudulently using the name of Count de Jarnac. From the statement of Mr. Jenkins, from the Opera House, and the police, it appeared that about three o'clock on Monday afternoon the prisoner left a note for Mr. Lumley at the Opera House. The note when opened was partly lithographed and partly written. It was to request Mr. Lumley to give the bearer an order for four places, either in the pit or in a box, and was signed "W. L. Compte de Jarnac." Mr. Lumley knowing Count de Jarnac was not in town, suspected the note was a forgery, and having procured the assistance of the police, when the prisoner called for an answer he was sent to Count de Jarnac's residence, and the fact of the Count's absence was clearly established. The prisoner refused at first to give any account of himself. He subsequently stated that he lived at No. 48, Dean-street, but this was ascertained to be untrue. The account the prisoner gave of the note was, that it had been given him by some person in Covent-garden, who was a stranger to him, but this story was afterwards altered. The prisoner, when questioned by Mr. Hardwick, said he was a gentleman living on his means. His passport, he said, was in father's possession, who was somewhere in the country.—Mr. Hardwick being unable to fix any specific charge on the prisoner, after due inquiry had been made by the police, ordered him to be liberated. From the fact of the note being partly printed, it is suspected that a preconcerted plan of fraud is about to be put in action at this end of the town, of which the above is the first experiment.

Robbery and Attempted Suicide.—At Guildhall, on Wednesday, a young man, about seventeen years of age, respectably dressed, who gave his name as John Wakeman Edwards, the son of a surgeon residing at the West end, was charged with stealing a silver watch, three seals, two rings, two brooches, and other property, to the value of £20. From the evidence it appeared that the prisoner entered the apartments of a Miss Halfhide, of 231, Upper Thames-street, and took away a quantity of goods. He was met by her at the bedroom door, when he said, "I want to speak to you;" but, seeing her rather alarmed, exclaimed, "Never mind, I will call another day," and immediately ran down stairs. Miss Halfhide followed him, and told one of her father's men to pursue the prisoner, as she believed he had robbed the house. The man followed him up to Blackfriars-bridge, when the prisoner ran down the steps, and flung himself into the river. A person named Mansfield, who happened to be close to the water, seeing the prisoner struggling for his life, dashed into the water, and succeeded in getting him on shore, where he was given into the custody of the police.—Henry Price stated, on hearing the cry of "Stop thief," he pursued the prisoner, and he saw him throw himself into the Thames. On searching him, they found at the station-house, besides the property stolen, a gold-ring, a pin, two razors, a pocket-book, £9 2s 6d., and nine duplicates to the value of £6 11s. The Inspector said that if the prisoner was remanded, he should be able to discover the owners of the property pledged, as there were five tickets out of the nine for coats pawned. Alderman Challis said that there was quite enough evidence to convict the prisoner for the present robbery, but he should remand him until next week for the purpose of giving the police an opportunity of tracing the property pledged.

IRELAND.

Effect of the late Division in Ireland.—A letter from Dublin, dated Sunday last, says:—"The division on the Maynooth grant has given general satisfaction here to-day—a feeling which was very early displayed. The public libraries and reading-rooms are but thinly attended on the Sabbath, at least till after the celebration of divine service; but from an early hour this morning an unusual degree of interest was manifested to learn the result of the protracted debate. That debate has not strengthened the ranks of the opponents of the increased grant to Maynooth; on the contrary no discussion of any public measure which has occupied the attention of Parliament within the past dozen years has wrought better for the projectors than that which was brought to a close on Friday night has done. Conciliation appears now to be the order of the day in Ireland."

Father Mathew—Sir R. Peel.—The Dublin Evening Post contains a letter from Father Mathew to Dr. Sheil, of Ballyshannon, dated Cork, April 17. After referring to temperance proceedings, Father Mathew says:—"That truly great and good man, Sir Robert Peel, is fulfilling all the anticipations I formed of his administration. He will soon calm and pacify Ireland, and make our unhappy country prosperous."

Ireland and the Maynooth Bill.—There was a very crowded meeting of the Repeal Association in Dublin on Monday, in consequence of the anxiety to hear Mr. O'Connell's commentaries upon the result of the division. The Chairman, E. B. Roche, Esq., M.P., called upon the members to commence the proceedings with cheers for the British Minister and the majority by which the second reading of the Maynooth Bill was carried. (Immense applause followed, in which Mr. O'Connell heartily joined.)—Mr. O'Connell, after reading a report in favour of an absentee tax, proceeded to comment upon the speeches delivered during the debate on the Maynooth College Bill. He said he had read, with the greatest satisfaction, and in a spirit of the greatest kindliness, the speeches delivered by the Ministry during the late debate. (Cheers.) He never before in his life had occasion to praise Sir James Graham, but he should say that the manly spirit and straightforwardness with which he delivered his speech was worthy of the highest commendation. (Cheers.) He would hold out both his hands to him to assist in extricating him from the dilemma into which he had fallen, and he would place him on a pedestal, the basis of which should be justice to Ireland. (Cheers.) Sir James Graham had said that concession had reached its limits—the meaning of which was, that justice should not be extended to Ireland. The Secretary for the Home Department had expressed his sorrow for that expression, and had declared that the Maynooth Bill was to be the precursor of more beneficial measures. Sir James Graham told the Recorder of Dublin that Protestant ascendancy had departed for ever. An ascendancy of any kind must be prejudicial to the interests of the country where it exists; and for his part he would not hesitate to declare that he would rather ascend the scaffold than tolerate for one moment a Catholic ascendancy. (Hear, hear.) They would have no ascendancy, and three cheers for Sir James Graham. (Immense applause.) The speech of the right honourable baronet was a manly, candid, and repentant speech, and gave abundant promise of amendment. (Hear, hear.) He considered they ought to send him absolution from the Conciliation Hall. (Loud laughter.) For his part, he freely forgave him for calling him a "convicted conspirator." With the speech of Sir Robert he had not much fault to find. He (Sir Robert Peel) had alluded to the state trials, and boasted of the vindication of the law, but he forgot to mention the result which had occurred; he supposed he had forgotten it, but they would pardon the small mistake. (Laughter.) On the whole, he considered the debate as most creditable, and he was certainly astonished at seeing so much type in England, and so little abuse of him.—The meeting was subsequently addressed by Mr. Smith O'Brien, M.P., Mr. Dillon Browne, M.P., Mr. Steele, and Mr. Grey Porter; and, at the conclusion of the proceedings, Mr. O'Connell announced the rent for the week to be £355 19s. 6d.

THE MARKETS.

Corn Exchange.—As is almost invariably the case at this period of the year, the arrivals of wheat of home produce for our market continue on a very moderate scale, though of full average quality. The demand for all descriptions has ruled tolerably steady, and previous rates have been supported in every instance. In free foreign wheat, the amount of business doing has been trifling; nevertheless, holders have realised full prices without much apparent difficulty. Owing to the large imports of barleys, the trade with that article has been in a very sluggish state, at a decline of 1s. per quarter. Malt has met a heavy inquiry, at unaltered figures. Oats, beans, and peas have gone off steadily, and the quotations have had an upward tendency. Our foreign advices state that the corn trade continues heavy, at barely previous rates. Shipments of corn are now being made from most of the Baltic ports.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 52s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distilling, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —s; Dantzig, red, 38s to 42s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to—, per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Exceedingly little business has been transacted in Clover seed since our last, and prices rule almost nominal. Canary seed is in fair request, at full currencies. In other kinds of seeds next to nothing is doing. Linseed English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 50s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s; extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 48s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 6d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 45s 11d; barley, 31s 11d; oats, 21s 4d; rye, 32s 1d; beans, 35s 1d; peas, 36s 1d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 45s 10d; barley, 32s 6d; oats, 21s 4d; rye, 30s 7d; beans, 34s 11d; peas, 35s 8d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 6s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 8s 6d; peas, 7s 6d.

Tea.—All descriptions of both black and green teas have met a dull inquiry at the public sales in progress this week; and the quotations have suffered a further decline of from ½d to 3d per lb. Privately, very little business is doing.

Sugar.—Grocery parcels of West India sugar have met a very active request since our last, and the quotations have had an upward tendency. Bengal Mauritius, as well as foreign sugars, have sold to some extent, at extreme rates. Standard lumps have sold at 70s, and brown patent, 68s per cwt.

Coffee.—Ceylon has been in active request, at full prices, good ordinary having sold at 44s to 45s per cwt. In other kinds of coffee only a moderate business has been doing, at late rates.

Cocoa.—Trinidad has been in steady request, at an advance of 2s per cwt., while the value of other parcels is fully supported.

Fruit.—Very little is doing in raisins, at 44s for Valencia. For currants, the market is very dull, at 44s to 49s per cwt. Figs are commanding a ready sale, at 38s to 45s per cwt.

Rice.—This article has met a slow inquiry this week, and Bengal has declined 3d per cwt.

Oils.—Linseed oil is in good request, at full prices. All other oils move off steadily, and late rates are supported.

Provisions.—For Irish butter the demand is excessively dull, at a depression of 1s per cwt. The supplies of foreign butter being large, that article has sold at 1s to 2s per cwt less money—the highest figures being 90s to 94s per cwt. Bacon is a slow inquiry, and 1s per cwt. lower. For forward delivery very little is doing. Lard is firm, at full prices. In other kinds of provisions we have scarcely any sales to report

Tallow.—Although the deliveries continue good, buyers act with great caution, and the quotations are not supported; P Y.C., on the spot, selling at 37s 6d to 38s; and for forward delivery, 37s 9d to 38s per cwt.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 12s to £4 15s; useful ditto, £4 16s to £5 10s; fine upland ditto, £5 12s to £5 16s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6; oat straw, £1 18s to £2; wheat straw, £2 to £2 2s, per load.

Coals.—Carr's Hartley, 17s; East Tanfield, 13s 6d; Holywell Main, 16s; Ord's Redheugh, 14s; Tanfield Moor, 17s; Wylam, 15s; Adelaide, 19s 6d; Lambton, 20s, per ton.

Smithfield.—The supplies of fat stock brought forward this week have been tolerably good. Prime beef and mutton have been in good request, at full prices; otherwise, the demand has been in a sluggish state:—Beef, from 2s 10d to 4s 2d; mutton, 3s to 4s 8d; lamb, 4s 8d to 6s; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 6d: and pork, 2s 10d to 4s, per 8lb., to sink the offals.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—We have been fairly supplied with each kind of meat, while the trade may be considered steady, at our quotations:—Beef, from 2s 8d to 3s 8d; mutton, 2s 10d to 3s 10d; lamb, 4s 8d to 5s 10d; veal, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; and pork, 2s 8d to 4s, per 8lb., by the carcase.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The effect of Sir Robert Peel's allusion to the state of our diplomatic relations with America was powerfully felt in the English Market at the commencement of the week. Consols receded to 98¾ ⅞; and although a slight rally has been made since, prices continue heavy, notwithstanding a better business has been doing than previously to the last week. Consols at closing quoted 98¾ ⅞ for Money, and 99 for Time. Bank Stock has been, and remains at, 209½ to 210½; Reduced Three per Cents., 97⅞ to 98; Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents., 100⅞; Exchequer Bills, 60 to 58; and India Stock, for Account, 277. Long Annuities, 11⅝.

The Foreign Market has been affected by the state of affairs in the English house, and all descriptions of securities are consequently flat. Spanish Actives have ranged between 30¼ ⅜ to 30½, closing at that price. The Three per Cents opened on Monday, at 40⅜ to ⅞, and, at the close of the week continue the same. Mexican have receded from Monday's price of 37⅜ to ⅜ to 37½. Portuguese are good at 66½. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents quote 63¼. Four per Cent Certificates, 97⅜ to ⅝. Columbian, 15⅝.

The Railway Market opened flatly on Monday, and the continuance of sales contributes to make all quotations heavy. Considerable influence has been produced upon the market by the rejection of the Churnet Valley line, for non-compliance with the standing orders. The doubtful position that the holders of Scrip in the best lines find themselves placed in by a determination so perfectly unlooked for as the rejection of such a line of railway upon a mere technical difficulty, after its receiving the sanction of the Board of Trade, and, in addition, such undividedly favourable opinions on the part of the public, tends, of course, to depress the market for all description of Scrip. Churnet Valley Shares, on Monday, quoted 9, and, upon the news of the line being thrown out, the price receded to 5, but a seasonable advertisement on the part of the Directors has since improved quotations to 6¼, at which price they close. The lines that have suffered most from the depression are, Aberdeen, which close at 3½; Birmingham and Gloucester, 132; Harwich, 1½; Newcastle and Berwick, 14½; Richmond and West End Junction, 4¼; Rugby, 4¼; Scottish Midland, 3⅝; Scottish Central, 5⅜; Edinburgh and Glasgow have improved to 66, and Blackwall, to 9¼. The cause of the rise in the latter is a proposition of the Directors to issue new shares of £6 13s. 4d. each, payable at certain intervals to meet the present loans upon debentures as they fall due. A saving of £8000 per annum will be effected by this change, which meets with considerable approval on the part of the shareholders. The allotment of shares in the Nottingham and Mansfield Railway was concluded yesterday. The quotation for time is from 3 to 4 premium. All the French lines continue depressed, but this probably arises more from the state of the Paris market than any effect produced here. The closing prices are—Cambridge and Lincoln, 8⅛; Chester and Holyhead, 16⅜; Coventry and Leicester, 2½; Direct Northern are 4⅜; and London and York, in which extensive dealings continue, are 4½; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 10⅜; Dublin and Galway, 4¼; Esstern Counties, 19⅜; Ely and Bedford, 2⅞; Great North of Scotland, 3½; Great Western, 188½; Brighton, 63¼; South Western, 81; Lynn and Ely, 7⅛; Newark and Sheffield, 4⅜; Newcastle and Berwick, 14½; Preston and Wyre, 34; Richmond and West end Junction, 4½; Dover, 41¼; South Wales, 5⅜; Trent Valley, 19; York and North Midland, 104; Waterford and Kilkenny, 4⅛; Boulogne and Amiens, 10½; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 2⅜; Great Northern of France, 5 to ½; Ditto, Rosamels, 2⅜; Paris and Lyons, 1⅞; Namur and Liege, 6¼; Orleans and Bordeaux, 10⅞; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's), 2⅝; Paris and Lyons (Ganneron's), 2½; Paris and Strasbourg, 2⅞; Royal North of Spain, 2⅞.

EXHIBITION OF THE NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

THE CRUSADER'S FIRST SIGHT OF JERUSALEM.—BY H. WARREN.

The Private View of the Gallery of this Society took place on Saturday last, and on the Monday following the rooms were opened to the public. An alteration has taken place in the internal arrangement of the rooms, by the substitution of small screens for the old partitions, which has had the effect of throwing the whole into a single gallery.

The Exhibition of this year cannot, on the whole, be considered an improvement on its predecessors. Still there are enough of graceful and pleasing drawings to employ a good-natured critic, and we prefer noticing what is good, so as to guide our readers to it, to pointing out faults which are generally apparent enough in themselves. The first which comes under our notice is :—

No. 27. "Judgment of Midas," by John Absolon. This artist possesses some humour, and a graceful pencil, but his manner is thin and poor. In the present drawing he shows his capability of the first, and the meagrenesss of the last-named quality.

36. "Day-break, 'Rosalind, Celia, and Touchstone, leaving the Palace.' 'As You Like It.'" G. Dodgson. A Sketch, but admirable in tone, a quality characteristic of everything by this artist in the exhibition, accompanied, however, by a certain minuteness of handling unfavourable to breadth of effect.

We give an Engraving of "The Gipsy's Home," (306); another small drawing of Mr. Dodgson, remarkable for its warmth and truth of colour, and execllent chiaro scuro.

58. "Flowers." By Mrs. Margetts. A charming sketch.

61. "The Prisoner of Gisors." By E. H. Wehnert. The subject of this drawing is the employment of a captive in one of the dungeons of an ancient Breton castle. He is seated before a rude bas-relief of our Lord's Crucifixion, which he has hewn out of the wall, with a lump of stone as a mallet, and a rusty nail for a chisel. A gleam of light is straying over the work, and the head and shoulders of the artist. The tone is finely ideal; the drawing good; and the manner of painting simple and powerful. It is, in every respect, one of the finest, if not the finest, work in the Gallery. We suspect it to be the latter.

55. "The Crusaders' First Sight of Jerusalem." Mr. Warren has displayed great ability in the grouping and distribution of this drawing, and there are passages of great power in its execution—such, for example, as the mantle of the kneeling priest on the left hand of the painting; but, generally, there is a want of solidity displayed in it, and the thinness of its character is, perhaps, hardly obviated by the occasional strength shown in its colour and handling.

We furnish engravings of these two fine works.

81. "Ferdinand, Governor-General of the Low Countries, visiting Rubens at Antwerp." Mr. Haghe has produced in the present drawing one of the richest and most brilliant studies of colour we have ever seen upon the walls of a water-colour exposition. The back-ground is an astonishing piece of executional richness, and the heads are, with the exception of that of the wife of the painter, admirably treated. The head of the child, especially (a study after Rubens' own painting), is an exquisite bit of espiègle nature, although it is somewhat too thin in its mode, and rather chill in colour. Throughout, it is carefully drawn and vigorously painted, and is, certainly, the lion of the exhibition, as far as regards colour, although the strong blue of the Governor-General's scarf is slightly too glaring. If Mr. Wehnert's drawing be not the best upon the walls of the Gallery, Mr. Haghe's certainly is.

THE GIPSY'S HOME.—BY G. DODGSON.

77. "Grapes." By Mrs. Margetts. To criticise this lady's fruit and flowers, is to give them uninterrupted praise. Nothing can be more perfect than the bloom and ripeness of the berries on these two clusters.

183. "Le Tombeau du Pêcheur." Jos. J. Jenkins. A very poetically-conceived little drawing, of which we furnish an engraving. The light is admirably managed.

191. "Pilgrims to the Holy Well." F. W. Topham. Full of grace and character, like all the Irish subjects by Mr. Topham in this exhibition, though one might wish for a little more solidity. Still this, and other similar works by the same artist, are admirable for their truth to the nature they delineate, and furnish examples of the perfect subjects for artistic treatment to be found in the Green Island.

212. "Sheep Washing." E. Duncan, of which we furnish an engraving. Decidedly the best landscape in the exhibition—beautifully composed, and coloured with an artist-like knowledge of nature.

272. "Courtship." C. H. Weigall. A graceful episode, gracefully treated. We subjoin an engraving.

FROM "COURTSHIP."—BY C. H. WEIGALL.

THE MILKMAID.—BY JOHN ABSOLON.

LE TOMBEAU DU PECHEUR.—BY JOS. J. JENKINS.

278. "The Milkmaid." John Absolon. This is one of those charming, though slight, studies from genuine English nature, of which Mr. Absolon is a master. His drawing is free and good. We subjoin an engraving.

156. "At Andernach, on the Rhine." Another graceful little sketch, by Mr. Fahey, and a good likeness of the place.

203. "Roses." By Mrs. Margetts. Another admirable contribution (indeed, her best) from the pencil of this talented lady.

244. Mr. Edward Corbould has selected Eugene Sue's last novel for illustration. His subject is the travelling equipage of Dagobert and the gentle twins, who are one of the most exquisite conceptions ever begotten by the pen of the novelist. We are sorry to be compelled to say that Mr. Corbould has rendered them most unsatisfactorily. Indeed, the only parts of the painting to which he appears to have done justice is the moustache of the old soldier, and the landscape back-ground. The head of the horse might also be excepted were it not too statuesque for our ideas of pictorial nature. The colour is clear and brilliant.

Miss Setchell's Miniature of her father (No. 305) is admirable, although we should have preferred meeting her upon similar ground to that which she occupied the first year of her exhibition with this society.

THE PRISONER OF GISORS.—BY E. H. WEHNERT.

194. "Shrimpers—the Beach near Winchelsea." E. Duncan. Beautiful for its finish and its composition. The effect of a warm sun on the wet beach is admirably managed, and the figures of the shrimpers, who rise against the sky towards the centre, give a character and significance to the whole.

274. "Summer." H. Jutsum. Painted with freedom and intelligence. The composition is good, and the branches of the trees have a certain moveable appearance that in an age of rigidity is pleasant. This artist should, however, conquer his tendency to strong positive greens.

In this article we have passed over many works which would have had our notice did not want of space limit our remarks. And had we been desirous of exhibiting our critical acuteness by pointing out faults, we should have found ample opportunity of doing so. But we prefer silence to severity. The new society has already been the means of introducing to the public many young artists of great excellence, and more of great promise, and we were glad to see the green ticket with its pleasant epigraph, "sold," attached to so many frames as early as Monday. Indeed, we believe the number of pictures sold this year is greater than on any preceding occasion.

EVERY BODY'S COLUMN.

EVENING MELODIES.—NO. IX.

She sang of Judah's sun-bright hills,
Of Judah's waving woods;
She sang of all its living rills,
And holy solitudes.
Nor that she'd seen its cloudless skies,
Or trod its verdant plains;
Yet ever since her voice could rise,
She'd woo'd them in her strains!
She turn'd her pale face eastward now,
And tun'd her harp-strings low;
And a red flush came o'er her brow,
Like evening light on snow!

"Oh! when wilt Thou descend in might,
God of the Hebrew's trust!
And sweep our foes from Zion's height,
As whirlwinds sweep the dust?
Despair each feverish bosom fills,
Where Hope was wont to dwell:
But one fresh breeze from Judah's hills,
And all would yet be well!
Sighs for neglect, and tears for guilt—
With each petition blend;
Thou'st promised and we know Thou wilt,
But when wilt Thou descend?

"We mark'd the sear leaves fade, and thought
Our hopes were like them then;
But now that Spring the woods hath sought
They bud and bloom again:
It is Thy glowing breath, that thus
Hath made the landscape new;
Let but Thy favour shine on us,
We shall be joyous too!
We know a land where cedars be,
And stately palm-trees bend;
Our hearts grow faint that spring to see—
Oh when wilt Thou descend?"

Sweet Jewish maid! thy evening lay
Hath died on copse and hill;
Yet thoughts and hopes it stirr'd, shall stay
To soothe my spirit still!
A holy lesson thou hast taught
By these sad notes of thine;
And did I read it as I ought,
A happy life were mine!
If thus to climes by thought made dear,
Thy daily songs are giv'n,
Oh! why do we who sojourn here,
So seldom sing of Heav'n? R. R. S.

LORD BROUGHAM AND LORD CAMPBELL.

The other night Lord Brougham assured the house that he was not actuated by interested motives in any course he might adopt as to railways, because he had no stock. Lord Campbell observed that he would have been much better pleased had he been informed that the ex-Chancellor had no choler!

THE JESUITS.

At this moment, when all Switzerland is in arms against the Jesuits, the following history of the banishments of this order from different countries will be read with interest:—"The Jesuits were banished from Venice in 1606; from Bohemia, in 1618; from Naples, in 1622; from the Low Countries, in the same year; from India, in 1623; from Portugal, in 1752; from France, in 1764; from Spain, in 1767; and last from Rome, in 1773."

SPRING.

Vale of the Medway! now the vernal ray
Openeth thy blossoms to the admiring view—
No more at eventide may I pursue
The flowery path along thy winding way:
Fated to labour on from day to day
'Mid scenes that make the Muses stand aloof—
Where the street echoes to the clattering hoof—
The rattling omnibus, and rumbling dray:
Vale of the Medway! where the lily's bell
Breathes out its perfume to the dewy night,
And, to the song of amorous Philomel,
Upon the waters dance the moonbeams bright;
Ever as Spring returns, will memory dwell
Upon thy beauties with renewed delight! H. F. L.

A DWARF FAMILY.

The Ross-shire Advertiser mentions a dwarf family residing at Kishorn of Applecross, each of whom is of less dimensions than and as proportionate as Tom Thumb. The father of these pigmies (John Finlay) is a poor cotter of the ordinary or middle size, and the mother is rather beyond it. The eldest son, Master Finlay, is upwards of 20 years of age, and stands 2 feet 10 inches in height. The next is a girl, somewhat the junior of Finlay in years, and considerably less in stature, and the third, and last, is a boy, aged 15, a mere pigmy. It is ludicrous to see these little creatures sit around their little dinner table; but to observe them dance together, reminds one forcibly of the Celtic account of dancing elves.

THE ADVANTAGE OF WAITING.

A friend of ours courted a lady for twenty-eight years, and then married her. She turned out to be a perfect virago, but died in two years after the wedding. "Now," said our friend, in a self gratulating tone, "see what I have escaped by a long courtship."—Noah's American Messenger.

POPULATION OF THE WORLD.

America could support nine hundred and thirty millions of people without being so densely populated as Europe now is. The present population of Europe is about 238 millions; of America, 55 millions; of the whole earth, 1100 millions.

SYDNEY SMITH ON GOVERNMENT.

The object of all government (said the late Sydney Smith) is roast mutton, potatoes, claret, a stout constable, an honest justice, a clear highway, a free chapel.

THE DONKEY NO ASS!

We all talk of the ass as the stupidest of the browsers of the field; yet if any one shuts up a donkey in the same enclosure with half a dozen horses of the finest blood, and the party escapes, it is infallibly the poor donkey that has led the way. It is he alone that penetrates the secret of the bolt and latch.

ROOKS BUILDING IN THE CITY.

In the small churchyard of St. Peter, West Cheap, situate in Wood-street, Cheapside, immediately adjoining the Cross Keys, stands a solitary tree, on the lofty branches of which two pair of rooks have this year built themselves nests, and are now busily engaged in rearing two broods, which have been recently hatched.

A DOLPHIN.

One of these very singular fish was exhibited on Wednesday at Mr. Groves's fish warehouse, in New Bond-street. It was the delphinus phoecenu, not the vari-coloured dolphin which is peculiar to the tropical seas. It was captured off Yarmouth, in Norfolk, and measured in length eight feet six inches, and was four feet four inches in circumference. It is a very rare specimen of the kind on the coasts of Britain.

A TERRIBLE TIME.

"Wal there's a row over to our house! What on airth's the matter, you little sarpent?" "Why dad's got drunk, mother's dead, Sal's got married, and run away with all the spoons, Peter has swallowed a pin, and Luke's looked at the Aurora Borax till he's got the delirium triangles. That ain't all neethir." "What else upon airth?" "Rose split the butter-pot, and broke the pancakes, and one of the Maltese kittens has got her head into the molasses cup, and can't get it out again, and O how hungry I am."—American paper.

PATENT SELF-ACTING PAGING MACHINE.

A machine has been recently invented by Mr. William Shaw, of Liverpool, and has been exhibited during the past week at No. 3, Crane-court, Fleet-street. It is a perfect mechanical curiosity, and well deserving a visit from the lovers of mechanical science. Here we can see a very pleasing and suitable occupation for young females, who, with the aid of this machine, can page a large account book in the course of a few minutes, in beautifully clear printed figures, a simple action of a lever governing the entire apparatus, changing the figures from 1 up to 10,000, which supply themselves with ink from small composition rollers.

A LADY'S IDEA OF PARTY.

A young American lady, being asked by a boring politician which party she was most in favour of, replied that she preferred a wedding-party.

EARLY RISING.

There is a freshness and a purity in the morning, which, to the physical and moral state of man, is vigour and delight. It is seldom that the sensualist, the idle, or the vain, taste its ethereal joys. A mystical spirit lurks in the perfumed breath of awakened creation, which is undoubtedly gifted with supernatural power. Those who would live long and see good days, must habitually become early risers. The loss of the morning hour is never retrieved.

A GREAT IMPROVEMENT.

A mechanic of Edinburgh has just invented a new description of grate, by which a greater quantity of heat is thrown out than can be obtained by the common grates now in use, and, by the introduction of reflecting plates, the heat is equally diffused throughout the room, while no greater amount of fuel is required. From the peculiarity of its construction, the heat is also prevented escaping up the chimney.

A FAITHFUL COMPANION.

The fellow was witty (says the Boston Bee) who, at a toast celebration "down East," lately gave the following:—"Here's a health to poverty; it sticks by us when all friends forsake us."

A ROBBER'S ALBUM.

In the possession of a man named Harrison, convicted of a highway robbery near Leeds, and sentenced to transportation, a diary has been found, consisting of a record of all his robberies! The book is small and neat, is gilt-edged, and forms, in fact, a sort of robber's album. It would appear from one of the entries, that a man named White, convicted of highway robbery at the same assizes, was, in reality (as he himself solemnly protested) innocent of the crime, and that Harrison was the robber.

LITERARY CURIOSITY.

The Council of the Shakspeare Society has recently been put in possession of a great literary curiosity—a quarto edition of "The Taming of the Shrew," the existence of which was unknown. It was always supposed that this comedy was one of those which made its first appearance in the folio of 1623, and that it had been there printed from a manuscript. It is now certain that, like many others, "The Taming of the Shrew" had first come from the press in quarto, and that in the folio of 1623 it was printed from it.

NOVEL APPLICATION OF THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.

The Constitutionnel announces that an electric telegraph is to be established between the Chamber of Deputies and the Palace of the Tuileries. "By this means," it says, "the Chief of the State will be informed of the progress of the debates on important questions, and may immediately forward his advice to the members of the Cabinet."

The Rev. H. W. Jones, M.A., curate of St. Martin in-the-Fields, has been appointed to the incumbency of the district church of St. James, Curtain-road. Patron, the Bishop of London.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY AND THE MAYNOOTH GRANT.—The heads of houses, in reply to the requisition which has been addressed to them, calling upon them to convene a meeting of the Senate for the purpose of petitioning against the Maynooth grant, have stated that it would be inexpedient to comply with the wish of the requisitionists.

DEATH OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP OF DERRY.—The Dublin Freeman's Journal says:—"We feel exceeding pain in communicating to the public the sudden death of the venerated Bishop of Derry, the Right Rev. Dr. M'Loughlin, under circumstances exceedingly deplorable. We shall not, for the present, enter more into the circumstances of this distressing event than thus briefly to record it.

THE PRISONER HOCKER.—The prisoner has been again visited by his father, and after handing to him the names of those persons whom he wished to see for the last time, expressed himself perfectly resigned, at the same time very earnestly requesting that his mother would visit him when he takes his farewell of his friends. He still continues writing, although upon being questioned by his friends he declares that he has nothing to add to the statement he had made at the trial, by way of elucidating the mystery which still hangs over the murder. It is not generally known that during the period the prisoner was engaged at the St. John's Wood school, he was a contributor to several religious publications, and for some time, from his knowledge of stenography, was a reporter of sermons for a publication especially devoted to those subjects.

UPTON'S PARISIAN GOLD DETERGENT, 2s. 6d. per bottle.—This wonderful production, without the least risk to the most delicate gold, instantly restores the Oldest Gilding, however fly-spotted or tarnished, to the highest splendour of new, at the expense of a few pence for a large Gilt Frame. Or-molu, Lacquer, and Bronze, 1s. 6d., and Silver Plating Liquid for Coppery Plate, 1s. per bottle. These are equally cheap and effective.—UPTON and Co., 33, George-street, Hanover-square, and 66, Basinghall-street, City.

A SHOWER BATH, with curtains, 12s. 6d.; ditto, with copper conducting tubes, from 60s.; sponging baths, 12s, 19s., and 21s.; hip ditto, 19s. and 20s.; toilet cans, 5s. 6d.; foot tubs, 5s. 6d. Also, every description of Japan Ware thirty per cent under any other house.—R. and J. SLACK beg to call attention to the quality of their Baths; as they are all manufactured on their premises, they can confidently warrant them for durability. Their Illustrated Catalogue of Baths, and every description of Furnishing Ironmongery may be had gratis, or sent post-free.—RICHARD and JOHN SLACK, 336, Strand, opposite Somerset House. Established 1818.

ESTABLISHED 18 YEARS.—WOOLLEN, SCOTCH, and MANCHESTER WAREHOUSE.—In calling the attention of the Public to a stock suited for the present season, the foolish assertion of selling cheaper than any house in the Kingdom is not held out as is too often the case; but, at the same time, we positively assert that no house can go to market better, or sell at a smaller rate of profit, our business being conducted on one system, viz., for Ready Money, thus enabling us at all times to meet the utmost competition. Every article in the Establishment is marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, from which no deviation can be made. We invite all to inspect and judge for themselves, being confident one purchase will ensure enlarged recommendations and support. No connection with any other house.—HILL and MILLS, 89, St. Martin's-lane, and Corner of St. Martin's-court.

DRESS COIFFURES.—As it has become necessary, in accordance with the prevailing mode, to dispose the Hair in effective masses, or in conspicuous nœuds, a certain body of hair is essential to afford the coiffeur the means of producing the arrangement. Thinness or weakness of the Hair is, in these cases, a complete obstacle, and it is only to be effectually remedied by the application of OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA, which prevents the Hair from turning grey, and the first application causes it to curl beautifully, frees it from scurf, and stops it from falling off and a few bottles restore it again. Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle No other prices are genuine. Oldridge's Balm, 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand.

A WONDERFUL CASE of an Attested CURE of DROPSY, by HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT!—Copy of a Letter from Mr. THOMAS TAYLOR, Chemist, Stockton.—"April 17, 1845. Sir, Mrs. Clough, the wife of Mr. John Clough, of Acaklam, a respectable farmer, had been suffering from Dropsy for five years, and had the best medical advice, without receiving any benefit. She heard of your Pills and Ointment, and used them with such surprising benefit, that she has now left off taking them, being so well—but, previously she had been given up as incurable.—Signed, THOMAS TAYLOR."—Sold at Professor Holloway's Establishment, 244, Strand (where advice may be had gratis), and by all Vendors of Medicine throughout the civilized world.

THE ORTHOCHRONOGRAPH, patented by WEBSTER and SON, 74, Cornhill, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty and the East India Company. This newly-invented instrument will determine the correct performance of Chronometers, Watches, and Clocks, and show their distance from the correct time at any place. The simplicity, portability, and the ease with which the results are obtained, will enable the most inexperienced to ascertain mean time to a correctness not hitherto attained but by experienced persons in the use of astronomical instruments It may be adjusted to its position in two minutes. An explanatory paper, with their publication, forwarded free, upon inclosing two postage stamps. Price £4 10s.—74, Cornhill.

LIGHT WATERPROOF OVER-COATS. Now ready, for SPRING and SUMMER, BERDOE'S VENTILATING WATERPROOF FROCKS.—These well-known and gentlemanly garments will be found light and most agreeable substitutes for any other outside coat. They are made in the best manner, and are thoroughly respectable—equally free from vulgarity and singularity; are guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever, and no untried novelty, having been in extensive use among the respectable classes more than six years. A Large Stock of First-rate Garments, in new and greatly-improved materials (manufactured expressly for W. B.) now ready, of which an inspection is confidently invited.—Made only by W. BERDOE, Tailor, Waterproofer, &c., 69, Cornhill.

A GREAT LUXURY IN WARM WEATHER, AND AN IMPORTANT ARTICLE FOR THE HAIR.—The presence of Scurf in the Hair, besides its dirty, unsightly appearance, is a constant source of annoyance; it irritates the skin, and, by clogging the pores, produces heat and heaviness in the head, and eventually destroys the hair. CHURCHER'S MEDICATED HAIR WASH will be found a perfect remedy; it immediately removes the Scurf, leaves the hair clean and soft, allays all irritation, and bestows a delightful sense of coolness. In short, it will be found both a preservative to the hair, and a perfect luxury in use.
Sold in Bottles, at 2s. 6d. and 5s. each, by Thomas Churcher, Human Hair Manufacturer, and Wholesale Perfumer, No. 22, King-street, Regent-street, London; by Mr. Grignon, Chemist, 174, Regent-street; and by all respectable Perfumers and Chemists in Town and Country.

SANATORIUM, or HOME IN SICKNESS.—The lease of the house hitherto occupied by this Institution having expired, and the house itself being unfitted, by its want of accommodation, for the purposes of the Institution, the Committee have long sought in vain for some suitable mansion which they might rent until sufficient funds could be raised for building. Unsuccessful in this attempt, they have been reluctantly compelled to close the establishment for the present. Convinced, however, from the experience they have had, that, if convenient premises could be purchased or built, the institution would not only support itself, but also afford the means of greatly extending its usefulness, the Committee have determined to exert themselves to procure the necessary funds for this purpose. So soon as these shall be obtained, the institution will be re-opened.—Further information may be had, and subscriptions paid to the Secretary, at the Office of F. W. Pott, Esq., 13, Godliman-street, Doctors' Commons; and Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co., Bankers, Lothbury. HENRY S. SMYTH, Secretary.

PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—The extraordinary success of this Medicine is the wonder of the age; it has been tried by hundreds of thousands as an aperient, and has in every instance done good: it has never, in the slightest degree, impaired the most delicate constitution. Tens of thousands have testified that perseverance in the use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS will completely cure any disease, and are living witnesses of the benefit received from this invaluable medicine.—Sheets of testimonials, and the "Life and Times of Old Parr," may be had, gratis, of every respectable Medicine Vendor throughout the Kingdom.
Beware of spurious imitations of the above Medicine. None are genuine unless the words 'PARR'S LIFE PILLS" are in WHITE LETTERS ON A RED GROUND, engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted round each box; also, the fac-simile of the signature of the Proprietors, "T. ROBERTS and Co.," London, on the directions.
Sold in boxes, at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and family packets, at 11s., by Edwards, 67, St. Paul's; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street; Sutton and Co., Bow Churchyard, London; Mottershead and Co., Manchester: and J. and R. Raimes and Co., Edinburgh; and by all respectable druggists and patent Medicine retailers throughout the Kingdom.—Directions are given with each box

WATCHES by WEBSTER and SON, Chronometer Makers to the Lords of the Admiralty and the East India Company.—Webster and Son's manufactory has continued in Cornhill 134 years, where may be selected from one of the most extensive stocks in London, every description of superior manufacture in Chronometers, Watches, and Clocks, finished under their immediate inspection on the premises, and at the lowest prices consistent with security for the maintenance of that reputation for superior workmanship which has distinguished their house for so many years. Compensated duplex and lever watches, to counteract the variations of temperature, upon the principle of their chronometers, to which Government awarded the prizes three years in succession; small elegant lever and horizontal watches in gold cases, engraved or engine-turned for ladies or gentlemen; small flat silver detached lever and horizontal watches, for youths, at very moderate prices; marine and pocket chronometers, new and second-hand; ornamental and every description of clocks; regulators upon the most approved principles. Superior workmen are employed upon the premises in the repairing department for English and foreign work. The utmost value allowed for old watches in exchange.—WEBSTER and SON'S Publication, with their Equation Table for the Present Year, will be sent free on the receipt of four postage stamps. A large selection of fine Second-hand Watches at very low prices.—74, Cornhill, London.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.
Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844.
WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz.:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing. The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means. From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.
This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other Utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.
 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.
Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular to ask ing for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

IMPORTANT AND LABOUR-SAVING DISCOVERY.
SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, for cleaning Gold and Silver Plate, Jewellery, Silver Plated Goods, &c., &c.—The following Letter, from Dr. URE the eminent Chemist, at once establishes the usefulness of this new discovery:—
"I have examined the preparation invented by Messrs. JONES, for cleaning silver, called SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, and find it to be safe, effectual, and instantaneous in its operation. Being founded on chemical principles, it merely removes the tarnish on plate, and restores the white silver lustre without abrading or wearing the precious metal itself in the slightest degree.
ANDREW URE, M.D., F.R.S, &c.
Professor of Chemistry and Analytical Chemist.
London, 13, Charlotte-street, Bedford-square, March 8th 1845.
It is of little consequence whether the article to be cleaned has been laid by for days or years, whether it be only discoloured or tarnished as black as a hat, immediately on the application of the SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM the discoloration is removed, and then, with a soft and clean washleather, a most brilliant and virgin-white polish may be produced. In chased silver the deepest nook and corner, where dirt and corrosion are so difficult to remove, become equally polished with the level surface by simply using a soft plate brush. The manner of using it is so simple that a child may in a few seconds produce a polish which in the ordinary way could not be given by an experienced plate cleaner in as many hours.
Sold in Half-Pint, Pint, and Quart bottles, at 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s.; and Sample Bottles at 9d. each, by all respectable Chemists, Silversmiths, and Ironmongers.—CAUTION.—Every genuine bottle of this compound is protected by the Stamp and Address of the only Inventors and Makers, JONES and Co., Light-House, 201, Strand, London.

GREAT NOVELTY IN PERIODICAL LITERATURE.
On the First of May next,
THE ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE
WILL BE ISSUED AS
A BOUND VOLUME,
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

The issuing of a Magazine in bound volumes monthly, will remove the great objection to periodical publications when sent out in paper covers. They are always unsightly, are frequently lost by being scattered about, and give an appearance of carelessness and neglect to the drawing-room, or library table, where neatness and elegance of arrangement are so desirable.

The plan on which the New Series of the ILLUMINATED MAGAZINE will be issued will obviate these objections; it will furnish every month, to the book-case or library,

A HANDSOME BOUND VOLUME,
(PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE)

in small 8vo., which will be enriched with the best ARTISTIC and LITERARY talent of the day VOLUME IV. of the OLD SERIES, containing the last Six Months' Parts, is Now Ready handsomely bound in cloth, gilt. Price 11s. Sets may be perfected, and Covers to bind vols had at the Office. Office, No. 1, Crane-court, Fleet-street, London.

FASHIONS FOR MAY.
UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF KENT.
THE NEW
MONTHLY BELLE ASSEMBLEE. Beautifully Embellished with highly-finished Steel Engravings, PORTRAITS OF THE NOBILITY, &c.

Both the Metropolitan and Provincial press have declared this the most deservedly popular of the Ladies' Magazines; and a reference to any recent number would be sufficient to establish its claims to the patronage it receives. It is the aim of the Editress to render it a decidedly literary publication, considerable space being devoted to notices of, and extracts from, new works. Neither is music nor the world of art neglected; while, in her selection of original articles, a distinct purpose is maintained—that of combining information with amusement; and, while eschewing the old world school of by-gone romance, to preserve a tone of refinement without effeminacy. Perhaps, however, the names of a few of the contributors whose talent enriches the pages of the "New Monthly Belle Assemblee" with stories illustrative of history or of life, sketches of society, essays, poetry, &c., will best establish the quality of its contents. These are—

Mrs. Abdy	C. H. Hitchings, Esq.	Mrs. F. B. Scott
Miss Acton	Miss Leslie	Charles Swain
Grace Aguilar	Dr. R. Shelton Mackenzie	Percy B. St. John
Captain Bellew, Author of "Memoirs of a Griffin"	N. Michell	Mrs. Edward Thomas
	Miss Power	Camilla Toulmin
W. G. J. Barker, Esq.	Mrs. Ponsonby	Mrs. White
Mrs. V. Bartholomew	Captain D. L. Richardson,	Eliza Walker
Calder Campbell	J. J. Reynolds	Elizabeth Youatt
W. H. Fisk	Anna Savage	E. A. H. O., &c &c.
The late Mrs. James Gray

When we consider the quantity of matter a number contains, the exquisite engravings which are included, and the elaborate plates and descriptions of the fashions, there can be no doubt that this Magazine, published at eightcenpence, is the cheapest as well as the best of its class.

THE TENANT'S RIGHTS.—In these times, when the position of the Tenant Farmers is one of great difficulty, it will not be improper to state that the MARK-LANE EXPRESS has ever been directed to the advocacy and support of the Rights of the Tenant Farmers to the fullest extent, and will not deviate from the course it has hitherto pursued. In stating this, it is not intended to do or say anything that shall prejudice the Landlord, believing the sound principle to be, that liberal conduct towards the Tenant will in the end be most beneficial to the Landlord.
THE MARK-LANE EXPRESS and AGRICULTURAL JOURNAL, is the Largest Agricultural and Commercial Newspaper, published every Monday Evening in time for Post.
THE MALT TAX.—This is the only Farmer's Paper in London which advocates the Repeal of the Malt Tax.
The object of the Proprietors of the MARK-LANE EXPRESS has been, and is, to render it in every way the most efficient organ of the Agricultural Classes. In authenticity and extent of Market Information, the MARK-LANE EXPRESS stands unrivalled. A Review of the Corn Trade (British and Foreign) fully explains the Causes which occasion the Rise or Fall in Prices, thus affording the Grower and Speculator some grounds for anticipating the stability or future tendency of prices. It contains the Latest State of the Monday's Market at Mark-lane, by the most eminent Factors, whose names are a sufficient guarantee for the genuineness of the Reports. The Latest Reports of the Cattle, Provision, Wool, Seed, Hop, Malt, and Commercial Markets, appear with the Leading Country Fairs and Agricultural Meetings. Authentic Weekly Advices are received from all the Important Markets in the Kingdom, our Colonial Possessions, as well as all parts of Europe and America. NEW ENVELOPE.—In consequence of the great variety of Counterfeit Envelopes of ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, and other disreputable means resorted to by unprincipled individuals for imposing on the public their highly pernicious compounds under the title of "KALYDOR," the Proprietors and sole Preparers of the Original and Genuine Preparation, acting under a sense of duty, and regardless of expense in the attainment of their object—the protection of the Public from Fraud and Imposition—have employed those celebrated artists, Messrs. Perkins, Bacon and Co., who have succeeded, at great cost, in producing from a steel plate a New Envelope of exquisite beauty. It comprises a highly-finished engraving of the Grecian Graces standing on a classic pedestal, on each side of which is a rich profusion of flowers springing from an elegant cornucopia: these tastefully blending with Arabesque scrolls and wreaths, encircle the Royal Arms of Great Britain, surmounting the words, "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," &c., &c, whilst a plinth at the foot displays the Signature of the Proprietors, in red, thus—

20, Hatton Garden, London, Jan 1, 1845. A. ROWLAND & SON.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Discovery, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It purifies the skin from all Eruptive Maladies, Freckles, Discolourations, &c. To the Complexion it imparts a radiant bloom, and a softness and delicacy to the Hands, Arms, and Neck.—Price 4s. 6d and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. Sold by the Proprietors as above, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

PATRONISED BY THE QUEEN AND ROYAL FAMILY OF GREAT BRITAIN, AND THE SEVERAL SOVEREIGNS AND COURTS OF EUROPE.
ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—This ELEGANT, FRAGRANT, and TRANSPARENT OIL, in its preservative, restorative, and beautifying qualities, for the Human Hair, is unequalled throughout the whole world. For Children, it is especially recommended as forming the basis of A Beautiful Head of Hair!!! Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.
CAUTION.—Each genuine bottle has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the Wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a fragrant white powder, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for preserving and beautifying the TEETH and strengthening the GUMS. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, imparting the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; and gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Scurvy is by its means eradicated from the gums, and a healthy action and redness are induced, so that the teeth, if loose, are thus rendered firm in their sockets. Price 2s. 9d. per box.
CAUTION.—As a protection from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden—to be engraved on the Government Stamp, which is affixed on each box.  All other articles under the same names are Fraudulent Imitations.

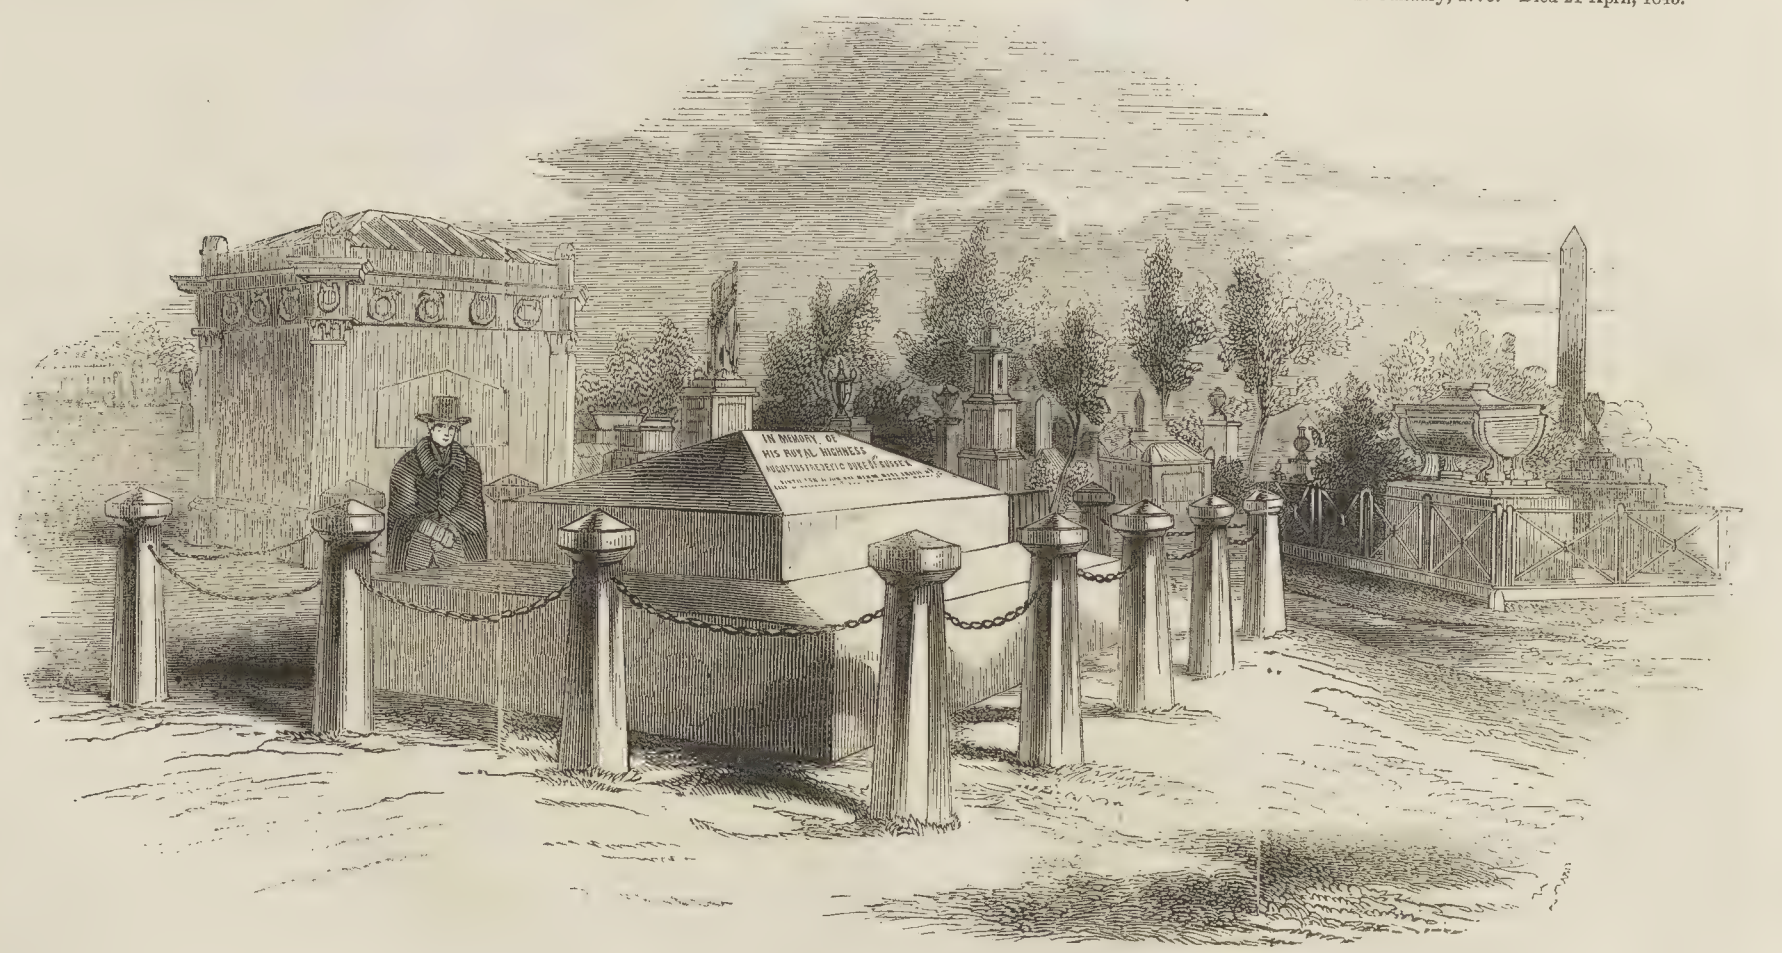
FUNERAL OF COL. CLIVE, C.B.

FUNERAL OF COLONEL CLIVE, C.B.

Monday was the day appointed for the funeral of the late Lieutenant-Colonel (Clive) commanding the Grenadier Guards; and the expectation of witnessing the solemn spectacle of a military procession caused crowds of well-dressed people to assemble at an early hour in the vicinity of Grafton-street, the residence of the deceased. At ten o'clock, a detachment of military arrived, and shortly after, the coffin containing the remains of the gallant Colonel was brought out. As the mournful cavalcade moved on, it was met by a party of troops, who formed in procession as they met the corpse with presented arms, and preceded the body in usual order of slow march, with arms reversed, keeping measured time with the solemn dirge of the "Dead March in Saul," performed by the band which followed. Then came the corpse borne on the shoulders of the men of the regiment, the hat and sword of the deceased lying on the top of the coffin, and an officer supporting each corner of the rich black velvet pall. The Colonel's charger, caparisoned in mourning trappings, and led by two orderlies, next followed. A long line of officers, the staff of the regiment, and other friends of the deceased, having black crape on their right arms, made up the mournful train. In Hyde Park-street (where our sketch was taken), and the road leading to the Great Western Railway, the Grenadier Guards were drawn up on each side; and as the solemn cortège passed through the lines, the word of command "attention" was given, and the soldiers performed the last military salute to their gallant chief. The body was conveyed by the railway into Herefordshire, there to be interred in the family mausoleum.



MONUMENT TO THE LATE DUKE OF SUSSEX, IN KENSAL-GREEN CEMETERY.

It will be remembered that shortly after the demise of his Royal Highness, a splendid mausoleum was proposed to be erected to the memory of the Duke by the Freemasons of England, of which ancient and honourable order his Royal Highness was the Grand Master; but, in accordance with the wishes expressed by the Duchess of Inverness, and other members of the family of the illustrious Prince, that intention has been abandoned, and the present monument has been erected at their own private expense. The spot selected as the situation for this monument is the centre of the circular grass plat, immediately in front of the chapel, at the upper end of the cemetery. It is of exceedingly massive design, but has not the slightest architectural ornament or sculptural display. The vault itself is a deep square excavation, capable of holding ten coffins: it is flagged at the bottom with Yorkshire paving, and inclosed with walls of 9-inch brickwork, the inner surface being covered with a smooth facing of cement. This brickwork forms the resting place for five stones, which constitute the entire of the above-ground work of the monument, and which are of grey Aberdeen granite. The four stones which form the upper walls of the monument are each rather more than 14 feet in length, and about 2 feet in height and thickness. These are surmounted by an enormous block of the same granite; and the five stones weigh nine tons. The entire height of the monument does not exceed 4 feet. It is surrounded by twelve granite pillars, each 3 feet 6 inches in height, quite plain, and connected with each other by chains.

Monday last (the 21st inst.), the anniversary of the death of the lamented Duke, was the day appointed for the removal of his Royal Highness's remains from the catacombs beneath the Chapel at Kensal Green, where they had been temporarily interred. The gates of the Cemetery were closed to the public during the morning: the Secretary of the Company, Mr. Croft, arrived at seven A.M. Soon after eleven o'clock, her Majesty's Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Delawarr, accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Chamberlain, Lord Willoughby D'Eresby, arrived at the Cemetery, in three carriages, to witness and superintend—as the representatives of her Majesty, and the other Royal relatives of the late Duke—the removal of his remains. They then descended into the catacombs, and the brick-work being removed, the coffin was placed upon the platform, and again wound up into the chapel, whence it was carried, by twelve men, to the mausoleum, and lowered into the vault, upon three supporters; the coronet and cushion were then replaced upon the coffin, and the masons proceeded to draw over the single block of stone—the mausoleum was closed, and the ceremony was at an end. Among the friends of the late Duke there were present the Earl of Dinorben, Mr. Walker, Colonel Tinte, the executors of his late Royal Highness, and the Chevalier de Berardi. The Duchess of Inverness visited the tomb in the afternoon, and remained till seven o'clock.

The massiveness of this unostentatious memorialis very striking: the upper stone bears the following simple inscription:—

In Memory of His Royal Highness,
Augustus Frederick, Duke of Sussex, K.G.,
Sixth Son of H. M. George 3rd.
Born 27 January, 1773. Died 21 April, 1843.

TOMB OF HIS LATE R. H. THE DUKE OF SUSSEX, AT KENSAL-GREEN CEMETERY.

No. 157.—Vol. VI. FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1845. [Sixpence.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

ONE or the most remarkable phenomena of the present month is presented in the "May Meetings," now commencing, and which are held in unbroken succession for several weeks, in Exeter Hall, and other places.

No country in the world is capable of doing so much without the assistance of the Government as England. The principle of association is thoroughly understoood, and the power of combined action completely developed. The most populous empire ever held by any nation was gained, extended, and consolidated by a company of traders, who were admitted, at last, to a co-authority with the Crown. The most gigantic banking establishment in the world—the Bank of England—gradually grew up from the association of some London merchants, who were, at last, employed by the Government to manage the payment of the interest of the national debt. Both the East India Company and the Bank of England sprang from the energy of private individuals, strengthened by union, and directed with skill that produced success and confidence. Our immense railway speculations are all managed by companies, in which the officers are elective, by those who are entitled to vote by the property qualification; each of them being a kind of body politic, liable, like the greater one, to divisions and disputes, but governed with much more wisdom and direct adaptation of means to ends than are displayed in conducting the affairs of the nation itself. Yet, in the beginning of the railway era, so far was the Government, or the Legislature, from encouraging these companies, that they had to encounter an immense amount of opposition; they now compel the Government to a course of special legislation and management for them alone. Then there are our large private mercantile firms, all exhibiting the same principle—union of effort, and mutual confidence—at work with the best results. In nothing are the English so distinguished from the other nations of Europe as in this general readiness and ability of acting together for a common purpose, without the application of any external support or coercion from the Executive. In France, it is acknowledged by one of their ablest statesmen, that the principle is scarcely yet comprehended, and its application, on a large scale, almost unknown. In France, they say, the Government must act with us, or we can do nothing; in England, we cry, let the Government only stand out of our way, and we will effect all. Both systems have their advantages and defects: the French Government, when it superintends a public improvement, does it well—witness their noble public edifices, squares, and monuments; if our Government meddles with anything of the sort, nothing but a miserable botching of the whole affair is to be expected, both in the management and the result. Had any French Ministry perpetrated such a cluster of architectural atrocities as the National Gallery, the stunted Nelson's Pillar, and those triumphs of ugliness—very prizes of deformity—the Fountains in Trafalgar-square—the indignation of the public would have driven it from power. But, on the other hand, our Docks and Railways, with which the Government has never interfered, are miracles of constructive ability.

But all these things, it may be said, are created in the spirit of gain, and that the activity and union from which they spring are but more effective demonstrations of the potency among us of the Mammon of unrighteousness. Those who say this, leave half the triumphs of united effort out of sight. For moral, religious, and benevolent purposes we join as readily, and act as energetically, as we do in worldly matters. And in the spirit with which we do this, the "May Meetings" take their rise. No one can say that the purposes for which men unite at them are selfish, narrow or circumscribed to any creed, country, or complexion. The objects of these assemblies of earnest and zealous men are too numerous to be detailed; their name is Legion; they include the gatherings of societies for missions of different powerful sects, for the education of the Blind, the Orphan, and the Deaf and Dumb, for the supply of books to those who could not or would not purchase them, for rendering the Scriptures into foreign tongues, for visiting the sick, for encouraging temperance, for converting the Jews, for discountenancing war—in short, for almost every conceivable purpose, religious or philanthropic, there is a society, with a machinery and management as complete and as actively worked as that of any company for a commercial purpose. Can any selfishness be charged on those who so munificently support these socicties, that the total revenue raised for these objects within the month of May, at Exeter Hall alone, equals the whole income of many states? The energies and talents displayed in this sphere of action are wonderful; to a foreigner they are almost incomprehensible; to a foreign Government they would be alarming. The suspicious and despotic states of the Continent would not tolerate such assemblies; they would never believe that such masses could be brought together for purely benevolent purposes, and would see danger to the State in every eloquent appeal to the religious or moral feelings. In France, so great is the terror of political meetings, that persons cannot assemble together even for public worship without legal authority, lest the religious privilege might be abused and converted into a means of political agitation. Here, political agitation is in a manner legalised, and its existence is as perfectly known to the Government as any other fact; yet no Minister would dare to prohibit the sitting of the Anti-Maynooth Conference at the Crown and Anchor. But, in "the May Meetings," politics are altogether avoided; men of all parties are seen acting together, and we have seen Mr. Sheil and Sir R. Inglis, side by side on the same platform. Such is the happy result of our freer system, that leaves private enterprize to work out its own ends in its own manner, provided the general laws of the country are observed, and permits individual philanthropy to be exercised unchecked by suspicious controul. We have great cause to be thankful that neither in religion nor commerce are our principles or activity weighed down by a Government that starts at every manifestation of freedom of thought. When the rulers suspect the people, the people distrust each other, and thus the habit of uniting for a common object cannot be learned. The "May Meetings" are not political; but they could only have sprung up under a free political system.

OPENING OF THE HUNGERFORD SUSPENSION-BRIDGE.

At length, this new bridge across the Thames, from Hungerford Market to Lambeth, has been so far completed as to be opened to the public on Thurs day, at noon. There was no ceremonial, but the gates were merely opened to foot passengers, on the payment of a toll of one-halfpenny at either end. The bridge was inspected by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, a few days since: it is, certainly, a remarkable work of construction and mechanical skill; and, though its details have often been submitted to the public, we are justified in quoting the following as the most accurate, as well as recent: they were submitted by Mr. Cowper to the Royal Institution, on the 18th ult.:—

The bridge is for foot passengers only: it consists of four broad chains, viz. two chains, one above the other, on each side of the platform; each chain consists of ten and eleven links alternately, and, near the piers, of eleven and twelve. This increased strength is to meet the increased strain which takes place near the piers. The chain of the Menai Bridge is only five links wide, and the chain of the Hammersmith only six links wide; but the great breadth of the Hungerford chain (viz. eleven links, or about two feet,) gives them great power to resist the effects of the wind, and thus to prevent vibration. Two brick piers, in the Italian style, are built in the river, over which the chains are carried, forming thus a central and two side spans.

The two piers are in height	80	feet
The central span between the piers (being 110 feet wider than the Menai Bridge)	676½	feet
The length between the abutments	1352½	feet
Deflection of the chain	50	feet
Length of each link (7 in. wide, 1 in. thick)	24	feet
Weight of each link	5½	cwt
(The connecting pins are 4⅝ inches diameter.)
The whole number of links	2600
Their weight	715	tons
The number of links in the centre span	1280
Their weight	352	tons
Width of the platform	14	feet
Height above high water at the centre of centre span	32½	feet
Height near the piers	28½	feet
(giving a rise of four feet in the centre. This gives additional height for the river traffic, and produces a graceful curve, and prevents any appearance of swagging.)
The section of the chains at the centre of centre span is	296	sq. in.
——— near the piers	312	sq. in.

A square inch of iron breaks with 27 or 29 tons; but 17½ tons is taken as the impairing weight, i.e. the weight at which it begins to stretch; we have, therefore, for the weight the bridge will actually bear—

296 ⋈ 17½ tons = 5180 tons, while 296 ⋈ 5 tons = 1480 tons,

is the greatest load that can be put upon it. This is taking a crowd standing close together to be 100lb. per square foot. The entire weight of the chain, the platform, and a full load upon it, would make a load of about 1,000 tons on each pier, being about 8½ tons on each square foot of brick work, or not quite 1¼ cwt. on each square inch. The chains are attached to large wrought-iron vertical plates at the summits of the piers; these plates are firmly bolted together, and also to a strong horizontal plate,—the whole forming what is called a saddle. The saddle is not fixed to the pier, but rests on fifty friction rollers, these resting on a thick iron plate, which is supported by a solid mass of iron and timber girders. The pier itself, being pierced with arches, may be considered to consist of four columns of brickwork; the girders, therefore, are so arranged, that no weight is thrown on the arches, the whole weight resting on the columns. The saddle is capable of moving eighteen inches each way, equal to three feet entire motion; so that if either span were crowded the chains would adjust themselves, and the strain be still perpendicular upon the piers, and have no tendency to pull the pier over.

The method of putting up the chains was thus:—Two sets of wire ropes, each consisting of three ropes, were hung from abutment to abutment over the piers, in the exact situation the chains were to occupy,—these scaffold ropes, as they may be called, being distant from each other equal to the length of the connecting pin. A few feet above the scaffold ropes, two other ropes were hung in like manner; on these traversed two light boxes, very much resembling a carpenter's bench turned topsy-turvy. These cradles, as they are called, were connected together, and contained two windlasses, like those over a common well; these cradles held the workmen. A barge containing the links was moored under the cradles: four men in the cradles hauled up a link; and when they had raised it above the scaffold ropes, the connecting pin was put through, and the pin being allowed to rest on the scaffold ropes, of course supported the link. The cradles were then moved forward, and two links joined to the single link, then one joined to the two; the chain consisting, thus, in the first instance, of alternately two and one links. When this two-and-one-link chain was completed, the scaffold ropes were not required, the two-and-one-link chain forming, as it were, a scaffold for the rest of the links; and thus was this bridge erected without any scaffolding but these few ropes, and without the slightest impediment to the navigation, and without a single accident. The cost was—

Brickwork,	£63,000	by Mr. Chadwick.
Iron work,	17,000	by Sandys, Carne, and Vivian.

The money was raised by—

By Loan	26,000

ELECTION FOR WOODSTOCK.—On Thursday, Lord Henry Loftus was elected for the borough of Woodstock, in the room of the Marquis of Blandford, without opposition.

THE LATE ACCIDENT AT ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—On Thursday, an inquest was held at Ashton, respecting the unfortunate persons killed by the late melancholy accident on the trunk line of railway from the Sheffield and Manchester line to Ashton and Stalybridge. The verdict was "Accidental death," accompanied by a strongly expressed opinion that the accident was attributable to the bad, or insufficient quality, of the materials used, the inferior workmanship, and the negligence of the company's servants.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

Despite all effort and the national pretention of the Franch people to enter into the spirit of horse racing, nothing really can be more absurd to an Englishman than the fuss and preparation antecedent to a race on the Champde-Mars. Shades of Newmarket and Epsom! Chifney and John Scott—Flying Childers and Running Rein—what a mockery they make of it. I am inclined to think that the only man in France who has a real love and knowledge of horseflesh, is Eugene Sue—he, at any rate, has written the history of one horse, and that horse too, who may be esteemed the very fountain of the best blood out of Africa—the Godolphin Arab; but to see the vile attempts that are made here to indue the "pig-skin," is tolerable, and not to be endured. However, there are great expectations entertained that the approaching races will be what is here called brilliant; there have been a large number of horses entered, and some of them of tolerable stock. The first start will come off at two o'clock next Sunday, and there are five prizes to be contested. The first is a purse of a thousand francs, for horses of all ages; those having already won to carry weight. M. d'Ecoville is the present favourite. All the snobs are talking of Jockey Clubs and St. Leger. I would give something were Yates or Mellish here—fine food for observation—how they would take the shine out of these gobemouches!

At the last sitting of the Academie des Sciences, M. Arago presented a calculating boy, whose capacity for algebraical combinations surpasses every instance hitherto related of the kind. You recollect the two boys, Vico Mangiamelle, and little Mondeux well. Wonderful as these were, the present wonder exceeds them. In almost every instance where this faculty has been found, instead of cultivating and seeking to develop its latent powers, it has been made a property of, and exhibited by charlatans. The present child is, however, saved from this, for the parents are determined to place him under prudent guidance. I was present at M. Arago's, when he performed the most complicated calculations, mentally, and on paper; and the little fellow explains satisfactorily, after his manner, the means he uses to arrive at the solution. The Academie has commanded a commission to give an account, at an early sitting, of the disposition of the boy, and the plan adopted by which the calculations are made.

There are great preparations being made for the Fête du Roi for the first of May. All the badauds are in extacies; the distribution of alms in the 12 arrondissements, is a subject of pleasant thoughts; the public rejoicings will be on an extensive scale; they are to last from two o'clock in the day until a late hour of night. In the Champs-Elysées, two immense temporary theatres have been erected for a grand military pantomimic spectacle. There are four orchestras for those who choose to dance, and various prizes to be contended for. A grand concert will be given in the Garden of the Tuileries. Fireworks innumerable will cast their scintillations in various quarters of the city, and the great avenue of the Champs Elysées, and the various public edifices, are to be splendidly illuminated. It is with such means the Parisians are to be regaled—all glare, heat, excitement, and conventionalism; but even this is better than the melancholy London exhibition of painted sweeps and begrimed paupers. Still, in England the heart of its multitude sighs for the perfumed May, the green fields, and its ancient Maypole; but there all is of the city and of the earth earthy. I never feel Paris so wretched as during the bright Spring months and the early days of Summer; then, I confess to you, I would almost exchange the Louvre for a quiet stroll in the long shady lanes of Twickenham, or a gipsying in the woods of Norwood.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers are much occupied with the temporary secession of M. Guizot from the Ministry. Nobody doubts that the cause assigned is the real one, indisposition; but some of the opposition papers pretend that he will not return to office, and that M. Duchatel, who has been appointed ad interim, as the Moniteur states, will permanently occupy the post. We do not think there is any real ground for supposing that this will be the case. M. Guizot has retired to his country residence; but it is situated at Passy, almost within a stone's throw of the Tuileries, so that there is nothing to prevent him from paying attention to the passing political topics of the day. It seems most likely that it is M. Guizot's intention to do so. Indeed, the Constitutionnel says that he has reserved for his immediate consideration, during his stay at Passy, the three following questions:—Right of Search, Texas, and the marriage of the Queen of Spain.

The Journal des Débats replies in these terms to the insinuations of the Opposition press:—

"The health of M. Guizot never caused any serious uneasiness. He has only need of repose, and that repose will be but of short duration. The statesman and orator has merely solicited and obtained from the King a leave of absence, in order to reappear in full vigour at the tribune, and to continue the contest which he has for five years conducted with so much talent. The Foreign-office is confided provisionally to M. Duchatel. It is the only reply which could properly be given to the calumnious statements of certain journals, which, not being able to overthrow the Government, endeavoured, in a clumsy manner, to divide it."

In the Chamber of Peers, on Monday, M. Victor Hugo, M. Bertin de Vaux, and the other newly-created peers, were introduced with the usual ceremonies, and took the oaths and their seats. The resolution of the Chamber of Deputies for the conversion of the Five per Cents., was communicated to the House and referred to a Committee.

The Committee of the Chamber of Deputies on the Paris and Lyons Railway met on Tuesday, and came to a definitive resolution on the important question of the terminus. The committee decided unanimously that there should be a separate terminus for the Lyons line, and that it should be placed somewhere in the neighbourhood of the Place de la Bastile, as was proposed by the Government.

A decision has been given in the suit instituted by Madame Grisi against M. Vattel, for the recovery of 10,000 francs, detained by that gentleman in consequence of the prima donna's refusal to appear in the "Matrimonio Segreto." The decision was in favour of the manager.

According to the accounts from Switzerland in the Paris papers, the canton of Berne is in a state of alarming ferment. A popular assembly most hostile to the Government was to have taken place on the 27th ult., and great apprehensions existed of a revolution following, similar to the ultra-Radical one lately accomplished in the canton of Vaud. According to a letter of the 23rd, the inhabitants were about to form into a national guard for the protection of persons and property.

THE UNITED STATES.

New York papers to the 8th ult. have been received by the packet Independence. They do not so much as mention Mr. Polk's Oregon oration, which has become quite a dead letter with them, and in two southern papers, in which we find some allusions made to it, it is treated as a most indiscreet affair. Our American friends are too busy preparing themselves for an active spring trade, and in promoting railway extension, to afford time even for conversation on Mr. Polk's freaks of territorial annexation.

General Almonte, with his family, sailed from New York for Vera Cruz, in the frigate Anahuac, on the 3rd ult.; he leaves the country under the firm impression that Mexico will, if she has not already, make a declaration of war against the United States.

President Polk was proceeding in the completion of his cabinet, in doing which he had most ruthlessly removed almost every one of the old officials, and appointed friends of his own in their stead. This conduct was loudly complained of by the press.

Santa Anna was not to have a public trial. A statement of the specific charges against him had been delivered to him, to which he was to reply in writing, to be laid before the grand jury appointed to try him, but whose authority he denies upon certain points.

A large steamer is said to be building at Boston, to be the first of a line of ocean steamers between New York and Liverpool. It is said she will be ready on the 4th of July next.

There are late accounts from Mexico and Texas by this arrival, but they do not announce anything very definite. Of course the southern papers, from which the extracts of news are copied, make it out that the Texans are decidedly in favour of annexation, but this is evidently false. They suppress the articles from papers opposed to it, and so only give one side of the question. Displays of enthusiasm are given out as having been made at Galveston and Houstoun on the night of the news of the annexation resolutions having been carried, but the New Orleans papers all admit that there are strong manifestations of opposition to annexation, and that no easy consummation of the measure is to be looked for.

Repudiation has already made its appearance in Texas. A portion of the citizens of Montgomery and Milan counties have given notice to the sheriffs that they shall resist forcibly all attempts to collect the taxes from them.

The Stock Market at New York was depressed. The rate of Exchange 9½ to 9¾ premium, and rather tending downward. The cotton market was firm, and business generally in a satisfactory state.

STATE BALL.—The Lord Chamberlain has caused cards to be issued for a state ball on the 19th of May, at St. James's Palace.

VISCOUNTESS PALMERSTON'S GRAND BALL.—On Monday night one of the most splendid balls of the season was given by Viscountess Palmerston, at the noble lord's residence, on Carlton-house-terrace. It was honoured by the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, their Serene Highnesses Prince Ernest of Hesse Philipstahl, and Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar. A suite of the saloons was thrown open for the reception of the visitors, the principal apartment being converted into a salon de danse, where raised seats were provided for the use of the Royal personages who had honoured her ladyship by their company. The several rooms were all brilliantly illuminated. In the dining-room, on the ground-floor, a recherché supper was supplied to the company, that repast being announced exactly at one o'clock.

APPROACHING MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—The preliminaries have now been arranged for the matrimonial alliance of the Marquis of Worcester, eldest son of the Duke of Beaufort, and Lady Georgiana Curzon, eldest daughter of Earl Howe; and we undestand the nuptials will be solemnised towards the close of the season.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

PARTIAL ABOLITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.—Several petitions having been presented, complaining of the operation of the £20 clause of the last session, the LORD CHANCELLOR moved the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the operation of the act, which was agreed to.

THE CONDEMNED SERMON ON SUNDAY LAST.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE drew attention to the facts of the disgraceful scene which had taken place in Newgate, on the delivery of the condemned sermon preached on last Sunday, prior to the execution of Hocker. The chapel was turned into a theatre; admission was by tickets from the sheriffs, and the criminal was so placed as to be submitted to the scrutiny of all who felt pleasure in watching the movements of the prisoner's feelings, as evidenced by the countenance. In the strongest manner the noble marquis deprecated the prostitution of our solemn church service and liturgy to purposes so theatrical as these; and pointed out the absurdity, if not the injustice, of causing an unconvicted prisoner (Connor) to receive the sacrament on the same apparent terms as that of the convicted criminal, whose dying hours were thus rendered a scene for the pleasurable excitement of the spectators.—Lord BROUGHAM joined in the condemnation of the practice pursued by the City authorities in ministering to the morbid love of excitement which characterised individuals.—Lord STANLEY admitted the gross impropriety of the proceedings, as they had been described, and promised, on the part of the Government, an inquiry into the facts of the case.—The Duke of RICHMOND thought that the City authorities had no power to control the sheriffs. The best mode of procedure would be to bring in a short bill, prohibiting in future the admission of strangers to the condemned sermon.—The subject dropped, after some remarks from Lord REDESDALE, and an expression of acquiescence, on the part of the Marquis of CLANRICARDE, in the course which had been suggested to him.

The house adjourned at a quarter past six.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE MAYNOOTH COLLEGE BILL.—On the motion that the report on this bill be brought up, Mr. LAW moved that the report should be brought up that day six months. The hon. gentleman contended that they should either continue the usual grant of £9000, or abrogate the grant altogether, leaving the Catholics of Ireland to support the college in the efficiency in which they might think it ought to be maintained.—A long discussion ensued, but there was nothing either new or interesting in the arguments. The speakers in favour of the bill were Mr. V. Smith, Lord Norreys, Lord Dalmeny, Sir C. Douglas, Mr. Hawes, Mr. Round, and Mr. Borthwick. The gentlemen who spoke against it, were Mr. Hindley and Mr. Brotherton. Some attention was subsequently excited by a speech of Mr. FOX MAULE, who accused Sir R. Peel of inconsistency. Mr. Fox Maule also charged Sir R. Peel with having encouraged the "No Popery" cry, in order to defeat the Melbourne Cabinet, in the year 1838, and quoted a letter from the Rev. Dr. Buchanan, of Glasgow, giving a quotation from a speech of Sir R. Peel to a deputation which waited upon him relative to church extension in Scotland. That quotation was expressive of apprehension in consequence of the exertions making for the extension of the Roman Catholic religion throughout Europe. Mr. Fox Maule said he should vote for the amendment, with the sole and simple view of putting a stop to the measure itself.—Mr. PRINGLE (who recently resigned his situation as one of the Lords of the Treasury, rather than vote for the bill) said that upon all ordinary measures of Government, Sir R. Peel had his fullest confidence, from the wisdom observable in his measures, and most ready was he to give way to the superior judgment of that right hon. gentleman. But in the present measure there were involved some things upon which he could not yield his own judgment to any man. He feared that measure had a tendency—not contemplated by his right hon. friend—to give an impetus to the growing power of the Roman Catholics in the British realms.—Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL having spoken in support of the bill, Sir R. PEEL answered the charges of inconsistency made against him in reference to Catholic Emancipation. He said—Till within a month of the period when I myself consented to bring forward the measure for the relief of the Roman Catholic disabilities, I did contemplate my retirement from office,—not because I shrunk from the responsibility of proposing that measure—not because I was afraid of the charge of inconsistency—not because I was not prepared to make the sacrifice of private friendship and political connexions—but because I honestly believed my retirement might promote the success of the measure I then thought necessary, and that it might assist my noble friend in carrying that measure, were I to make the sacrifice of office, and give, as I intended to give it, a cordial support in my private capacity. But when did I change my opinion? I changed my opinion when it was demonstrated to me that it was necessary I should make sacrifices, that I should retain office. Sir R. Peel gave this opinion of the course which ought to be pursued by public men. "Notwithstanding the taunts thrown out against me, I repeat that, believing this measure to be of advantage to the public, foreseeing the opposition by which it would be encountered—in spite of taunts aead sarcasms, I again say, I think it is more becoming in me to propose this measure, and submit to the consequences, rather than say I think it necessary, but I advise you on the opposite side of the house to come forward and expose yourselves to the obloquy of proposing it. This is the principle on which I think public men should act with respect to the retention of office; that if I believed now my retirement from office would facilitate the carrying this measure, I should infinitely prefer the course of relinquishing office, and supporting it in a private station." Sir R. Peel then said that the manifestation of public feeling in this country respecting the grant, much as he respected it, only imposed on him additional obligations to adhere steadily in the course he had adopted.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE spoke against the bill, and Mr. COLLETT in its favour. On a division, the numbers were—

For the motion	232
For the amendment	119
Majority	——113

The resolution in favour of the grant was then agreed to.

The house again divided on the motion of Mr. TANCRED, to add to the resolution of the committee, that provision be made out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the endowment of the College of Maynooth, the words, "until provision shall be made for the same by any act to be passed in this or any subsequent session of Parliament, either out of any surplus in the hands of the ecclesiastical commissioners of Ireland, or by any assessment of the lands of Ireland to an amount equivalent to the remission of tithes made to the landlords of Ireland by the Tithe Commutation Act, as Parliament may deem most advisable"—

For Mr. Tancred's motion	52
Against it	128
Majority against Mr. Tancred's motion	——76

The house adjourned at half past twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE AUCTION DUTIES AND THE PROPERTY TAX.—The Earl of DALHOUSIE having moved the second reading of the Auction Duties Repeal Bill, Lord BROUGHAM expressed his disapproval of the bill, and remarked that he supposed we owed the remission of this and some other duties to the Income-tax Bill. Adverting to the latter measure, Lord Brougham noticed a gross piece of negligence on the part of some Income tax Commissioners. A citizen of London, living at the east end of the town, had occasion to purchase something or other at a chandler's shop, and when he got home he found it was wrapped up in a return—the original signed return—made the other day under the Property-tax Act, by a person whose name was appended to it, stating the profits of his trade under one head, and of his profession (for he had both) under another head. The paper had been shown to him (Lord Brougham), and might have been seen by twenty other persons; and if some of these returns were selling for waste paper, he should like to know where it was to end. It gave him great concern to find a case of negligence of so crass a description. A noble friend of his had had a conversation with a gentleman, a member of the other house of Parliament, who lived near Clapham, and who stated that in a public conveyance he happened to say, "That is a handsome villa on the right;" when a stranger replied, "Yes, and it will very soon be in the market; I dare say, you may buy it cheap, if you like it." "Indeed," said the gentleman, "what do you mean?" "Why, I happen to know," was the answer, "that the owner, though he is supposed to be a respectable and wealthy merchant in the City, has given in his profits under the Property-tax as amounting to nothing for the last two or three years;" and therefore he inferred that he would soon be in the Gazette, and his villa for sale. (Hear, hear.) The noble lord who made this communication to him (Lord Brougham) told him that he had himself given in his income, not at what it really was, for he had for three years, from the state of foreign trade, lost many thousands instead of gaining; but he had paid the tax, presuming (as the fact was) that profitable trade would return; it was on his mentioning that, and saying how fatal to his credit in the City the knowledge of such losses might at the time have been, that he was led to add this proof that the returns got known.—The second reading of the bill was ultimately agreed to.

The house at an early hour adjourned till Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

There not being 40 members present at four o'clock, the SPEAKER declared the house adjourned till next day.—There were only thirty members in attendance.

The house has now been sitting for three months, and this is the first instance this session in which the Speaker did not find 40 members present at four o'clock, a circumstance unprecedented for many years.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The house sat only for a couple of hours, and the business was of a general and unimportant character. The third reading of the Maynooth Grant Bill was postponed till the 19th inst. The other incident worthy of note was the postponement of Lord John Russell's resolutions respecting the labouring classes till the 26th inst. These resolutions will be found below, among the Notices and Miscellaneous Business.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

RAILWAY BILL COMMITTEES.—Sir G. CLERK, in the absence of Lord G. Somerset, moved that every committee on a railway bill shall, with their report on the bill, state whether the provisions of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Bill, the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill, and the Lands

Clauses Consolidation Bill, have been complied with; and, if they shall not have been complied with, state in what respects they have not been complied with, and the reasons for such non-compliance. That the committee on every bill, other than a railway bill, to which the provisions of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Bill, or the Lands Clauses Consolidation Bill, are applicable, shall report to the house any non-compliance with such provisions, and shall state their reasons for permitting such non-compliance.

The motion was ultimately withdrawn.

Mr. Rutherfurd moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate admission to the Lay or Secular Chairs of the Universities of Scotland, which, after some discussion, was agreed to.

Mr. Sergeant Murphy's motion for taking into consideration the question of ministers' money in Ireland, was postponed.—Dr. Bowring also postponed his resolution for improving public accounts.

The Earl of Lincoln moved for leave to bring in a bill to facilitate the inclosure of Commons and Waste Lands in England and Wales. He entered at some length into the details of the bill, and, after a short conversation, the motion was agreed to.

The Earl of Lincoln also moved for leave to bring in a bill to facilitate the Drainage of Lands in England and Wales.—Agreed to.

Sir G. Clerk moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Merchant Seamen's Fund Act. The object of the bill is to amalgamate and place under one control the Merchant Seamen's Fund; the amount to be invested in public securities, on the same terms as the money placed in Savings Banks.—Motion agreed to.

The Exchequer Bills (£9,379,600) Bill was read a second time, and the house adjourned at nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

After the presentation of various petitions, the Duke of Buckingham inquired whether Chaplains of Gaols were authorised to withhold any statement made by a prisoner in gaol, referring to the recent case of Taweil.—The Duke of Wellington had no authority to answer the question, but understood by the Canon-law, that a clergyman is prohibited from revealing a confession, except in a case where it was necessary for the protection of his own life, or to prevent the commission of high treason.

The St. Asaph and Bangor and Manchester Dioceses Bill.—Earl Powis moved the second reading of this bill.—The Duke of Wellington opposed the bill, and moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—The Bishop of Bangor and the Earl of Winchelsea supported the bill.—A very long debate ensued.—The house divided, and the numbers were—

The house did not adjourn till one o'clock this (Saturday) morning.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The following bills were read a second time, and ordered to be committed:—The London, Worcester, and South Staffordshire Railway (Dudley to Wolverhampton) Bill; the London, Worcester, and South Staffordshire Railway (Dudley and Sedgley Branch) Bill; and the London, Chatham, and North Kent Railway Bill.

The Surrey and Sussex Roads Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Glasgow, Barrhead, and Neilston Direct Railway Bill was read a second time and ordered to be committed.

The Bristol and Exeter Railway Branches Bill, after a few words from Mr. G. Bankes, was read a second time and ordered to be committed.

After some conversation the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that the house, at its rising, do adjourn until Monday.—Agreed to.

Maynooth College Bill.—Sir R. Peel moved the order of the house for to resolve itself into a committee on the Maynooth College Bill.—On the question that the Speaker do leave the chair, Mr. Hindley strongly protested against this bill passing into a law; it would cause the greatest discontent and dissatisfaction, both in England and in Ireland. He would enter his protest against the measure; and if any hon. member would second him, he would move that the committee be postponed for six months. (Hear.)—Colonel Sibthorp said he would willingly second any motion to get rid of the bill.—Mr. Plumptre spoke at some length against the bill.—Sir R. Peel said it was his determination to persevere with the bill. (Cheers).—After some further discussion, a division took place, and the house resolved to go into committee by 160 to 52. The house therefore went into committee.—Sir J. Hanmer moved the omission of the words which limit the trustees of Maynooth College in taking any real property with which it may be desired voluntarily to endow them.—After a long discussion, however, the amendment was withdrawn.—The whole of the clauses, with the exception of 10 and 11, were gone through.—Mr. Law then moved the omission of clause 10. On this the house divided. The numbers were—

For the clause	210
Against it	88
Majority for the clause		— 122

Mr. Law declined to divide upon clause 11, and therefore the whole of the clauses were agreed to.—The report was ordered to be brought up on Monday.—The house adjourned about midnight.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—House of Lords.

The Law of Debtor and Creditor.—The House of Lords has nominated a Select Committee, consisting of twenty two Peers, to inquire into and investigate the existing law of debtor and creditor, and to consider also the petitions that have been presented, in such numbers, on the subject of the present state of that law. This Select Committee was directed to report thereon to the House at the conclusion of their labours. They meet for the the first time on Monday next, and the house has ordered that all petitions presented this session upon the subject shall be referred to the Committee.

MISCELLANEOUS BUSINESS.—Commons.

New Members.—On Monday Colonel Austen took the oaths and his seat for West Kent; and on Thursday Mr. Barkly took the oaths and his seat for the borough of Leominster, in the room of Mr. Greenaway, resigned.

The Labouring Classes of England and Wales.—The following are Lord John Russell's proposed resolutions on this subject:—1. That the present state of political tranquillity, and the recent revival of trade, afford to this house a favourable opportunity to consider of such measures as may tend permanently to improve the condition of the labouring classes. 2. That those laws which impose duties usually called protective tend to impair the efficiency of labour, to restrict the free interchange of commodities, and to impose on the people unnecessary taxation. 3. That the present Corn-law tends to check improvements in agriculture, produces uncertainty in all farming speculations, and holds out to the owners and occupiers of land prospects of special advantage which it fails to secure. 4. That this house will take the said laws into consideration, with a view to such cautious and deliberate arrangements as may be most beneficial to all classes of her Majesty's subjects. 5. That the freedom of industry would be promoted by a careful revision of the Law of Parochial Settlement which now prevails in England and Wales. 6. That a systematic plan of colonisation would partially relieve those districts of the country where the deficiency of employment has been most injurious to the labourers in husbandry. 7. That the improvements made of late years in the education of the people, as well as its more general diffusion, have been seen with satisfaction by this house. 8. That this house will be ready to give its support to measures, founded on liberal and comprehensive principles, which may be conducive to the further extension of religions and moral instruction. 9. That a humble address be presented to her Majesty, to lay the foregoing resolutions before her Majesty.

Railway Committee Report.—On Wednesday evening Mr. Estcourt brought up a report from the Committee on Standing Orders, which stated, that in the case of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway Bill the standing orders ought to be dispensed with, and a similar course in the cases of the Londonderry and Enniskillen and the Londonderry and Coleraine Railway Bills, and also in the Tottenham and Farringdon Railway Bill. That in the cases of the Irish Great Western Railway (Dublin to Galway), the Direct Northern Railway (No. 2), and the Wells and Dereham Railway, the standing orders ought not to be dispensed with; and that the parties promoting those projects should not be allowed to proceed with them. The report was agreed to.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

Visit of the Queen and Prince Albert to Claremont.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert left town for Claremont on Monday afternoon. The visit was intended to have been made last Saturday; but was deferred in consequence of the Prince of Wales and the junior branches of the Royal family being unexpectedly attacked with the hooping-cough.

Return of the Court from Claremont.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert returned from Claremont on Thursday. In the course of the day her Majesty and the Prince visited the National Gallery.

The Crown Prince and Princess of Hanover.—There is a cheering prospect of the eye-sight of the Crown Prince of Hanover being partially restored. His Royal Highness is at present totally blind of one eye; but any strong light affects the other eye, over which he wears a green shade. The Crown Princess is in that interesting situation from which it may be expected that her Royal Highness will shortly present the Prince with a successor to the throne of Hanover.

Birthday of the Duke of Wellington.—His Grace the Duke of Wellington, on Thursday, witnessed his 76th birthday, having been born on the 1st of May, 1769.

The French Ambassador's Banquet.—His Excellency the French Ambassador, Count de St. Aulaire, gave a magnificent banquet on Wednesday evening at the French Embassy in Manchester-square, in honour of the fête of his Majesty the King of the French. The party invited comprised most of the foreign Ministers, and the principal members of the Government. All the guests of the noble Count were attired in full uniform, wearing the ribbons and decorations of knighthood to which they were entitled. The only toasts given at the termination of the dinner, were those of his Majesty Louis Philippe and our Gracious Sovereign Queen Victoria.

Almack's.—The ball on Wednesday night closed the first subscription of these delightful réunions, to which a very brilliant party of the nobility resorted. The rooms were, as usual, admirably decorated by the rarest plants, and tastefully illuminated. Jullien and his full band occupied the orchestra. It is asserted that the ladies patronesses intend to have a bal costumé this season, when the Royal Family will be invited to honour the assembly by their gracious presence.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Dr. Wolff's Journey to Bokhara.—On Wednesday afternoon there was a very numerous meeting at Exeter hall, for the purpose of hearing from Dr. Wolff a statement relative to his mission to Bokhara, in search of Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly. The platform was crowded by persons of distinction, including a great many ladies, among whom were Lady Georgiana Wolff. Mohum Lal, the Affghan, was also on the platform, splendidly attired in the costume of his country. The chair having been taken by Admiral Sir E. Codrington, the secretary read the report. Dr. Wolff, who was greeted with enthusiastic cheering, then came forward. The rev. gentleman, who held a small Bible in his right hand, looked much better than he did on his first arrival in England, but is still far from well. Dr. Wolff having advanced to the centre of the platform, was again enthusiastically cheered. The rev. doctor entered into the details of his perilous journey, and gave a vivid and characteristic description of the many dangers he had gone through. At the conclusion of Dr. Wolff's address, the Rev. G. Stoddart came forward, and said that, as the only surviving brother of Colonel Stoddart, he begged to express his admiration of the generous conduct of Dr. Wolff; but he could not conceal his disapprobation at the insinuations thrown out against the relatives of Colonel Stoddart, as well as against Colonel Stoddart himself. The insinuations were put forth in a book, the authorship of which could not be mistaken.—Captain Grover denied that he had made any insinuations, but a long altercation ensued. After some further discussion, the thanks of the meeting were voted to Dr. Wolff, and it was agreed that a national subscription should be opened, to present the rev. gentleman with some suitable testimonial.

The League Bazaar, at Covent-Garden Theatre.—For the information of our country readers, we supply some particulars of this Bazaar, which is to be opened at Covent-Garden Theatre, on Thursday next, the 8th inst. The public will be admitted from twelve in the morning till eight in the evening. On the first day the admission will be 10s. 6d.; 5s. on the 9th and 10th; 2s. 6d. on the 12th, and 1s. afterwards. Among the various products of British industry to be exhibited, there are some splendid shawls. There is one from Scotland, made for this bazaar, first of its pattern; the loom for, which was prepared at an expence of one thousand pounds.—There is a bed, from Birmingham, which a traveller may carry with him in his pocket! he may spread it out whenever he pleases, and sleep softly and pleasantly on it; and, when he wakes, he may return it to his pocket, and go on his journey. It is said also that a Bazaar Gazette will be printed in the house each morning, containing the history of the previous day's business. The contributions which have been already sent to the Bazaar, amount to above £20,000.

Anti-Maynooth Conference.—A very numerous meeting took place on Wednesday, at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, in order to protest against the increased grant to the College of Maynooth. It was composed of persons delegated by congregations of various religious denominations throughout the empire, the great majority being from dissenting bodies. Sir Culling Eardley Smith presided.

AGGRAVATION OF CRIME.

The wretch Hocker having paid the penalty of his crime, it is to be hoped that the circumstances connected with the sad affair will soon be all forgotten. Some of the newspapers have pandered to a very vitiated taste, by giving doubtful, but disgusting details of incidents connected with the murder, and with Hocker's career. It might have been all very well to publish the facts which had connexion with the fatal transaction itself—because the public take an interest in such records—but there is a growing disposition on the part of a few journalists to engraft a mass of fiction upon a very small foundation of fact. In a late number of the Morning Herald, we find the following just and pointed reprobation of the mischievous arts adopted by the newspapers in question to obtain a circulation. Our contemporary says .—

A mischievous tone has for years pervaded the records of crime, as published in one class of papers. There is displayed in such accounts, generally, no feeling of detestation of the crime or condemnation of the criminal, at all approaching to that which ought to be entertained in a Christian country. On the contrary, a certain order of newspapers most generally read by "the dangerous classes," write of the delinquent as a sort of hero, and record his words and actions as if they were those of a dying patriot. In the case of the late murder at Salt Hill, the conductors of one of the picture papers, started in imitation of the Illustrated London News, not content with engraving a portrait of the convict, had the portrait printed on a broad sheet, with the name of the paper attached, and hawked about the streets for pence. Such conduct is not a matter of indifference at a time when almost every morning's paper records a fresh murder. We have had instances showing how the most heinous crimes will be imitated merely on account of the notoriety which they confer on the perpetrators. See, for example, the defence read by the person lately convicted (Hocker)—a specimen of a vanity so intense, as to make its victim reckless of the chance of escape which might have been open to him had he relied upon the exertions of his counsel. In an enormous city, containing thousands whose minds are habituated to the extreme depths of depravity, such honour (it is not less) shown to murderers demands, in our opinion, the attention of our rulers. It creates and sustains the taste to which it panders, and the extreme interest which leads the lowest classes of people to purchase an assassin's portrait, differs very little from admiration of his exploits

POLICE.

Removal of Mr. Carus Wilson to Jersey.—On Saturday, at the Mansion house, Mr. Carus Wilson charged some of the persons concerned in the execution of the writ of the Jersey authorities with having committed an assault upon him. The Lord Mayor dismissed the summons. When the decision was made known, Mr. Carus Wilson was informed that the authorities were determined to proceed at once en route to Jersey, and that his luggage must at once be packed up. Mr. Wilson, who was staying at Anderton's Hotel, at first demurred; but, finding resistance vain, he proceeded to get ready, and two cabs were speedily procured: on the top of the first was placed the great man's boxes and portmanteau. In about a quarter of an hour afterwards, which was about twelve o'clock, appeared the Vicomte of Jersey, leading his prisoner out of the hotel by the left arm, whom he handed into the vehicle with the act of a man vested with authority, although the contrast was most ludicrous, the Vicomte not reaching above the elbow of Mr. Wilson, who carried in his right hand a tremendous walking-stick, and looking down upon his gaoler with the most supreme contempt. As soon as he had deposited the great man inside the cab, he entered also, and drove off; while in the second one entered Shackell and the two Jersey gaolers. As soon as all was ready, the captive and captors proceeded at a rattling pace to the Nine Elms Station, for Southampton, from whence they proceeded by steam to Jersey.—A letter has been received in London from Mrs. Carus Wilson, in which that lady says, "that her husband was, upon his arrival in Jersey, lodged in prison in a felon's cell, in solitary confinement, with none but felon's fare allowed him, and a straw bed without sheets. He is denied the use of pen, ink, and paper, and all letters to him are to be opened by the gaol authorities."

Another Self-Accused Murderer.—It will be in the recollection of our readers that on the 9th of May, 1837, a most barbarous murder was committed on the person of Eliza Davis, barmaid to Mr. Wadley, landlord of the King's Arms, Frederick-street, Regent's-park. The horrid affair caused a considerable degree of excitment, but no clue could be gained with regard to the perpetrator of the diabolical and sanguinary deed. A well-dressed young man, who gave his name Walter Chambers, and who stated that he resided at 40, Whittlebury-street, Euston-square, has been examined at Marylebone Office, on his own confession, charged with having committed the murder.—Harriet Sparkes deposed that she was barmaid at Mr. Wadley's, the King Arms, and that on Friday morning, between ten and eleven o'clock, the prisoner came into the house and said, "This is the place, I believe, where the girl was murdered." She told him it was, and he said, "I did it; I cut her throat over the bar."—Mr. Long: What further passed?—Witness: He called for a quartern of gin, and asked me to give him credit for it, as he had no money. She told him that she had no power to give credit, when he said I'll jump over the bar, and serve you the same.—Hilsden, 42 S, took the prisoner into custody at the King's Arms, in consequence of information which he (witness) had received as to the confession made by the prisoner respecting his being the murderer of Eliza Davis, the barmaid.—Lewis French, a coffee and eating-house keeper, living at 19, Little Charles-street, Regent's-park, stated that on the previous morning, between ten and eleven o'clock, the prisoner came into his (witness's) house and partook of some coffee, &c. He was a little the worse for drink.—Mr. Long: Tell me everything that transpired between you as to conversation.—Witness: He said to me, "I am the murderer. I cut the girl's throat."—In answer to further questions put by the magistrate, witness said the prisoner was not so far gone in drink as not to know what he was about.—Mr. Aggs said that the verdict of the jury who sat upon the body, was that of wilful murder against some person or persons unknown.—The prisoner, on being asked what he had to say, replied, I have got myself into trouble, and I must get out of it, I suppose, in the best way I can. He was remanded.

Three days ago two trains of coal wagons on the Lyons and Saint Etienne Railroad met in the tunnel of Terre-Noire, and the shock was so great that three of the wagons were broken to pieces. Fortunately there were no passengers.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS, RECENTLY DECEASED

SIR PHILIP CHARLES HENDERSON CALDERWOOD DURHAM, G.C.B.

This gallant admiral, the descendant and representative of an ancient and honourable Scottish house, has himself—a hero of Trafalgar—added by his own life and deeds considerable lustre to his family and name. Sir Philip Durham was the third son of James Durham, Esq., of Largo, in Fifeshire; he was born in 1765, and early embarked as a midshipman on board the Trident, with which he proceeded to North America. Afterwards, removing into the Edgar, he fought in Rodney's action off St. Vincent in 1780. In 1782 he joined the Royal George, as lieutenant, and was saved, though on board, when that ill-fated vessel sank at Spithead. Having attained the rank of captain, he, in 1793, assumed the command of the Spitfire, and captured several of the enemies' privateers in 1794: he was appointed to the Anson, which formed part of the armament sent against Quiberon, and with her he made many prizes. In 1805 he commanded the Defiance in Sir Robert Calder's action with the combined squadrons of France and Spain; and in the same year was wounded at the ever-memorable Trafalgar. In 1809, Captain Durham received an order from Lord Collingwood to hoist a red distinguishing broad pendant, and to take the command of the third division of his lordship's fleet. On the 31st July, 1810, he was promoted to be a flag-officer. Towards the conclusion of the war he was appointed commander-in-chief at the Leeward Islands, and in his passage out thither in the Venerable he had the good fortune to capture two French frigates of the largest class. Whilst continuing in this eminent command, he obtained further laurels in several actions of importance. For these services in Trafalgar and the West Indies, he was made a K.C.B., and afterwards a G.C.B., and received the order of merit of France. In 1815 Sir Philip Durham co-operated in the reduction of Guadaloupe, and, in 1809, he became vice-admiral. In 1836-7 he was commander-in-chief at Portsmouth. Sir Philip represented Queenborough in Parliament in 1830; and Devizes in 1836. He married first, 28th March, 1799, the Lady Charlotte Bruce, daughter of Charles, fifth Earl of Elgin; and, secondly (her ladyship having died in 1816), in 1817, Anne, only daughter and heiress of Sir John Henderson, Bart., of Fordel, in the couunty of Fife. The gallant admiral departed this life at Naples on the 2nd ultimo, having, unlike many of his companions in arms, survived for years to see his country enjoying the fruits of those naval achievements which have made her what she is. Still there arises a melancholy feeling as we thus contemplate another among the last of the mighty and victorious spirits of the war passing away.

So far regarding the personal history of Sir Philip Durham: of his family much also may be said. The pedigree of the Durhams of Largo, traces as far back as the time of King Robert Bruce, in whose reign a distinguished personage, a Sir William Durham, received a grant of the lands of Grange from the Scottish Monarch. From this Sir William, lineally descended Sir James Durham of Pittkerrow, who was Knighted by King Charles I., and who dying in 1633, was succeeded by his son Sir James Durham, an eminent lawyer, and, like his father, a stanch royalist. Charles I. constituted this legal adherent his Clerk of the Exchequer, and Director of the Rolls. Sir James lost these offices during the Usurpation, but was reinstated after the restoration, when he received the honour of Knighthood from Charles II.; his third son, Sir Alexander Durham, Lord Lyon King of Arms, was also Knighted by the same Monarch, and proved himself a conspicuous supporter of the royal cause in the field and the closet. James Durham, the eldest son and successor of Sir James, the Clerk of the Exchequer, was a distinguished and learned divine: he was chaplain to Charles II., and attended in that capacity the King's Majesty at the battle of Dunbar. His son and successor, Francis Durham, Esq., inherited the estates of Largo, in Fifeshire, from his uncle Sir Alexander, the Lord Lyon, and dying, without children, left them to his brother James, grandfather of James Durham, Esq., who married Anne, daughter of Thomas Calderwood, Esq., of Polton, son and heir of Sir William Calderwood, senator of the college of Justice: by this marriage Mr. Durham had issue, with a daughter and three other sons, the admiral recently deceased. This gallant seaman, however, did not become Laird of Largo, and representative of the family, until the demise, without issue, of his eldest brother General James Durham, on the 6th February, 1840.

WEIS DE HORNSTENTEIN.

M. Weis de Hornstentein, who has died recently at his castle of Neudorf in Hungary, in his 84th year, was an Austrian General of distinction. His military career commenced under the Empress Maria Theresa, and continued during the reigns of the three succeeding sovereigns, Joseph-Leopold, Francis, and Ferdinand. At the time of his death, there was perhaps no officer in the whole Imperial army who had seen so many years of service as M. de Hornstentein.

M. L'ABBE NOEL DES QUERSONNIERES.

This venerable and much respected ecclesiastic was "Doyen des Centennaires de France." He died lately at Neuilly, near Paris, and at the period of his demise was in the 117th year of his age.

COL. SIR GEORGE HOSTE, C.B.

The father of this distinguished engineer officer, the Rev. Dixon Hoste, was the descendant of Jacques Hoste, Governor of Bruges, whose son, Jacques Hoste, fled from the Netherlands to avoid the severities exercised by the Duke of Alva, and settled in this country in 1562. The Rev. Mr. Hoste married Margaret, daughter of Henry Stamforth, Esq., of Salthouse, in the County of Norfolk, and had issue (with another son, a clergyman, and two daughters) William, his heir, and George, the subject of this memoir. The eldest, William, was an eminent naval commander in the late war; he won, on the 13th of March, 1811, the great sea battle off the island of Lyssa, and was made a Baronet in reward for his services the 21st of Sept., 1814: he died in 1828, and was succeeded by his son, Sir William Hoste, the second Baronet, and present representative of the family.

The name of Hoste, however, was to become famous by land as well as sea. The hero of Lyssa found his reputation emulated by his brother George, whose life and career we now proceed to record. George Charles Hoste entered the corps of Royal Engineers in the year 1802. He was made Captain in 1807, Brevet-major in 1814, Lieutenant-colonel in 1825, Brevet-colonel in 1838, and Regimental-colonel in 1841. His services were of an important character. He fought at the battle of Maida, and at the siege of Scylla Castle in 1806; at the attack on Alexandria and Rosetta in Egypt in 1807; at the taking of the islands of Ischia and Procida, and siege of Ischia Castle in 1810. He was in the action on board his Majesty's ship Spartan, in the Bay of Naples, the 3rd May, 1810. He was at the two attacks on Antwerp, in 1812, and led the Guards in the assault on Bergen-op-Zoom. He acted also in the campaign of 1815; and was attached to the Prince of Orange, as Senior Officer of Engineers, with the first corps, at the Battle of Waterloo. He was present at the attack and surrender of Peronne, and at the capitulation of Paris; and was one of the Commissioners appointed to give over the fortress of Thunville, and other strongholds, from the French to the Prussians. In 1811, Colonel Hoste received the third class of St. Ferdinand and Merit for his prowess on board the Spartan. Sir George was Colonel Commandant of the Royal Engineers, and a Gentleman Usher of the Privy Chamber to her Majesty. He married, in 1812, Mary, only daughter of James Burkin Burroughes, Esq., of Burlingham Hall, in Norfolk; and by this lady he leaves issue three sons and two daughters. The elder son, George, is in Holy orders of the Church of England; and the second is a Gentleman Cadet in the Royal Arsenal.

Sir George had suffered for about four months from combined attacks of asthma and gout, so severely, indeed, that he was obliged to sleep in an erect posture to prevent suffocation. Death terminated this painful existence on the 21st ult., when the gallant colonel expired at his residence, Mill Hill, Woolwich Common, leaving behind him a character—as a soldier, brilliant; as a man, unblemished. Charity and humanity were the distinguishing marks of his private life. His funeral attested for him the affection, esteem, and regret of his relatives, friends, and companions in arms.

The Austrian Government has decided on the continuation of its grand line of railroad to Tresnovitz. This railroad is to fall into the Prussian lines, and unite the Baltic with the Black Sea. It is in agitation to carry it through Moldavia to the Danube. Russia is said to be proposing to Austria the construction of a railroad which shall extend from the Austrian frontiers to Odessa. A new railroad to connect the cities of Cassel and Frankfort-on-the-Maine is to be construcsted shortly.

RE-OPENING OF THE COLOSSEUM, REGENT'S PARK.

We resume our anticipatory survey of the artistic novelties just completed at this very popular exhibition; and request the reader to accompany us to the eastern entrance in Albany-street, which is entirely new. The main addition seen from the street is a vast apartment, lighted with several lofty windows; the appropriation of the saloon is not precisely known; but the walls, we are informed, will bear some extraordinary triumph of scenic skill.

North of this new Saloon you enter by large folding-doors, and pass into a square vestibule; thence, to the left, into a nobly arched corridor, reminding the Italian tourist of the entrance into the Vatican. This corridor is lighted, during the day, from above, by several circles of cut and ground glass; and at night by 26 bronze tripods. Descending to the basement by easy flights of steps, you enter a spacious apartment, supported by columns and pilasters, and adorned by brilliant glass chandeliers. This saloon will be appropriated for the sale of refreshments. At the north end, ornamented glass doors communicate with the Swiss Cottage; and at the south, into the Conservatories and Promenade. Our present business, or rather pleasure, is with the latter; as we illustrated the scenery view from the Swiss chalet in our journal of last week.

The Conservatories have ever been the most aristocratic feature of the Colosseum Exhibition: the vast Picture of London and its acre of canvas, may be more imposing than the airy elegance of the Conservatories; but, to an inborn Londoner, the fairy-like assemblage of flowers, fountains, and picturesque embellishments, have proved the most enchanting novelty—realising Lady Teazle's wish, in making it spring all the year round. The Conservatories, then, have been entirely reconstructed and refilled: they are now most elaborately decorated in the Arabesque style; and the architecture is a tasteful combination of the Moorish and the Gothic: it is furnished with the choicest flowers and shrubs, both native and foreign: and in the centre is a Gothic Aviary, superbly fitted up with gilt carvings, and looking-glass, and "such as Isabella of Castile might have been supposed to have commanded to be erected amidst the relics of a Moorish Palace: Abd-Abdallah, with true Arabian gallantry, to have conjured up for the solace of some fair Christian captive, within the enchanted walls of his own Alhambra;" and, as Washington Irving observes: "How many legends and traditions, true and fabulous; how many songs and romances, Spanish and Arabian, of love, and war, and chivalry, are associated with this romantic pile!" Here you may really almost forget the working-day-world, amidst the murmur of sparkling fountains, the songs of gaily-plumed birds, the fragrance of exotic plants and flowers, and the beautiful forms and freshness of the colours of the embellishments. Some of these it is beyond the engraver's art to convey; but a good idea of the graceful and picturesque elegance of the entire scene is afforded by the annexed Illustration.

THE CONSERVATORY.

Leaving the Conservatories by a glass door, we emerge into what is termed "the Exterior Promenade," where Mr. Bradwell, the ingenious designer, has pictured a chaos of classic relics of the antique world, and of luxuriant, but mouldering, beauty, from our own, such as we find reflected in the glowing pages of Byron:—

"Look on this spot—a nation's sepulchre—
Abode of gods, whose shrines no longer burn.
Even gods must yield—religions take their turn:
'Twas Jove's—'tis Mahomet's!

* * *

Time has not rebuilt them: but uprear'd
Barbaric dwellings on their shatter'd site,
Which only make more mourn'd and more endear'd
The last few rays of their far scatter'd light,
And the crush'd relics of their vanish'd might.

* * *

Cypress and ivy, weed and wall-flower grow,
Matted and massed together, hillocks heap'd
On what were chambers, arch crush'd, column strown
In fragments, choked up vaults, and frescoes steep'd
In subterranean damps, where the owl peep'd,
Deeming it midnight. Temples, baths, or halls?
Pronounce who can: for all that learning reap'd
From her research, hath been, that these are walls—

* * * * *

There is the moral of all human tales—
'Tis but the same rehearsal of the past:
First freedom — and then glory; when that fails,
Wealth, vice, corruption—barbarism at last;
And history, with all her volume vast,
Hath but one page—'tis better written here!"—

Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.

TEMPLE OF APOLLO EPICURUS.

We have engraved three fragmentary but picturesque snatches; but should explain that the designer has not attempted to copy rigidly any particularly monument of antiquity; although the classical traveller and artist will be reminded of the Temple of Vesta and the Arch of Titus, at Rome, and the Temple of Theseus, at Athens; their relative proportions being disregarded. "A secondary object has been to show how much effect may be produced in a most limited space, and with, apparently, the least promising materials—blank walls, the backs of adjacent buildings, &c.—which it is not always possible to plant out, or otherwise screen from observation." In the latter respect, we consider Mr. Bradwell has been pre-eminently successful.

The first of our scenes groups the decaying Greek Temple, with the Italian Fountain. The second illustration shows the Temple of Vesta, whose beautiful Corinthian columns, fluted, and of Parian marble, have been the admiration of ages. Next is a vignette of Italian scenery, with another specimen of the sculptured fountain, and the niche tenanted by the sculptor's most graceful works.

The larger engraving upon the same page with the two latter, shows, perhaps, the most novel triumph of the artist's skill; it being a large model of the celebrated Stalactite Cavern, at Adelsberg, in Carniola, on the great road to Vienna. The country around is calcareous, and there are a great many grottoes in various directions, and holes in the earth's surface, the depth of which cannot be fathomed. The grottos of Adelsberg is the most wonderful; and it has not, probably, been better described than by the tourist, Russell.

"Having entered the cavern, you proceed through a long gallery of about a hundred paces, when it opens into the vestibule, to the most magnificent of all the temples which nature has built for herself in the regions of night. From a large rugged unequal grotto, is seen a succession of the most gigantic stalactite caverns that imagination can conceive, all different in size, and form, and ornament; connected by passages which are sometimes low and bare, sometimes spacious and lofty; supported by pillars, and fretted with cornices of the purest stalactite. It would be in vain to attempt to describe the magnificence and variety of this natural architecture. The columns are sometimes uniform in their mass, and singularly placid; sometimes they are so regularly arranged, and consist of small pillars so nicely clustered together, that one believes he is walking up the nave of a Gothic Cathedral. Many of these columns, which are entirely insulated, have a diameter of three, four, and even five feet. Frequently the pillar is interrupted, as it were, in the middle, losing its columnar form; and twisting, dividing, or spreading itself out into innumerable shapes. Sometimes it dilates into a broad thin plate, almost transparent in the light of a lamp: sometimes this plate carries itself round in a circular form; sometimes the descending part tapers to a point, which rests on the broad surface of the ascending stalagmite. The walls are entirely coated with the same substance. * * * * The numerous chequered columns of stalactite that seem to support the everlasting roof from which they have only originated, often tower to such a height, that the lights do not enable you to discover their summits. * * * The further you advance, the elevation becomes bolder, the columns more massive, and the forms more diversified, until the scene of wonderment ends with a small subterraneous lake, deep, clear, cold, and dead still, which prevents all further progress. It has not been passed; it would, therefore, be too much to say that nothing lies beyond. Throughout these caverns not a sound is heard, except the occasional plashing of the dew-drop from a half-formed pillar. No living thing, no trace of vegetation, enlivens the cold walls, or the pale freezing stalactites. * * * * Yet, these caverns are not always so still and deserted: once a year, on the festival of their patron saint, the peasantry of Adelsberg and the neighbourhood assemble in this cavern to a ball. Here, many hundred of feet beneath the surface of the earth, and a mile from the light of day, the rude music of the Carniolian resounds through more magnificent halls than were ever built for monarchs. The flame of uncouth chandeliers is reflected from the stalactite walls in a blaze of ever-changing light, and, amid its dancing refulgence, the village swains and village beauties wheel round in the waltz, as if the dreams of the Rosicrucians had, at length, found their fulfilment, and Gnomes and Kobolds really lived and revelled in the bowels of our globe."

Mr. Russell is, however, in error in stating that no living thing is to be found in this grotto, for that singular creature, the Proteus, is taken in the river of various sizes, from the thickness of a quill to that of the thumb; it is also found on another estate in Carniola, but nowhere else in Europe.

Thus far the description of the original. It is under the latter circumstances that the imitation is here supposed to be exhibited to the public. The entrance to the cave is by a wooden door, as at Adelsberg. The long gallery is passed through, and you enter "the vestibule," "the large rugged unequal grotto," from which you behold, branching in every direction, the apparently interminable succession of caverns, lighted by "the uncouth chandeliers," single candles, or wood fires, kindled by the peasantry for the celebration of their annual festival, and which, glancing upon the spars and dropping crystals of the cavern, produce a splendid scene. The visitor will observe the faint twinkling of lights at distances the most remote from which such lights could be discerned—above, through the countless arches, formed in the sparry roof, the eye seeks in vain to ascertain the altitude of the still ascending columns and pinnacles. The illusion of height and distance is complete, and "the deep, cold, clear lake" (formed by the waters of "the river Poicte, which flows right across the cavern, and, having reached the opposite wall of this immense vault, again dives into the bowels of the earth"), reflecting the gorgeous scene, and fading away through the blue mist into impenetrable darkness, terminates a series of exquisitely magical effects. The day on which the subterranean festival takes place, is Whit-Monday.

We have only space to mention that the grand Panorama of the Metropolis, which covers the interior walls of the great polygonal building, has been almost entirely repainted by Mr. Parris, who, in 1829, completed the picture projected and commenced by Mr. Horner. Thus renovated, this Panorama will be a great attraction: but, there has been added "A New Panorama of London by Night," which affords a faithful picture of the modern Babylon, under an aspect, to which its citizens at large, or its visitors, must, to such an extent, at least, be utter strangers. The new picture is essentially the same as the day view: it has, however, no support from the wall on which the day view is painted behind it, but has to be erected and illuminated every evening, after the close of the morning exhibition, so that the mechanical difficulties must have been very great. The streets, public buildings, &c., of "the mighty heart," are the same, and, seen from the same point of view, as those in the morning exhibition; but, the illusion is, perhaps, more successful; for, it is scarcely possible for any person to lean over the balustrade for five or six minutes, and mark the fleecy clouds sailing steadily along, lighted as they come within the influence of the large hazy moon, struggling upward through the smoke of the great city, and then hiding from sight, or occasionally obscuring the stars, that twinkle here and there, in the apparently illimitable space, it is next to impossible they can, after such contemplation, recall themselves immediately to the conviction that the whole is but a scenic model. Add to this, the reflection of the innumerable lights upon the bridges in the river, and that of the moon, as the flow of the tide occasionally causes the ripple to catch, for a moment, and lose again as speedily, its silvery beams—the brilliancy of the shops in Cheapside and on Ludgate-hill—the coloured light of the chemists' shops in all directions—the flaring naked gas in the open stalls and markets—the cold pale moonlight on the windows of Christchurch Hospital, and other high or isolated buildings—and nothing short of reality can equal the amazing coup-d'œil before one. When the visitor is assured that this immense picture has no support from the wall, on which the day view is painted behind it—that it has to be erected and illuminated every evening, after the closing of the morning exhibition, the mechanical difficulties surmounted must excite his wonder as much as the perfection of the illusion will command his admiration.

The opening of this magnificent exhibition has been deferred for a few days; but, we are assured that it will form one of the main attractions of the approaching Whitsun holidays.

FINE ARTS.

Finden's Beauties of the Poets (Moore) Part I.—Chapman and Hall.

To transfuse the beauties of one Art into those of another, and still preserve their fidelity—to make the silent picture speak in living verse, and the descriptive poem warm into reality at the touch of a magic pencil, and as it were breathe before you, are operations which only belong to the highest genius; operations too, which may be said to confer a dual delight upon the sense that considers them, when in the different Arts, they faithfully reflect each other.

In the spirit of this mutual illustration of the Arts, the present elegant work has been designed and produced in a most exquisite manner:—the subjects are chosen from Moore, "That Poet of all Nations, and idol of his own," and their finish and effect cannot be excelled. The first consists of a pretty couple of sisters, who are respectively armed with a deadly pair of weapons, thus described by the Poet with a "curiosa felicitas:"—

"The brilliant black eye
May in triumph let fly
All its darts, without caring who feels 'em;
But the soft eye of blue,
Though it scatter wounds too,
Is much better pleased when it heals 'em!"

The artist has fully caught the author's witty distinctions in this illustration.

The second presents us with a beautiful Magdalene Head, entitled "St. Jerome's Love;" charming enough to justify the thousand and one questions of his Saintship's sanctity, for she does not appear to be one of those

STALACTITE GROTTO

Roman Matrons who visited him with beauty dimmed by grief, or whose charms of form or feature had been sobered and saddened by repentance.

The next is young Kitty, saddened by some ill omens on the morn of her wedding day. It is full of sweet interpretation of the poet's meaning. The reflection of the girl's face in the mirror is very admirable. We do not think much of "Laughing Eyes," particularly as it has no direct allusion to any one production of the poet. The portrait of Moore, owing, no doubt, to the bookbinder's fault, appears mixed up with the selections, instead of having been a title-page, but this of course, is accident. We trust that although the Editors have done the Bard of Erin the compliment of commencing with him, that they will not quit him without making a better selection of his Beauties. A foreigner who had never heard of him before, would form but sorry opinion of his genius from the present specimens. The work, however, is a highly interesting one, and cannot fail to see Painting, as well as "Music with sweet Poetry agree."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Peter Puzzlewig."—There are several varieties of bantams. Probably, "Farming for Ladies," just published, may be more copious in its details than Mowbray's volume. Some valuable original information on the subject will be found in No. 86 of our journal, accompanying several engravings of the Queen's poultry, at Windsor.
"W. M. T.," Birmingham.—The large View of "London in 1843" should be placed as the frontispiece to Vol. I.; and "London and the Thames," as the frontispiece to Vol. V.
"H. R. H.," Ryde, should forward specimens.
"B.," Dover, is thanked for the long letter on the recent outbreak in Switzerland; but we have not room for further details.
"R. E. A. P."—Earl Grey was Prime Minister at the passing of the Reform Bill, June 4, 1832.
"B. B.," Cork.—"Marine glue" is a solution of caoutchouc in coal naphtha, heated with a certain proportion of shell-lac. See "Magazine of Science," No. 253; or the pamphlet by Alfred Jeffrey, the patentee.
"Leguteius," Ambleside.—The title of "Defender of the Faith" was bestowed upon Henry VIII., by Pope Leo X., for a Latin treatise which Henry had published "On the Seven Sacraments," in confutation of Luther.
"Zaccheus's" three questions shall be replied to next week.
"W. D.," Brighton.—The population of Brighton, by the last census, was 46,661; of London, 1,950,921. The circumference of the Metropolis, i. e., 4 miles radius from St. Paul's Cathedral, is 24 miles. See the Descriptive Key to our Large Print of "London and the Thames."
"Royal Sovereign," Pembroke Dock, should remit to our office.
"T. E. E.," Silkstone Vicarage.—By remitting a quarter in advance, by post-office order, to our office.
"Miles Navalis," in our paper of April 5, 1845, p. 214, unjustly complains that there is no memorial of any kind to Capt. Rotherham. He lies buried in Bildeston churchyard, with a head-stone to his grave; and there is also a tablet to his memory on the south wall within the chancel.
"M. M."—Edward Montague, Earl of Munchester, so distinguished as a Parliamentary commander during the Civil Wars, was the same Earl of Manchester who died in 1671.
"A Subscriber," Enfield, is thanked for the notice of the meteor seen on the 5th ult.; but we have not room for details.
"Causidicus."—The publication of our correspondent's letter would not be attended with any benefit. The address required is, Mr. H. Bohn, York-street, Covent-garden.
"Daphnis," Bromley.—Fieri facias is, in law, a judicial writ, commanding the sheriff to levy the debt or damages on the goods of one against whom judgment has been had in an action. We do not remember the paternity of the epigram.
"R. T. A."—Omega is the name for the Greek long o.
"Inquirer."—We are not in possession of the information respecting "the Daring."
"Craven."—Newspapers for Jamaica must be posted within seven days of the date of their publication.
"Johannes," Trin. Coll., Cambridge.—Messrs. Parker and Co., Military Booksellers, Charing-cross.
"J. R."—Tickets of admission to the Festival for the Sons of the Clergy may be had of Messrs. Rivington, St. Paul's Churchyard.
"P. P. P."—The Parliamentary Reports may be purchased of Messrs. Hansard, 6, Great Turnstile, Holborn.
"A Subscriber."—Messrs. W. and S. Evans, Derby Bank, Derby.
"J. C.," Islington, should consult a surveyor, or the New Buildings Act.
"A Constant Reader," Bannow.—"Darley's Elementary Treatises." Taylor and Walton, London.
"J. R. Y.," Liverpool.—The acceptor of a bill will, of course, be liable to proceedings by the holder of the said bill, if it be not duly paid.
"J. S. S." Reigate.—"Tomlinson's Amusements in Chess," just published.
"P. C. G."—We do not understand our correspondent's question as to a letter addressed to a person in the City not being answered in our journal. "The Deluge, or Noah's Flood," was universal.
"L. S. G."—Mr. H. Braham is the son of Mr. Braham, the vocalist.
"A Friend."—We have no recollection of the letter stated to have been addressed to Jersey. The answer in dispute would be generally correct.
"M. J.," Wolverhampton.—The Siamese Twins arrived in England in the year 1829.
"Emily."—Mr. Thomas, Finch-lane, is agent for "Galignani's Messenger:" advertisements are not, necessarily, in English.
"Reuben," Beckingham."—"Dr. Golding Bird's Manual of Natural Philosophy" is a standard work.
"An Englishman."—"Upwards of" is, of course, the same as "more than."
"R. W.," Barnacle.—We have not room for the lines.
"A Novice," Cirencester.—A cheap little work on bookbinding is published by Messrs. C. Knight and Co., Ludgate-street.
"A Working Man," Coventry.—Shortly.
"P. C. L."—We have not room for the song; or for the lines by "H. F. L."
"B. C."—The incidents of the Harrow Steeple Chase, illustrated in our last, were detailed in the previous number.
"An Original Subscriber."—We cannot make use of the sketch of Ancient and Modern Locomotion, though it possesses some humour.
"Eaton, Jun.," Chester.—The address of Mr. G. Richmond, the artist, is 10, York-street, Portman-square; of Mr. F. Grant, A.R.A., Sussex-place, Regent's-park.
"G. C." is thanked for his letter.
"W. B.," Hanley.—Next week, we hope to illustrate the very interesting festival suggested.
"A Subscriber."—The portrait will not suit.
"A. Z." may hear of the work in question at M. Van Voorst's, Paternoster-row.
"A Regular Subscriber," Woolwich.—We had not room for the illustration suggested.
"An Admirer," Oriental Club.—The subject shall not be lost sight of.
"A. B."—We know nothing of the advertising parties in question.
"C. D."—The opinion as to the meeting of the Bishops and the Clergy on the Maynooth Grant has already appeared in another journal.
"R. J. M."—We have not room for our correspondent's letter in reply to Sir James South.
"A. M.," Tamworth.—An engraving of the "Mystery Cutter" appeared in No. 107 of our journal.
"J. M.," Hyde.—The Maynooth Grant is solely for the purpose of educating the Clergy of the Roman Catholic faith.
"G. R.," Colenigham.—Certainly, not under 14 years of age.
"S. C. T."—The individual was committed, but we have not seen any report of his trial.
"D. A. R."—The case of the woman in question was, we believe, postponed till the next assizes.
Ineligible.—Lines from Baldock; Lines by Petreae; Invitation to the Woods, by E. L. B.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1845.

A SEVERE censure was pronounced in the House of Lords on Monday evening, on the practice, once discontinued, but again revived, of making what is called the "Condemned Sermon," in Newgate, a public exhibition. The prison is not under the immediate controul of the Secretary of State, but is governed by the Corporation of London; an abuse, therefore, may be put down for a short time, but there is no security that it will not be found as flourishing as ever shortly afterwards. We think it is about three years since that Sir James Graham was compelled by the voice of Parliament and the general feeling of disgust on the part of the public, to caution the City authorities against such scandalous proceedings; but here is the same offence repeated; there is a wretched murderer under condemnation; he is, according to custom, to be present at a sermon, on the last Sabbath—nay, during the very last hours of his existence; and so to distract his mind and tempt a poor, vain, miserable criminal to act a part, and assume a theatrical air of bravado, the Sheriffs issue "tickets for as many persons as the chapel will hold"!

By what right, legal or moral, do they do any such thing? What right have they to gratify the diseased appetite of their private friends for a spectacle at the cost of disturbing the last moments of a dying man, with a wish to appear gay and unconcerned, and to assume a deportment "to be seen of men" when all his energies ought to be bent on the dread and awful task of meeting his God! There is no law that empowers them to inflict this moral torture on the criminal; for torture it is, as may be seen in the effort it cost the wretched man in the present case to pretend to a composure he did not feel; from the close of divine service on that day, his energy, such as it was, gave way; he had overtasked it—and when baited again on the morning of execution, by being informed of the presence of the emissaries of the "press," he was utterly prostrated; as far as conciousness is concerned, the executioner seems to have discharged his horrible duty on a corpse.

All this is wrong; it is utterly useless for any one purpose, and it is demoralising and disgusting besides. It is, doubtless, a very agreeable thing to play the great man in office, and distribute a petty patronage in "tickets of admission" to one of the darkest scenes of the tragedy of life; but decency requires that some check, and that an effectual one, should be put on such doings. A remonstrance from the Home Secretary will only have a temporary effect; Sheriffs A and B may act in deference to it for their term of office; but it will not bind Sheriffs C and D; the "requests of friends," made anxious by the chance of seeing a murderer of more than common atrocity, would cause it to be disregarded, as the last interference of the Government has been treated with contempt on the present occasion. The Sheriffs are ready, it is stated, to "take upon themselves the whole responsibility, and justify the course pursued by them upon the ground of long established practice, calculated to serve, rather than to defeat, or at all interfere injuriously with the ends of justice." The "long-established practice" is a very bad one, and as to the "ends of justice," they have nothing to do with the matter; the question is one of religious feeling, decency, and humanity, not of law. When sentence of death is passed, law and justice, if the man be guilty, are satisfied. With all that stands between the criminal and the grave, the "public" has nothing to do. And here we protest against a practice which the Sheriffs of London seem disposed to encourage, and that is to make the lower class of traders in intelligence for the papers, the recipients of any last confession or declaration a criminal may have to make, and we regret to see that the Ordinary of the prison countenances it. Here is an extract from the account of the execution:—

He was standing with his hat in his hand, and conversing with the Rev. Mr. Davis, to which gentleman he expressed great gratitude for his kind and spiritual attention. On the entrance of those connected with the press, the reverend gentleman told Hocker that there were several reporters present, and asked if he wished to make any statement; if so, it would be taken down and go forth to the world. He replied, much agitated, "No, sir, if I had known those gentlemen would have been here I might have said something; but I am not now sufficiently composed."

Now, we contend it is the public duty of the Sheriffs themselves to receive all such declarations. They are appointed for that purpose, among many others; they are the instruments of the law; and, though they are now relieved from executing the prisoner with their own hands, they are still the legal witnesses of the last legal forms, and any declaration that may be made—either any avowal of guilt or a protestation of innocence—they are bound to receive; in allowing a criminal to make it to the hangers-on of the press—the dealers in horrors—who may chance to be present, we have no doubt whatever they are acting illegally. Exaggeration is one of the commonest faults of the irregular and casual furnishers of intelligence; and what security has society that a declaration allowed to be made to these persons would be truly rendered? It may be a very disagreeable part of the Sheriffs' duty to attend executions; but they are paid for it by rank and station, and official honour, and they ought not to be above their duties; they may neglect them on their own responsibility, but we must protest against their turning any part of them over to any rank or grade of the press. We trust we shall not again hear of their permitting such an intimation to be made.

We think the practice of giving publicity to the minute details of a criminal's last hours, altogether demoralising; it excites a morbid curiosity, without effecting any public good. The Law, as we have stated, provides functionaries to receive any confession the criminal may make, and compels the execution to be carried into effect before the eyes of the world. With all the wretched details of the appearance, looks, and actions of the culprit, whether he bore his fate with indifference or had his faculties crushed out of him by dread at the approach of his last hour, society has nothing to do; it has taken his life; it has exacted the last penalty; any mental suffering it inflicts beyond what is involved in this, merely to gratify its own curiosity, is a cruelty and a crime. Let us, in the name of decency, assimilate our practice to that of other civilised nations; in France the agonies of the last hours are left to the novelist to describe; they are not intruded upon by the callous chronicler of daily events, bent only on making as many pence as he can. We never hear of the agents of all the daily papers of Paris being admitted to the closing scene, or that the criminal is made a Sabbath exhibition of before his death. In Spain the last hours of a criminal are respected; they are passed en capella, but no intruding crowd is admitted to gloat with detestable eagerness on the outward signs of inward terror, when man's heart "faileth him from fear." We are alone conspicuous among nations for allowing this abuse, and we sincerely hope that it will be put an end to by some enactment, which we suppose even the Corporation of London will observe, and that every prison in England will be closed on all these dread and solemn occasions, to an an irreverent crowd at the "condemned sermon," and the prying of the more callous and calculating myrmidons of the press.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE WHITECHAPEL DISTILLERY CASE.—The trial of the case, the Attorney-General v. Smith, was resumed on Monday in the Court of Exchequer. The evidence related to alleged facts which have been already published. Mr. Drinkwater, the principal officer in charge of Messrs. Smith's distillery, was examined at great length. He explained the principles upon which his calculations were made of the produce of the distillery at different specified periods, and from his explanation it appeared that the accounts in Messrs. Smith's books were substantially similar. When the next witness was called, the Lord Chief Baron observed, that he had looked closely into the issues the jury had to try, and could not help thinking that a great deal of evidence had been opened on the part of the Crown which was not very material. The issue the jury had to try was, whether there was an illegal communication between the distillery and the rectifying premises. Much of the evidence given on behalf of the Crown went only to show that it was possible or probable that the communication proved to exist was used, or was convenient to be used, if a fraud was intended to be committed. If the communication was proved to exist, surely the rest was merely a matter of law. The case for the Crown closed on Monday. On Tuesday, Mr. Kelly addressed the jury for the defendants. He commenced by stating that he could show proof that the statements of the Solicitor-General in opening the case were delusive in the extreme, and that the jury were not only unpossessed of the merits of the case, but that nearly every portion of the evidence adduced on behalf of the Crown was incorrect and fallacious. The charge against Mr. Smith was that he had carried on systematically a gigantic fraud. The fact was, that he was utterly guiltless of any fraud against the revenue or the fair trader. The charges of fraud against Mr. Smith, were utterly devoid of truth, and this great case would be found in the end to resolve itself into a doubtful question of law. Mr. Kelly entered into a long explanation on the part of the defendants. He said that more than forty years ago, the father of the Messrs. Smith became the proprietor of those premises. He was a distiller and rectifier, carrying on both trades on those premises. Until the year 1817, not only were the two businesses carried on upon the same premises, but there was no separation or division between the premises. In 1817, however, there came a change in the law, and a division was made between the premises. For seventy years past the supply of water was exactly what it was at this hour. Both the trades of a distiller and rectifier required a vast supply of water, and though the position of the pipes was varied as circumstances required, the premises continued to be supplied, as they now were, from large tanks, originally supplied with water from the main of the East London Water Works Company. In 1817 the Excise thought it expedient to prevent the contiguity of distilleries and rectifying houses. It was thought, perhaps properly, that these two trades carried on together created grounds of suspicion, and afforded facilities for fraud. At this time Messrs. Smith's premises were the only premises in Great Britain of any magnitude where the two trades were carried on together. Communications took place between the father of the Messrs. Smith and the Board of Excise, through their solicitor, Mr. Carr. It was first considered desirable to prevent the union of the trades altogether; and it was proposed to purchase Mr. Smith's rectifying business; but, after some negotiation, such was found to be the extent and value of the trade that the board declined to advise the purchase. Mr. Smith, therefore, continued to carry on the two trades; but, to satisfy the scruples of the Excise, erected a wall, completely separating the distillery and rectifying premises, so that when spirits were to be conveyed from one to the other it was by a public highway. When this separation took place, it was perfectly well known to the Excise that the rectifying-house and the distillery were supplied with water from the same source. Had it been otherwise, there must have been a new reservoir erected in the rectifying premises. It was then distinctly arranged that nothing should interfere with the ancient and regular supply of water. A clause, to be introduced in the Act of Parliament, was expressly framed for the protection of Mr. Smith; and it was submitted to the present Lord Chief Baron, now presiding at this trial, but then an eminent counsel at the bar, on behalf of Messrs. Smith. [The learned counsel here entered into a history of the various alterations made at different times in the arrangement of the water-pipes, illustrating his description by frequent references to a model before him.] Stripped of its adjuncts, and of the inflammatory statements with which it was introduced, the case was neither more nor less than that the Crown sought to impose penalties and exactions against Mr. Smith to the amount of between £300,000 and £400,000, for continuing a supply of water guaranteed by Government under high legal sanction many years ago. After again denying that any fraud was contemplated, Mr. Kelly called Mr. James Smith and other witnesses on the part of the defendants. The Solicitor-General afterwards replied. The Jury then retired, and, after a deliberation of two hours and a quarter, returned a SPECIAL VERDICT.—The Foreman said: "We find a verdict for the Crown on the second count; and we are desirous of expressing our opinion that there has been no proof of a fraudulent use having been made of the communication." After some consultation, not heard in Court, the verdict was entered by agreement for £75,000.—Mr. Kelly then applied to enter a verdict of Not Guilty on the remaining five counts, which was agreed to.

IRELAND.

THE REPEALERS AND THE STATE OF PUBLIC FEELING IN IRELAND.

At the meeting of the Repeal Association, on Monday, some remarks were made by Mr. O'Connell, which are deserving of attention, as they prove that, in spite of the promised steps of conciliation upon the occasion of the proposed visit of the Queen to Ireland, there is no intention of abandoning the Repeal agitation. Mr. Smith O'Brien previously spoke in strong terms about the Maynooth grant. He said, the language attributed to Mr. Macaulay during the late debate almost tempted him to use expressions of defiance. He (Mr. O'Brien) told the people of England, if they put the issue, not on right and justice, but on the strength of their own country, that, even circumstanced as the people of England were, the union could not be sustained by all the mighty power of England (loud cheers); but he would not be tempted by the rash and insolent boast to swerve from the policy which Repealers had marked out for themselves, which was—connexion with England, loyalty to the Queen, but no subserviency to a British Parliament. In other words, what they desired was, connexion with England through the means of the Crown, and national independence through a domestic Parliament. He told Mr. Macaulay he would do well to restrain his bluster. (Hear, hear.) He told him that if the contingencies contemplated in his speech were to occur, it would be too late to negociate. (Loud cheers.) If 50,000 Frenchmen were in readiness to descend upon the unprotected shores of England—if an American fleet swept the channel, having on board regiments of Irish emigrants, enrolled, armed, disciplined, ready to land on their native Irish soil and contend for the rights of their country—(cheers)—if the Irish soldiers in the British army, who form one-third of the force, should refuse, as he believed they would refuse, to shed the blood of their fellow-countrymen—and if 1,000,000 of the natives of Ireland now resident in England and Scotland, were prepared, as he believed they would be, to co-operate with their fellow-countrymen—if such contingencies were to arrive, he firmly believed that the British empire would be broken up, and that thenceforth the history of Ireland would be written as of a separate and independent nation. (Great cheering.)

Mr. O'Connell gave a description of the feeling which existed in England about the Maynooth grant. He said that the people at present were going stark staring mad, because £17,000 a-year was about being given to Maynooth. In Exeter-hall every despicable forgery calculated to bring disgrace on Catholicity was received with approval, and Dr. Gray was almost torn to pieces there by an infuriate mob of persons, calling themselves clergymen, for merely asking the name of the publisher of one of those forgeries! (Hear, hear.) After a few further observations regarding the hostility of the people of England, Mr. O'Connell proceeded to comment on the speeches recently delivered in Parliament about Ireland. He congratulated the people of Ireland on the prospects of success which had opened on them. Sir Robert Peel himself had promised them success, for he had told them that the agitation for Repeal could not be put down by force. He might retract that admission if he pleased, but he could never efface it from the minds of the people of England and Ireland. He would have it posted on the walls of that hall, that they could not be put down by force. (Cheers.) The reason that they could not be so put down was, that they were carrying on their proceedings in such a way as to afford no opportunity for the exercise of force against them. (Hear, hear.) Mr. O'Connell proceeded to remark that last week he was anxious for the coming of the Queen to Ireland, but he confessed that some of the recent speeches in the House of Commons had changed his mind exceedingly. They should now take care not to make any move which could be construed into any mitigation of the agitation for Repeal. (Hear, hear.) The cant and cry of their enemies in this country was, that the agitation was going down, and, if they shrank in the smallest degree, the cry would be echoed in England. No one had more respect for the Queen than he, or was more devoted in his allegiance, which he was ready to seal with his life; and he looked for the Repeal because he thought it was the only mode of maintaining the connexion with England. Sir James Graham, too, had said that the majority of the people of Ireland was against Repeal. He wished that Sir James Graham would count heads. (Cheers and laughter.) Those speeches had convinced him that he must be cautious. He concluded by moving that the Committee of the Association be instructed to consider the most appropriate manner of receiving the Queen on the occasion of her visit to Ireland, taking care that, while the greatest respect should be shown to the Sovereign, she might not be allowed to remain in ignorance of the intention of the people of Ireland under all circumstances to persevere in their demand for legislative independence.

This motion was adopted.

The rent for the week was stated to be £417 12s. 11d.

MEETING OF THE CORPORATION.—A special meeting of the Dublin Corporation was held on Tuesday in the City Assembly-house. The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor presided. Alderman O'Brien said he felt particular pleasure in moving that a committee should be appointed to prepare an address to the Queen, requesting her Majesty would be graciously pleased to visit her faithful Irish subjects, at her earliest convenience. Alderman Sir John Power, Bart., seconded the motion. Mr. Hudson moved an amendment, that the consideration of the subject should be postponed for a month. In proposing the amendment, Mr. Hudson said, that the unanimity which had existed on the subject of addressing her Majesty had been interrupted by recent circumstances, to which he would refer. He was surprised at reading a report of a speech, delivered by Mr. O'Connell, in which the learned alderman declared that the Repeal cause should be in no wise abated on the arrival of her Majesty; and if that course were followed, he (Mr. Hudson) could not anticipate anything but dissension and strife. (This is the speech above alluded to.) Alderman Kinahan seconded the amendment. Mr. O'Connell said, if there were anything criminal in the course complained of by Mr. Hudson, it was solely attributable to him, and he would vindicate himself. Since he last had the honour of speaking on the subject, circumstances had occurred which altered his opinion with regard to the course which he would pursue. The English newspapers conveyed intelligence of a nature that was not to be misunderstood. Ireland had been set at defiance. The English people were determined to risk everything, rather than entertain the subject of the Repeal of the Union; and if her Majesty would visit her Irish subjects, and that in compliment to her they would suspend their exertions for Repeal, it would be construed into a relinquishment of the question, to which he would never consent. He would not be a party to delusion by any Ministry, whether Whig or Tory. No one was bound by any act of his. He would engage to fulfil his promise by giving the toast of her Majesty's Ministers. He would contribute his share of whatever expense would be necessary to carry out the object; but he would refrain from voting on the question, on one side or the other. The amendment having been put and negatived, the original motion was carried, and a committee appointed.

POSTSCRIPT.

Her Majesty's Drawing Room.—Her Majesty held her second Drawing Room for the season at St. James's Palace, yesterday, at two o'clock. It was most numerously and brilliantly attended by the nobility and gentry, Foreign Ambassadors, Cabinet Ministers, and the Great Officers of State and the Household. Her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert, and escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards, left Buckingham Palace shortly before two o'clock, for St. James's. The Sovereign and her illustrious consort were loudly cheered, as the Royal cortège passed through the Park.

New Church at Kingston on Railway.—Yesterday (Friday) the Lord Bishop of Winchester consecrated the above edifice, an engraving of which appeared in the Illustrated London News of the 11th January last. The ceremony was witnessed by most of the neighbouring clergymen, gentlemen, and ladies of respectability, &c.; and every available seat was occupied. The sermon on the occasion was preached by the Lord Bishop, who selected for his text the 1st and 2nd verses of the 13th chapter of St. Mark, in which the destruction of the Temple is foretold. At the conclusion of the sermon, a collection was made on behalf of the funds, with a very gratifying result, a very liberal sum having been collected. All the forms peculiar to such ceremonies were gone through. The proceedings, which commenced at eleven o'clock, did not terminate until past two.

Extraordinary Trotting Match for £200.—Yesterday (Friday) the long-pending match which was made by Burke, of trotting notoriety, to drive two ponies in a tandem fifteen miles within one hour of the time of starting, came off at the Rosemary Branch at Peckham. The novelty of the match, and the heavy stakes, which were £100 aside, drew together an immense number of spectators. The celebrated pony Merrylegs was the leader, and they performed two miles in seven minutes and fifty-six seconds, and turned the fifth mile in eighteen minutes, and accomplished half the distance in twenty-seven minutes and fifty-eight seconds. The ponies seemed quite competent to their undertaking, and, trotting in admirable style, completed twelve miles in forty-four minutes and a half, and finally completed the whole of the fifteen miles within the hour, and won the stakes.

The Children of John Tawell.—The two children of this wretched man, by Sarah Hart, are still under the care of Mrs. Hallet, their maternal grandmother, at Gravesend. The Rev. Mr. Scott, the Wesleyan minister at Gravesend, has received a letter from Mrs. Tawell, in reply to one addressed to her by that gentleman, expressive of her wish that the children should be carefully attended to; stating that her own impaired health prevents her from doing more at present than writing; and approving of the children being baptised and named as proposed, in conformity with the grandmother's wishes on the subject. This religious ceremony will, we understand, be performed to morrow (Sunday), by that gentleman in the Wesleyan Chapel, Gravesend. Statements have been published, that some provision for the bringing up of the children was made by Tawell. We are assured that up to the present time no specific intimation of the kind has been made to Mrs. Hallet, or to her husband.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

SERIOUS STEAM-BOAT ACCIDENT IN AMERICA.

The packet ship Waterloo has arrived with New York papers to the 11th ult. They do not bring any political news of interest; but the New York Sun of the 10th, contains the following account of a sad steam-boat disaster:—

"The steam-boat Swallow, having on board about 350 passengers, left Albany last Monday evening, for this city. When opposite Hudson, near Athens, she struck on a rock, and broke in two. All was consternation on board; the ladies were terribly alarmed and agitated, and many were for jumping overboard, in efforts to reach the rock, or to save themselves in any way. The gentlemen, whose minds were cool and collected in the midst of the disaster, endeavoured to prevent any of the ladies leaving the boat, considering all safe in clinging to the wreck. What rendered the scene more appalling was the total darkness of the night—the water coming up to the hurricane deck, and the ladies being drawn up through the skylights, drenched in water. The heeling of the boat brought the fire of the furnaces in contact with the wood, and a lurid flame burst forth, lighting up at once, and adding to the horrors of the scene. Surrounded by fire and water, every effort was made by each person to provide for their own safety. The terror seemed to be at its highest when the boat broke in two, the water put out the fire, and the stern sunk. At this critical moment the steamboats Express and Rochester came up, and immediately got out all their boats, to pick up those who were in the water, and save the residue who were clinging to the wreck. Of these the Rochester took on board 150, and the Express 50. Many were known, however, to have reached Hudson and Athens, as boats were promptly despatched from both places. The rock is well known, and had the pilot kept in the channel the accident would not have occurred."

Additional Particulars.—"We have received the following particulars from a passenger in the Swallow at the time of the disaster;—'On going into the ladies' cabin after the vessel struck, he found it full of ladies, and, seizing his two daughters, he rushed forward, in company with his grandson, leaving in the ladies' cabin two ladies named Coffin, who were in company with an aged lady from Troy, these being the only ladies whose names were known to his daughters. Passing to the forward deck, he was met by some one who told him to keep off the bows, as the boat was going down; and as he turned to get to the hurricane deck, with his daughters and grandson, he was met by a rush of water sweeping over the lower deck from the stern, and turning round caught a glimpse of the two Misses Coffin behind him, but on gaining the upper deck with his charge they were missing. Search was made for their bodies on the lower deck, and one of them recovered, but quite dead. The other could not be found. As the boat sunk down, about 20 or 25, or more, took refuge in the state rooms, thinking they would be safe, but they were soon overwhelmed, some escaping on settees, chairs and tables, and floating away, while a few gained the hurricane deck, but it is feared that several remained in the rooms and were drowned. Of those who floated off (about 15 or 20) two gentlemen and a lady were found clinging to a settee about a mile and a half below the wreck, all three alive, but greatly exhausted. They were taken to Athens. Of the others who tried to save themselves by similar means, nothing was known, and it is feared they have perished.

"Passengers saved:—The Express took on board 40; the Rochester 94; carried to Athens and Hudson, 70; total, 204.

"Passengers lost or missing.—The following are the lost and missing, as far as ascertained:—

"Missing—Mrs. Conklin, Miss Coffin, of Troy; Mrs. Gilson and two young ladies from Albany, whose brother was at the wreck anxiously searching for their bodies; Mrs. Walker, of New York; Mrs. French, and Mrs. Lambert.

"Bodies Found.—Six bodies were found on the main deck, between the captain's office and the ladies' cabin, viz.:—Two Misses Wood and Miss Coffin, of Troy; one gentleman and a lady, names unknown; a middle-aged woman, apparently a native of Ireland; two more bodies were picked up near Hudson; Mrs. Colton and Miss Briggs, milliner, both of Troy, and one lady, with a thimble in her pocket, having the initials W. M. C., were found at the wreck.

"A gentleman of Detroit, named Huest, having a bag containing 1500 dollars in gold, jumped overboard with the bag upon his arm, but was soon obliged to let it go. He was only saved by having fortunately grasped a narrow strip of board as he jumped."

THE EXECUTION OF THOMAS HENRY HOCKER.

The hardened murderer of Mr. Delarue was executed on Monday morning at eight o'clock, at Newgate. As early as two o'clock in the morning, small groups of men, women, and children, continued to assemble in the Old Bailey, and the multitude that had arrived by seven o'clock was very numerous, exceeding any former occasion since the execution of Greenacre and Courvioisier. Their conduct, however, was more orderly and peaceable than generally on such occasions.

On Hocker's return to his cell, after hearing the condemned sermon on Sunday, he shed tears for some time, and evinced the strongest emotion. The rev. ordinary spent some time with the prisoner in the afternoon, and, in fulfilment of a promise made to the rev. divine, Hocker, at eight o'clock commenced writing the statement we subjoin below. This and the composition of another letter, addressed as a farewell to his family, occupied him until nearly twelve o'clock. He relieved the labour of writing by occasionally conversing with the two turnkeys (Humphries and Thompson) to whose charge he had been consigned for the night. In the course of these conversations, which were somewhat of a general character, Hocker stated that he was a father, and that the money he had obtained from the murdered Delarue had been devoted to the maintenance of the mother and his child. This is believed to be another instance of the romantic spirit which, throughout the whole of the lamentable tragedy, appears to have been his characteristic. He retired to bed soon after midnight. His slumbers were light and restless, and frequently the ejaculation of the words, "My mother, my poor mother," escaped his lips. Shortly after four o'clock, he rose and dressed himself with great care. Instead of the frock coat he wore at his trial, he put on a new black dress coat, and, as ever, was particular in the arrangement of his hair. Having perfected his toilette, he sat down and wrote two epistles, which will be found below. After this the culprit manifested a visible depression of spirits. His breakfast was but a scanty meal, and it was evident that his physical powers were insufficient further to carry out that exhibition of indifference which had generally marked his conduct. At seven o'clock he expressed a wish to see the different officers of the gaol, with whom he had been immediately in communication. The wish was no sooner expressed than it was complied with. The prisoner, evidently struggling to keep up the semblance of composure, severally expressed his gratitude to them, and bade them an eternal farewell. At a quarter-past 7 o'clock the sheriffs (Mr. Alderman W. Hunter and Mr Alderman Sidney), attended by their under-sheriffs (Messrs. Marten and Ashurst), entered the ward in which the cell occupied by the murderer was situate. In company with these functionaries, we noticed Mr. D. W. Harvey, the Chief Commissioner of the City Police; Mr. Anderton, of the Common Council; and several other gentlemen connected with the Corporation.

Before eight o'clock his strength began to fail him very perceptibly, and the Rev. Mr. Davies, who remained closetted with him, felt it necessary to advise that the prison surgeon should see him. A little water administered to the wretched man revived him at this period, and at about five minutes to eight o'clock, the reporters for the press, and some few officials, accompanied the governor and the sheriffs into the condemned cell, at one corner of which, near the fire place, Hocker stood erect. The entrance of strangers did not perceptibly affect him. He continued to occupy the same position for some moments—his eyes bent upon the ground, and apparently suffering much internal anguish. He was dressed in a plain suit of black, and wore white stockings and slippers. Although looking very haggard and dejected, he appeared at this time tolerably composed, and stood with his hat in his hand, with that coolness of manner which has characterised him in most of his appearances in public.

At this period, Mr. Sheriff Sidney addressed him, and said, "There are now present a number of persons connected with the press, and if you have any statement to make, it will through them be made public."

The prisoner, in a voice which was scarcely audible, said, "I don't think, sir, I am sufficiently composed now to do that; if I had known that they would be here, perhaps I might have done so."

Calcraft then approached him with the pinioning ropes in his hand, upon which the prisoner shut his eyes, as if he could not bear to look at them; and just as his hands were tied, it became evident that he was fainting: two of the turnkeys rushed behind him at the instant, and caught him in their arms, or he would have fallen on the floor. He was then put into an arm chair, and carried into the chapel-yard. His neck-cloth having been removed, and cold water dashed upon his face, he partially came to himself in two or three minutes, but then looked more dead than alive, so completely were all his energies prostrated by the mental agony which he suffered. His anguish appeared to arise from the dread of death; and as far as one could judge from appearances, this was the one feeling which possessed his mind.

As he sat in the chair in the yard a little wine was administered. The operation of pinioning was finished, and, all being now in readiness, the chapel bell tolled dismally, and the mournful procession moved forward towards the apparatus of death, the culprit, who appeared scarcely able to sustain himself, being meanwhile supported by the turnkeys. On arriving at the foot of the scaffold, he walked up the steps tolerably well; but the moment he got in sight of the populace his strength again failed him, and Thompson, one of the turnkeys, was obliged to hold him up by main force while the cap was drawn over his eyes, and the rope was being adjusted by the executioner. The culprit appeared so convulsed that this was as much as one man could do; and the moment the bolt was withdrawn, and the prisoner had been launched off, the turnkey was so affected that he staggered down the steps of the platform and immediately fainted.

While the noose was being adjusted, Hocker continued to pray audibly in short sentences, such as "Oh God, receive my spirit!" "Oh Lord, have mercy upon me!" &c.

After the drop fell, it appeared that on the instant life was extinct, but in a few seconds a slight convulsive muscular action of the extremities was apparent, but then all was over.

The crowd assembled to witness the execution could not have numbered less than 12,000 persons. The summit of the houses opposite to the gaol, and every window within several hundred yards of the scaffold, were thronged with spectators.

Previously to their entering the cell of the prisoner, Mr. Sheriff Hunter addressed the reporters in the chapel-yard, and stated that, in consequence of what had appeared in one of the papers, respecting the propriety of delaying the execution, in order to ascertain whether there had been any accomplice with the prisoner in the murder of Delarue, they (the Sheriffs) had put the matter to Hocker several times, and offered at once to go to the Secretary of State on his behalf, if there were really any grounds for the suggestions which had been thrown out in his favour. He did not, however, express any wish in the matter; and the subject having been more than once renewed by the Sheriffs, Hocker at length proposed that they should bring the subject to a close by saying no more about it. Mr. Sheriff Sidney also stated, that although the prisoner had never directly either asserted his innocence, or denied his guilt, he had several times held up his hand, and said, "This is not the arm that struck the blow."

After his conviction he reiterated that part of his story relative to the alleged seduction of the girl at Hampstead by Delarue. The Sheriff, in conversation with him on this occasion, remarked that the different parts of his defence were very inconsistent with each other—that in one portion he spoke of his friendship with the deceased, and in another, of his animosity towards him; to which he replied, "Oh, yes, I had borne an animosity towards him for a long time, although he did not know it."

The following is an exact copy of the statement, or (as it has been called) the confession delivered by the culprit to the Ordinary:—

"Rev. and dear Sir,—This is the last written communication I shall make to the world. My hours are now so few that a babe might count them. Whatever may have been my conduct hitherto, I cannot any longer dissemble. You are too good and worthy a friend for me to deceive with my last breath. Though I be condemned to die on a scaffold, I have yet one tender chord remaining in my bosom, which your unceasingly kind attention has kept in continual motion. I would rather be deemed a murderer than a vile ingrate. I thank God that he has endued me with that feeling which has made it impossible for me to be guilty of either. I never did any man a premeditated injury in my life, and God forbid that I should, at such a time as this, forget to make you every acknowledgment in my power while I live, for the faithful part you have evinced in my unhappy case during my incarceration. You have proved yourself to be one of my dearest friends. May your reward here be that happiness which, alas! has failed to be my lot, and hereafter, that state of bliss which you have so often and so fervently prayed that I might be a partaker of!

"With a quiet and unresentful conscience, and a heart still beating innocence of that for which I am unjustly doomed to suffer, I wish to rectify two dev ations from truth in the second statement which I read at my trial, or rather, I should say, to admit their falsity. The manner in which I accounted for the stains of blood on my clothes was fictitious. It were an easy matter for me to forge another lie, by saying, that in stooping down by the body of deceased, as he lay dead, I came by such an appearance of guilt. But no, I will not; I cannot die with a falsehood on my lips. In accordance with a spirit of truthfulness, I avow solemnly, in the presence of my God, that the marks were not occasioned by any contact whatever with the person of deceased. I myself did it, after the body was removed by the constables. Can it be that I am indulging an infidel temerity at such an awful period as this, by asseverating an untruth? No! My conviction of a future judgment and a state of eternal consciousness is so powerful, that I have not wickedness enough to trifle with my Maker, and my own soul, at its peril, now that the gallows is in the course of erection for my execution. I am digressing. There is one point more to which I would draw your attention: I stated that Hampstead was the place where the guilty parties resided: this was an invention.

"My defence has been complimented as an 'idle romance' by two individuals, whose names I will not do the honour of publishing. If it were a 'romance,' it was far from an idle one, for it was begun and finished in twenty minutes, while my solicitor was in waiting. I also beg to assure those penetrating critics, that I should not issue such a 'romance' as a specimen of the fertility of my imagination. But this strain is foreign to my object in writing to you. Excepting the inaccuracies to which I have alluded, both my statements were founded in truth, and were true throughout. As a dying man, I have no other motive than that of truth for breaking silence. I only wish you to see that I am not ashamed again and again to declare my innocence to all the world. That I am not guilty of murder, God and my conscience bear witness; and this I shall be able to shout from my heart on my entrance into eternity. It is the duty of every man to prepare for death. I trust that I am prepared. The very best of men is not, of himself, worthy a place in Heaven. My hopes beyond the grave are not my own deserts, but those of another. My being innocent of the crime of murder will not entitle me to an immortal crown, but a submission to His will who has permitted me to be brought thus low, with an open and sincere confession of all my present and past youthful follies and imperfections, followed by genuine contrition and faith. These, I have learned to believe, are acceptable to our merciful and gracious Benefactor, whom I have so often offended.

"A man whom I have treated as my friend is the murderer of Delarue. His own admission of the fact was the only means of extricating me from this unworthy end. He has not come forward. Had I caused him to be apprehended, he would doubtlessly have denied it. I have been assured that, had I not been found guilty of murder, I should have been transported for life for highway robbery. Such an alternative has failed to induce me to divulge what it is my resolution to die with in my bosom. Let then this sentence ring in the murderer's ears: that he is not only the destroyer of Delarue, but me likewise. I did not lift a hand against deceased. There may, even yet, be found some harsh enough to brand me as a dying liar. But oh, if they knew what I, alas! too well know, they would see the wrong they do me. I have suffered too much, and am, while writing this, too weak and heart-broken to quit this world like an atheist. My sorrows have been more than my strength (great as it has been) could support. I am no longer the same young man who heard sentence of death passed without the distortion of a muscle. My troubles, both sleeping and awake, have so shaken me, that I find it more easy to weep than to smile. Every rising sun dispels the dark mystery of futurity. Already I see death approaching me with increasing strides. At night, when I lay my poor aching head to rest, ere I can close my eyes, rude forms of shame and infamy attend my pillow, and oh! what dreams; one moment, and all is passed. I am again at home; every one cheering me with eager hands and hearts at my return—no longer condemned—no longer unhappy. Then to wake and find myself stretched on a hard bed, surrounded by iron bars and gloomy walls, that deride my anguish and mock at my distress. This is bitterness, indeed! Then talk not to me of the awfulness of death! Death is the only friend that can make amends for all my wretchedness! For me to continue such as I am were worse than ten thousand deaths. Even death on a scaffold (that shameful end) to me is far preferable to none. I am heartily sick of the world that has treated me as though I had always been a criminal in its estimation. No one ever suspected me of any unlawful breach until I came hither, and yet no one would take me by the hand. Because I could spell and write, my poverty was a crime. Think you, then, my thoughts still lingered behind, and that I wished my days were renewed? My hopes of heaven are worth them all. My home and an isolated friend here and there are my only attractions, and I trust I shall meet them soon where all is light and joyous—where the love of God is the only mystery—where holiness and pure intellect go hand in hand; and the tear of gratitude the only tear! May you and I, my dear sir, and all those who are dear to us, be welcomed there, is the dying prayer of "Your poor unfortunate but faithful servant,

"The Rev. Mr. Davis, Ordinary, April 26, 1845." "T. H. Hocker.

Subjoined will be found copies of the letters above referred to. As will be seen, they are respectively addressed to two females. The names are intentionally suppressed, but there can be no impropriety in stating that the one addressed to "Sarah" was intended by the wretched man for Miss Philps, the young woman who gave evidence upon his trial. It should be particularly observed that one of these letters was handed to the reverend ordinary on Monday morning, with a request that he would forward it to the party to whom it was addressed, Hocker leading Mr. Davis to understand that the letter was a last address to one whom he had dearly loved. The other letter was handed to Mr. Wright, the deputy governor of the prison, with a similar request. In due course both letters reached the governor's hands, and thus the duplicity of the writer was discovered.

The following are copies of the letters:—

"28th April, 1845

"My still dearest Olivia!—I cannot quit this scene of heart-rending misery without addressing you a farewell line. My lot is a hard and painful one, indeed, and how often I have thought of you my dearest love, since my incarceration, I cannot tell. I have had you in my remembrance both sleeping and awake, and every time my heart has been ready to burst. This is the last epistle I shall write; you are deserving the best wishes of every one. You have my last blessing. Heaven bless you and make you its own; and oh! may we meet in heaven, where there is no more separation, no more forgetfulness, but all is love and joy. "Yours, till the last,

"T. H. Hocker."

"28th April, 1845.

"My very dear Sarah—I have not had courage enough to address you since I was last with you. From the first moment of my acquaintance with you until the present, I have cherished the most genuine and respectful affection for you, and though I made you many misrepresentations of my condition in life, had I lived I should have repaired them all; but all is past, excepting my love for you, which survives every other feeling. May you be happy yet, and may we meet in heaven. Your good friends, Mr. and Mrs. E., will not spurn my dying respects and esteem, nor will our kind Miss E. disbelieve that I still feel every sentiment for her that I once professed to feel. I have given this my warmest kiss for you, my sweet love, heaven bless you, farewell—farewell. "Yours, with my dying blessing, T. H. Hocker."

The last request Hocker made to the deputy governor of the prison was that a lock of his hair might be forwarded to his father.

The body, after hanging the usual time, was cut down, and a cast of the head having been taken, the remains were buried within the precincts of the prison.

THE CONDEMNED SERMON.

On Sunday last, the Rev. Mr. Davis, the ordinary of Newgate, preached what is called the condemned sermon in the chapel of the prison. The Sheriffs having issued tickets for as many persons as the chapel could, without being crowded to the inconvenience of all, contain, the seats were, soon after the admission of the visitors, completely occupied. Notwithstanding the general censure to which female visitors upon occasions of the kind have been subjected, there were some of the sex whose curiosity prevailed over the feelings by which the majority are influenced.

In the Sheriffs' pew sat Sir J. Pirie and Under-Sheriff Martin. Sheriff Sidney and Alderman Musgrove occupied the Ordinary's pew, and Mr. Anderton and three other gentlemen were accommodated with seats in that of the Governor. The gaol bell having summoned the prisoners in the various wards of the gaol to divine service, the divisions of the chapel assigned to them were speedily filled. As soon as they were seated, Connor, the young fellow who was commited for trial upon the charge of the wilful murder of Mary Brothers, in George-street, St. Giles's, was brought in. Connor appeared to be improved in health, and was decently attired in black. He was conducted to a chair prepared for him in the body of the chapel, directly opposite to the pulpit, and close to the pew appropriated to the use of the family of the Rev. Mr. Davis, and he seemed to be affected frequently during the service. The turnkey sat on a form next to him. After a delay of a few seconds, Hocker entered, accompanied by the Deputy-Governor of the prison, and an assistant turnkey. It might be called a theatrical movement. The ease and self-possession which the convict exhibited as he advanced to his seat evidently surprised those who had never before seen him, and he seated himself on a chair facing the altar, and at the end of the chapel opposite to that which Connor occupied. He was very particular in fixing the chair and hassock which had been placed for his use so as to enable him to make a display. He exhibited, in fact, a perfect consciousness that he was "the observed of all observers," and had, to all appearance, made up his mind to represent in this last but one scene of his existence, the character which he had been performing since his apprehension. His person did not seem to be in any degree changed since his condemnation. His costume was precisely the same, and now, as then, he was scrupulously particular in the arrangement of his hair. Shortly after his entrance he spoke to Mr. Cope, who, at his request, directed one of the attendants in the chapel to bring him a glass of water. He received the glass from the hand of the man with a bow and placed it by his side.

At length the service commenced. Hocker joined in the responses in a firm tone. It was, however, obvious to careful observers of his demeanour, that he was struggling at times under strong internal emotion to keep up an appearance of calm self-possession. Sometimes his eye wandered from the Prayer-book and became fixed on vacancy; but he soon roused himself from his abstraction, and again turned to the page. He deviated in this manner three or four times during the service, and his apparent unconsciousness was especially marked when he sat during the reading of the lessons of the day.

At the conclusion of the sermon Hocker shed tears, which he hastily removed with his handkerchief, which he at once placed in his hat, and rose to leave the chapel. He was the first to quit it. Connor, upon whom the eloquent discourse of the Rev. Ordinary had manifestly made a deep impression, followed. The other prisoners were then removed in the same order as they had been introduced.

THE TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS DAY AT NEWMARKET.

In the latter days of Old England, when George the Fourth was King, it was held especial mauvais ton to be amused, and to be melancholy and gentlemanlike was all the fashion. Then it was that high-bred maidens and youths glided through quadrilles, sad and silent as ghosts about churchyards; and persons of condition consorted together with faces that would compliment a funeral. At that period Newmarket was the exclusive resort of the high circles, and, as a matter of course, one of the most distingué and dismal places in his Majesty's dominions. In the childhood of Young England, when common sense began to reign, the law requiring that good breeding should be grim was repealed, and young hearts and heels repudiated the dead march of Terpsichore in favour of the Polka. Contemporary with this revolution of the saloons, was manifested a disposition to rescue the noblest site for the great national sport of horse-racing from the aristocratic funeral games by which it had been so long monopolised, and throw it open as a general rendezvous for popular Olympics. For the last dozen seasons this has been gradually coming to pass, and, on the occasion to which this notice refers, it was brought to a triumphant result. On Tuesday, the 29th ult., that fair expanse of champaign, which forms the border of Suffolk, hard by the region traversed by the Devil's Ditch, was the scene of a truly English festival: a place of junketting al fresco à fête champetre after the most approved national model. The limits of the Rowley Mile were defined by cavalcades of coaches: around "the bushes" clustered ladies fair on prancing palfreys; adown the dip of the T.Y.C. strolled groups of holiday pedestrians; around the "ring" fluttered Cambridge "drags," discoursing music from yards of tin; and, on all sides, were pleasure people diving into cold pies and pasties, and welcoming the auspicious epoch with salvos of Moët! Thus has it come to pass that this once tabooed heath shall henceforth be trod by the light step of the merry-maker; and many a pic-nic discussed, where whilom Nick had all the picking to himself.

The future anniversaries of the Two Thousand are destined to be the Derby days of Newmarket. Next year there will be a railway to Cambridge—from which the race-course is but some eight miles distant, and the district to be passed one of much rural beauty. In process of time there will be a line to the town itself, it is fair to assume—though at present, as they say, it is opposed by certain members of the Jockey Club, on account of the inconvenience it would cause to the coursing. Whether the inhabitants shall enjoy the advantages of commerce and communion with the rest of the world, or "tractus uter flures lepores," is a question no doubt that will be settled anon. But to our gala.

At Chesterford—a fine specimen of an English way-side hotel—while as yet the annihilation of space had not rendered such a convenience superfluous—the ensemble, as Monsieur says, had all the character of an Epsom pilgrimage. In front of the house were pairs of posters by the scores; boys in boots and jackets (alas! so soon to give place to unpicturesque stokers); carriages of all degrees—from the royal road-chariot, to the promiscuous "ochre;" and such groups of gentles; such incense of Havannah; such a mirror of chivalry! The sixteen miles thence to Newmarket were sprinkled over with equipages, led horses, and the paraphernalia of aristocratic wayfaring. The town at noon was a sporting panorama, as correctly got up as a multitude of professors, all occupied in the process, could ensure. The neighbourhood of the Rooms was, of course, the cynosure of all the betters and the babblers; there men spake their hopes, or looked their fears; and if, haply, "lovely woman" was seen among them, ye felt "she stooped to folly;" "what business had she there at such a time?" The day was a glorious sample of spring—fresh and fragrant as dew and violets, and for a perfect picture of a pleasure pilgrimage, commenced as to the setting out for the heath, which took place soon after noon. The list of sport was a rich one—but all the interest centred in the event that gave name to the occasion. For the Two Thousand Guinea Stakes, of eighteen horses originally named, but five were declared to start; and of these Idas, the property of Lord Stradbroke, was backed, with odds on him against the field. This distinguished courser is so called, because his sire is Liverpool (typical of Neptune) and his dam Marpessa; for the fitness of the titles, see Lemprier. Besides him, the party was made up of two belonging to Mr. Wreford, Winchelsea and Worthless, twins, having no apparent affinity; Wood Pigeon, one of the handsomest horses in the world, and Paultons, not remarkable in any way. Three o'clock was the hour which should decide this event, big with the fate of the Derby, and more lotteries than ever entered the dreams of Bish, or Hazard, or Goodluck. As the time drew near, a mighty torrent of cavalry rushed towards the saddling stables, where each individual saw, in the champion of his own chance, the hero that should win the laurels and the money. But when Idas submitted himself to our scrutiny, we felt how worthy he was of the general confidence he commanded. A more perfect ideal of a racer was never conceived. His symmetry is formed of all the lines of beauty, combined with every appliance of speed, and courage, and endurance. Should he preserve the form in which he came out on Tuesday, woe to those who have him on the wrong side of their books on the 28th proximo. The details of the race are told in a few words. The start was an admirable one; Winchelsea made the running as long as he could, and when the pace had left him, his confederate, Worthless, took up the gauntlet. This was at the "dip from the bushes," already alluded to, and here all uncertainty of the end was disposed of. Idas now went to the front: was seen to go faster than, and farther from, his field every stride, finally cantering in first—by the length which pleased his jockey. "Newmarket Heath has not seen such an animal for many a year." Thus spoke the public voice, with which we cordially agree. Newmarket Heath never before saw such a scene: that it has witnessed so goodly a spectacle we cordially rejoice: that it may see a thousand similar anniversaries we earnestly hope. Away with your exclusiveness, gentlemen of the Jockey Club. Your dominion is a wide one; what would you have? Hold out the hand of goodfellowship to your less courtly brother, while yet it may be graciously offered, and if you must make terms with your amour propre for the condescension, whisper to yourself while you do the greeting, as Sterne did to another of the lower animals—"Here, poor devil, there's room enough in the world for you and me."

NEAR THE COURSE, NEWMARKET.

"MAY-DAY IN THE LAST CENTURY."

We have engraved Mr. Anthony's eloquent picture, in the gallery of the Society of British Artists. It narrates, and brilliantly, the most pleasing incidents of a Festival of Merry England. The somewhat formal grouping is relieved by a foreground, on which a gipsy is endeavouring to ply her calling with a pair of lovers, who, however, appear to be

"Lapt in the Elysium of indifference."

Among the best points are two old trees, just budding out their May green: they are very sweetly painted. The picture, we learn, has been purchased by one who knows how to distinguish nicely.

MAY-DAY IN THE LAST CENTURY.—PAINTED BY ANTHONY.—FROM THE EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

IRISH MENDICANTS.—BY ALFRED FRIPP.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS, PALL-MALL EAST.

This gallery, always one of the most agreeable and interesting in the metropolis, is this year marked by peculiar excellence; although we perhaps miss some of those leading subjects on a larger scale which used to be sent annually from the easels of the Cattermoles, the Lewises, and the Taylers. The excellence of the Exhibition arises this year from the universality of its high character; scarcely a really bad drawing is to be found upon the walls, and the greater proportion of works exhibited range very far indeed above mediocrity in this graceful and elegant branch of art.

De Wint's "Stacking Hay" (No. 4), is the first drawing which asks for notice, on the score of the beautiful colour of the foliage and its masterly execution.

Next to this, we have a charming drawing of "Romish Devotion" (No. 10), which is one of the very best things that ever proceeded from Mr. Hunt's pencil. The colour is exquisite, and the mingled nature and poetry of the head might have proceeded from Murillo. It is drawn and modelled with a truth that nothing can surpass.

No. 13. "Eagle's Nest, Glengariff, county of Kerry," by W. A. Nessfield, is a large composition, displaying great elegance of colour, and finesse of hand. Possibly, the colour is somewhat too bright. In other respects, the landscape is good, and the deer and startled heron are introduced with character and firmness. The latter strikes us as appearing somewhat too small in proportion to the former.

23. "Ploughboy and Cart-horses," by Frederick Tayler. This and its companion (No. 31) are two of the best drawings in the Gallery.

26. "Berne, Switzerland—Morning, as it Sometimes Wakes in the Alps," by J. D. Harding. A fine landscape, full of power and ability, although somewhat eccentric in the colour and form of its sky. The mist in the valley is excessively beautiful, and the painting of the foreground carries water colour executively almost as far as it can possibly go. As a whole, however, we prefer the elegant handling and graceful colour of No. 9—"Beilstein, in the Moselle," by the same artist.

34. "The Rosary," by Alfred Fripp. A clever bit of expression, somewhat too thinly executed, but singularly chaste and graceful.

37. "Tralee, County of Kerry," by Mr. Evans, of Eton. Were it not for somewhat too much of the rainbow about the colour of the drawing, it would be an admirable landscape.

38. "Interior of Part of a Church," by W. Hunt. One of the ugliest bits of pertinacious truth and nature in the Gallery.

40. "The Holy Well," by Alfred Fripp. This, as well as the other drawings of this clever artist, strongly remind us of the feeling for art exhibited by Mr. Poole. The upturned face of the kneeling girl is beautifully full of meaning and expression.

42. "Pigeons," by Mr. Hunt. This, and "Rabbit," &c. (No. 270), by the same master, are the two best bits of still life in the gallery.

46. "Wreck on the Rocks of Elizabeth Castle, Jersey," by C. Bentley. A powerful, but somewhat rigidly, executed landscape. It is well composed, and its colour is clear and transparent, although too black in tone.

47. "The Oratory, Naworth," by S. Rayner. A clever sketch, which does all but rival Cattermole, the master upon whom it has evidently been studied.

69. "Distant View of Brough Castle." One of David Cox's fresh and windy drawings, full of nature and reality, and as sober in colour as the works of any painter who wishes to last, should be.

75. "Danseneau, on the Lahn—Morning," by T. M. Richardson, jun. The colour of this drawing is too lurid, but the finish is superb, and its arrangement is excessively graceful.

86. "The Afternoon's Nap," by J. M. Wright. A graceful drawing, with much of Stothard about its manner; modelled upon Richter's old composition of the "School in an Uproar."

87. "Boy Fetching Water." O. Oakley. A graceful drawing, blemished by some defective drawing about the feet.

82. "Ancaster, Lincolnshire," and 88. "A Village in Cumberland," are two exquisite specimens of Mr. De Wint's honest and homely truth.

91. "Lanercost Priory, Cumberland," by S. Rayner. This is in point of colour

SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY WITH THE GIPSIES.—BY G. HARRISON.

the best drawing exhibited by this artist. The manner is strikingly firm and vigorous.

100. "A Village Scene during Harvest," by P. De Wint. A capital drawing.

101. "Knaresborough Castle," by D. Cox. The ruinous walls of the old castle are admirably painted.

102. "Dahlias," by V. Bartholomew. Ought to have been on the sight line. No flower-painter living or dead, ever surpassed the beauty and finesse of colour shown in this luxuriant composition.

112. "Cloudy Day." David Cox's very best drawing, and, in addition to this, one of the best landscapes on the walls of this Exhibition.

114. "The Piazza Falcone, Naples," by W. Callow. The effect of this drawing [illegible] Nature, and the only fault which it possesses, is the [illegible] in the middle distance.

116. "Shakspeare Cliff, Dover," by W. Evans, of Eton. The texture of this drawing is not equal to the landscape by the same painter, which we have already noticed, and too much raw colour is used in the detail.

119. "Sir Roger de Coverley with the Gipsies," vide "Spectator," is a very clever drawing by G. Harrison: the sunlight through the trees upon the roadway of the lane is a very masterly effect. We have engraved this beautiful illustration of our great Essayist.

127. Guernsey Fisher-Boys at a Cottage." Another boy in blue, gracefully painted, but not quite equal to Gainsborough's.

128. "Haddon Hall," by S. Rayner. A masterly drawing, which would pass for a Cattermole.

142. "Instruction." A large but simple composition, by J. M. Wright. The subject is taken from Proverbs, Chap. IV. The colour is chaste, but feeble; the execution excessively graceful; and it occupies the post of honour on the walls of the gallery.

150. "Moel Siabod, N. Wales," by W. Evans. The style of this drawing is masculine and powerful; but the colour is somewhat heavy.

151. "View of the South Downs, near Lewes," by Copley Fielding. A good specimen of the workmanship and fine atmospherical power of this clever painter.

152. "Irish Mendicants." Another excellent drawing by Alfred Fripp. We have engraved this masterly performance.

172. "Isola de San Guilio, Lago d' Orta," by H. Gastineau. A brilliant landscape, but deficient in precision.

139. "A Gleaner." Mr. Oakley's best drawing.

181. "On the Bridge at Prague." This is a good drawing, by the veteran Prout, one of the first water-colour reformers.

188. "View from Bolton Abbey," by George Fripp. Like De Wint, but by no means slavishly so. The colour is excessively rich, and legitimately managed.

195. "The Retainers' Gallery, Knowle," by S. Rayner. Clever and vigorous.

197. "Rowhead, Lancashire," by Douglas Morison. Dull in tone, but with much merit in its manner.

200. This is a strange drawing to be found in the Exhibition. It is an "Assemblage of Works of Art, in Sculpture and in Painting, from the earliest periods to the time of Phidias," by J. Stephanoff. It is well executed, and arranged with great ability, but we confess that we value it more for its curiosity as a work of comparison and reference than we do artistically.

201. "View of the Amphitheatre at Pola, in Istria," by A. Glennie. The colour of the drawing is very fine, but the water wants transparency and intelligibility.

210. "Hollyhocks," by V. Bartholomew. A splendid drawing, shamefully hung.

211. "A Stable Boy," by W. Hunt. A good drawing, full of rich colour, and handled very powerfully.

221. "A Corn-field," by P. De Wint. The colour of this drawing is magnificently true and sober. It is, without exception, the very best drawing in the room, and reminds us of this artist's best and happiest inspirations. Nature never had a chaster and more vigorous interpreter.

231. "Highland Cottage Door," by Frederick Tayler. A gem in colour and facility of hand.

244. "Pine Apple and Grapes." No. 251. Ditto. No. 256. "Birds' Nests;" and No. 258. "Quince, &c.," by W. Hunt, are all excellent.

246. "An Interior in the Elizabethan Style," by W. Hunt, is, next to "Romish Devotion," the best drawing which this great water-colour master exhibits. Mr. Hunt is, with Mr. De Wint, one of our greatest favourites. His rich and peculiar gusto for nature has never yet, and will probably never be, equalled. It is perhaps, to be regretted that he ever condescends to such caricature as No. 226 ("A Mishap"); which, however laughable it may be, is unworthy a taste so true and at times so refined, as his proves itself to be. We ought to apologise to him for having passed over No. 234 (a marvellous bit of expression and vitality) without notice.

254. "The Ride," by Frederick Tayler, is too crude in its brilliancy.

279. "Drawing by Candlelight," by W. Hunt. His best bit of tone. It is equal to the most mellow canvas left us by any of the elder masters.

282. "Scene from the Monastery," by Cattermole. A fair drawing, but by no means equal to No. 300 ("Benvenuto Cellini defending the Castle of San Angelo"). The firm and definite painting of this subject is beyond all praise. It is perhaps the slightest drawing in the room, but it is also the firmest and most solid. Nothing can be more masculine and powerful than the style of the detail, and the simple disposition of the light and shade. It is broadly and powertully conceived, and the colour is of the chastest description, without verging on the slightest thinness or poverty. The drawing of the figures is equally good. It is a work of very high character.

298. "The First of September" is a fine drawing; and although somewhat slight, is the best which Frederick Tayler exhibits. His "Interior of a Stable" (305) is inferior to it in brilliance, but much superior in tone.

306. "Porta di Posilipo and the Bay of Baiæ," by S. Palmer. An eccentric but agreeable piece of warm, and at the same time delicate colour, somewhat over-done in the minuteness of its finish.

327. "The Discovery;" and 329, "Beatrice in the Garden," by G. Harrison. A brace of agreeable, and graceful sketches.

328. "Childhood," by Eliza Sharpe. Tenderly imagined; but too high in colour.

330. "The visit to the Monastery," by Cattermole. Although this is a capital drawing, it is much inferior to the one on which we have bestowed such high praise.

339. "The Evening Walk," by Frank Stone. By no means equal to the artist's reputation.

From the number of able and interesting works which we have specified, as well as from the length and general tone of our notice, it will be seen that at no exhibition in London could an hour or two be passed with more intellectual pleasure, than in the Gallery of this Society.

OUR BRANCH OF MAY.

Yes! We can bear a branch of May
To all the merry world,
Wherever Genius darts her ray,
Or Art has flag unfurl'd!
The fragrance of a month like this
Not lost, shall pass away,
While we can waft its balmy kiss
Upon our Branch of May!

May is the budding month of Art!
And, from her dewy sky,
A blossoming young Poetry
Shines forth with starry eye!
We love the painter's sunlit room,
The poet's flowery way;
And shall not both find sun and bloom
Upon our Branch of May?

A Branch of May! most pure in flow'r,
And fairest in its green,
We bear unto her Royal Bower,
A Spring-gift to the Queen!
And spread the sweet leaves round her throne,
And, with her subjects, pray
That all her life may typify
One lovely "Branch of May!"

A branch to hang in lordly halls,
On the old walls shine bright,
And shed back to the olden time
Its blossoms and its light!
And, as the sun comes gleaming in
To tinge it with his ray,
May Noble grasp the Peasant's hand
Beneath our Branch of May!

A branch for the New Temple-shrines
Where lordly wisdom holds,
Its court of power, and to its heart
The nation's glory folds!
The coronet is not too proud,
The ermine not too gay,
To smile on Nature's livery,
And wear our Branch of May!

A branch for all the people's friends
Who solemn conclave keep
For the land's happiness;—whose ends
Are neither dark nor deep
'Gainst England's welfare—but who wear
Hearts open as the day,
And pure and stainless as the leaves
That gem our Branch of May!

One for the Church's holy fane,
Where pious feet have trod,
All Nature's flow'rs—the pure and plain—
Are sweet to Nature's God!
Their fragrance—like the breath of prayer—
May never waste away,
But breathe to Heav'n its incense rare
E'en from a Branch of May!

A Branch of May for farming men,
For looming-men, and mine,
To make the cotter's household gay,
The weaver's shuttle shine!
The dark coal-digger smile upon
His black and weary way,
And bless the perfumed glimpse of light
That gilds a Branch of May!

A Branch of May for prisoned homes,
Within gloom cities pent;
To call back guilt—to fresher thoughts
Ere, harden'd, life was spent—
To show sweet contrast to all crime!
The innocence and Day
Which shine in Virtue's soul as pure
As on a Branch of May!

A Branch of May for pauper things,
The sorrowful of Earth;
Poor life-birds, with the shatter'd wings,
Who never sing of mirth!
Yet, up to Memory's Heaven of youth,
May soar with brighter lay,
If we bring back their happiness
Upon a Branch of May!

A Branch of May for all good hearts
Within this glorious realm;
Would that fond Nature's flood of Love
The land might overwhelm!
Till, 'neath Heaven's Rainbow-Arch, a dove
Should wing its stainless way,
Rest on the Ark of Happiness
And wave a Branch of May!

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

The third concert of the season took place last Monday evening at the Hanover-square Rooms, and was most brilliantly attended.

Before we enter upon any critical remarks upon the performance of the evening we feel it necessary to advert to a circumstance which caused a considerable sensation in the room, namely, the appearance of Mr. Lucas, before the concert commenced, who informed the audience that Sir Henry Bishop was unable to perform the task of conductor, on account of sudden "indisposition," (murmurs and whispers partout) and that at the request of his colleagues, he (Mr. Lucas) would, with the approbation of the assembly, undertake it with the disadvantage of not having had a rehearsal. This proposition was received with loud acclamation, and bore testimony that Sir Henry's absence was not much lamented. Now, what is the meaning of all this? There are more kinds than one of "indisposition," we know, but under which of them Sir Henry labours at present it is hard to say. The society misnomed "Philharmonic," it is well known, has been for years a victim, as a body, to the envy and petty jealousies of individuals. This disease has gradually increased to such a degree that there is nothing but anarchy and confusion, noisy debate and uproar at their meetings. The pleasant task of making a happy selection from the repertoire of the whole musical world engenders a thousand squabbles, and when at the eleventh hour a selection is made, nobody is satisfied—each thinks there has been some particular, invidious shaft levelled against himself, because his name does not appear in the group Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, or, perhaps, surmounting them all. Never was there a society which so unwearingly seeks its own destruction. It is true that Sir Henry Bishop is not the most spirited conductor in the world—he is all too smooth—there are no bursts of enthusiasm or poetical fire in him; and this having been spoken of pretty freely about, may probably have caused his sudden "indisposition." As it was, Mr. Lucas was more than a worthy locum tenens. But now for the Concert itself. Mozart's superb "Symphony in D. (Op. 87.)" was very splendidly performed; but being almost a stranger to this audience, their ears were not fully awake to its vast contrapuntal beauties. Mrs. Anderson's performance of the "Queen of all Concertos" was perfection, particularly in the slow movement. Fesca's unmeaning overture was quite an insult upon modern refined taste; it has noise enough about it, but contains no more brains than a humming-top.

In Part II., came on "The Pastorale Symphony," one of Music's happiest or most inspired poems. It was, with some trifling defects on the part of the wind instruments, most charmingly played. Mozart's "Quartetto (No. 2, Op. 18)," was most deliciously performed—Blagrove was never more felicitous. His pure tone and elegant style were never more happily combined. Weber's sparkling Overture to "Oberon" concluded a most brilliant Concert. Of the vocalists we cannot at all enter into criticism—they sang as they always do, with perfection; particularly Miss Birch, in Spohr's magnificent and difficult air from "Faust."

We hope to hear the next without any "indisposition" of any kind upon anybody's part!

ANCIENT CONCERTS.

The third concert of the season took place on Wednesday evening, under the direction of his Grace The Archbishop of York.

There is as much art and delicate taste required in the grouping of a musical bouquet, as were exhibited by Glycera, that celebrated flower-girl of antiquity, in the construction and variety of her garlands. To allow nothing to preponderate, but a beautiful harmony to pervade the whole, is the desideratum, and this was quite manifest in the selection made by his Grace on Wednesday. There were no heavy dark masses falling thick upon each other, without a ray of sunshine through the gloom—no! the programme was a well painted tableau, and although abounding with effective lights and shadows, there was nothing overflaring or dingy-dark to destroy the general chiaro oscuro. Moreover, there was not too much of it—a most rare virtue now-a-days in programmes.

The concert commenced with a selection from the divine Creation, the solo parts being most admirably sung by Messrs. Machin, Staudigl, and Miss Birch, particularly the latter, who, in "The Marvellous Work," it may be said, was truly marvellous, her pure and brilliant voice floating above the chorus "like a pois'd lark's high fixed in air." Next came the mournful Brambilla, with her love-lorn melody. She was encored in Beethoven's divine aria. The hymn, "Alla Trinita," was merely quaint. Caradori's performance of "Angel's ever bright," was pure vocalism, mixed with a spiritual devotion which we have rarely heard but from the fair cantatrice herself. Himmel's "Motet" is very solemn and imposing; the great music of this musician is at length becoming en vogue. It is full of sublime imaginations, coupled with delicate subtleties. "Let the Bright Seraphim," by Miss Birch, was a meteor of song; her delivery of the passage, "Their loud uplifted angel trumpets blow," was astounding, and put Harper to all his might and skill to keep pace with it. "Himmel's Prayer" was finely and solemnly given by Staudigl, and the first part terminated with Beethoven's Chorus, "Gloria in Excelsis," which was powerfully and effectively performed.

The second part opened with an overture, said to be to Zaire, by Winter; not the one we have been accustomed to hear, but one we should never care to hear again. Then followed Haydn's National Hymn, of which nothing new can be said. In Mozart's Aria "In dissen," &c., Herr Staudigl sang with his usual vigour and effect, but the concert-room is not calculated to develop all his magnificent powers. Madame Caradori in Paisiello's charming Aria, was everything to be wished for, and Mr. Williams's obligato was equally beautiful Cherubini's Terzetto from Faniska, was splendidly executed by Miss Birch, Mdlle. Brambilla, and Herr Staudigl—as were also the chorus and solo "Non Sdigare," of Gluck. Mdlle. Brambilla, in Zingarelli's charming Aria "Ombra adorata," evoked some reminiscenses of her Mistress, Pasta. The march from "Henri Quatre," seemed to be an interpolation. The duet "La Dove prende," was sung to perfection by Madame Caradori and Herr Staudigl. But then—ay what then?

"What Giant's shadows coming down the hill, Changing to pigmies other men's proportions!"

The mighty Handel!

The fine taste of his Grace, the noble director, was never more apparent than in placing this almost supernatural work at the conclusion of the performance; knowing well it would have killed every thing else by contrast. Altogether, this was a most delightful concert. By the way, Sir Henry Bishop's "indisposition," must have been very slight on Monday evening! The next concert will be on the 14th instant, under the direction of Lord Howe.

That favourite opera with the English public, "Don Giovanni," is to be performed for the first time this season, at her Majesty's Theatre, next Thursday. The caste of this opera, always remarkable for the large portion of talent it includes, will on this occasion be surpassing; Donna Anna, as formerly, Madame Grisi; Zerlina, Madame Castellan; and Donna Elvira, Madame Rita Borio. The other parts respectively taken by Mario, Fornasari, and Lablache. Perfection to the very smallest details is ensured; for the Commendatore, no longer an insignificant part, will be enacted by Signor Botelli, who made so successful a début in Ernani, and who has consented to utter forth the sepulchral tones of Don Juan's murdered victim. The novelties of the ballet crowd so numerously upon us, that we have not space to mention them. The names alone, however, are sufficient to ensure a great treat, for we have Cerito and St. Leon, Lucile Grahn and Perrot, La Nena, and the Danseuses Viennoises!

THE THEATRES.

DRURY LANE.

There is no young lady on the stage more respected, both in public and private life, than Miss Rainforth; and the very full attendance at this house, on Tuesday evening, on the occasion of her benefit, was a gratifying proof of the estimation in which she is held. The opera chosen for the occasion was "Fidelio," the fair beneficiaire appearing, for the first time, in the character formerly so admirably played by poor Malibran. Miss Rainforth's performance left nothing to be desired; she sang the whole of the difficult music with care and precision, and her conception of the part altogether was excellent. Staudigl was the Don Pizarro, for the first time, we believe, in England. His magnificent voice came out to great advantage, and drew forth the most enthusiastic applause from the audience. Mr. Harrison sung better than we remember to have heard him for some time; indeed, the performance of the opera reflected the greatest credit upon all concerned in its representation, although the chorus might have been a little better trained. At the conclusion Miss Rainforth was loudly called for, and cheered by the audience. A miscellaneous concert followed, which was supported by the principal artistes, both vocal and instrumental. Miss M. B. Hawes was encored in "Ere Infancy," from Mehul's Joseph, and the same compliment was paid to Miss Dolby, in "Araby, dear Araby," and Miss Steele in "Beautiful Venice," although, as respects the latter, in a somewhat stormy manner. Mr. John Parry sung a capital new song written by a gentleman named Powell, called "Matrimony," which convulsed the house with laughter; it is one of the best things he has done Of course he was encored, when he gave Mr. Albert Smith's "Polka Explained," with equal effect. A divertissement and a farce brought to a close the programme of a very attractive evening's entertainment.

HAYMARKET.

One of the most brilliant successes that it has been our task, for some time past, to record, was achieved at this theatre, on Saturday evening last, when Mr. Jerrold's comedy of "Time Works Wonders" was produced. At length a five act comedy has been brought out which none can carp at. The previous fault with Mr. Jerrold's pieces under this category, has been lack of interest in the story, and want of heart in the characters. Following the school of Congreve, he trusted mainly to a string of smart repartees, and ceaseless flashes of wit and epigram, for carrying his play through. There was little display of character or natural feeling to interest; no one of the dramatis personæ that might be spoken of hereafter as the type of a class. They were all simply persons sent on to say clever things, and try and wound each other's feelings; until, admirable as their bon-mots were, they at length produced the same unpleasant feeling which arises from the continuous perusal of a jest-book. And there were bitter sneers at social conventionalities, which, although offering to a clever writer capital subjects for splenetic satire, are still good in their way for preserving the proper balance of society. Hence, these witticisms grated on the ear: an audience admired the tact, but lamented the spirit that had produced them. There is nothing of this in "Time Works Wonders." The dialogue is just as brilliant, but it is natural and kindly. An interest of no ordinary kind is created respecting the fortunes of the characters; and their hearts are all well placed.

The play commences at a country inn, where Felix Goldthumb (Mr. Charles Mathews) and Professor Truffles (Mr. Strickland), a learned "Doo," are partaking of what they can get, when a carriage drives up to the door, containing Clarence Norman (Mr. H. Holl), who has carried off Florentine (Miss Fortescue), a pretty baker's daughter, from school, accompanied by her friend, Bessy Tulip (Madame Vestris). From want of horses they are overtaken by their governess, Miss Tucker (Mrs. Glover), Mr. Goldthumb, a worthy trunk-maker (Mr. W. Farren), and Olive, a friend of Florentine's father (Mr. Tilbury). Clarence and Felix go to seek for horses; the latter, who knows Florentine, having declared, in a fine manly way, that if young Norman deceives her he will have to answer for it to himself (Felix). Whilst they are gone, Olive sees Florentine, and, by reasoning with her in the following excellent manner, prevails upon her to return:—

Olive. Towards him you say you love. I will suppose you wedded: you, a poor man's child—a girl of homely thoughts and homely teaching—brought by your husband to his noble friends. They look upon you as the blot upon their name—the vulgar, bold intruder on their rank and wealth—the "baker's daughter," whose pretty, fatal face, has snared a stripling in his schoolboy days. A few years pass—a very few: your husband feels his friends are just; and with them owns his boyish match a folly and a shame. What hope would then be yours?

Floren. To die.

Olive. Or say, in silence he endures his fate? Is such a marriage wedlock? No! it is but decent resignation at the best.

Floren. But I love him; and may not love do all things?

Olive. Florentine, when minds are not in unison, the words of love itself are but the rattling of the chain that tells the victim it is bound. Come.

Floren. I cannot—will not; no, will not. Clarence!

Olive. Is this your promise?

Floren. Do not ask it: I cannot, will not leave him. I will die first. Let his fine friends hate me, he will love me still. I know I am not taught like him—am ignorant of all his wife should know; but I will labour, study—for love, I'm sure, can do it—till I make his mind almost my own. No, Sir; come what may, I will not leave him.

Olive. Then I'll tell you what will come—ruin, beggary.

Floren. To Clarence?

Olive. To Clarence Norman. Hear me. He has been prodigal, extravagant—[illegible] him. Once let Clarence call you wife, and—this I know—his [illegible] leaves him to the mercy of the world; and that, I tell you, is hopeless beggary.

Floren. Is this truth? Forgive me.

Olive. Answer; shall I leave you?

Floren. No. The thoughts you make me think, make me better—older: take [illegible] from girlhood—show me my folly, more, my selfishness. I will go home with [illegible] what wicked thing should I be so to destroy him.

Olive. Good, brave girl!

The broken-hearted girl allows herself to be led away, leaving to Clarence his picture; and so ends the first act.

Five years are supposed to elapse before the curtain again rises—a lapse of time which the management appeared anxious, on the first night, to realise, as far as the impatience of the audience would permit; and at the beginning of Act Two, we find Bantam (Mr. Buckstone) ringing at the lodge gate of Sir Gilbert Norman (Mr. Stuart), in the hope of getting paid for some fighting cocks, furnished to his nephew, Clarence, at college. He here encounters Professor Truffles, who, somehow or another, is in full feather; and Bantam gets him to write a character for himself, that he may apply for the situation of valet, vacant at Mr. Goldthumb's, who has retired from business to Parsnip Hall. His previous acquaintance with the Professor appears to have been too intimate for him to refuse, and he is ultimately installed. Meanwhile Florentine's father has died, and the pretty girl has come to live at a cottage adjoining Sir Gilbert's mansion, with Miss Tucker for a companion and chaperon. Sir Gilbert has seen Florentine, and falls desperately in love with her; and on the day of Clarence's return from Italy, where he has been for five years, a thunder storm drives Florentine, who is sketching in the park, into his uncle's mansion. She recognizes Clarence, and immediately faints, supported by Sir Gilbert; and on this situation the drop falls.

The remaining three acts pass, without change of scene, in Florentine's cottage ornée, where Bessy Tulip, who has married Felix Goldthumb, returns from India; and they are planning how they shall procure the forgiveness of the old man, who, being a trunk-maker, has imbibed a strange jumble of notions from the literary linings of his stock in trade; and desirous of emulating Brutus, brings his son up, as he conceives, on a Roman model. Sir Gilbert, struck with Florentine, pays a visit to her, and a capital scene ensues between Miss Tucker and himself—the lady being anxious to catch him for her former pupil. Florentine and Clarence meet; they are still deeply attached to one another, but too proud, on either side, to confess it. A forced, artificial conversation passes between them, and they part carelessly; and soon afterwards Florentine, learning that Clarence is engaged to some other lady, listens to the suit of Sir Gilbert, and, in a moment of pique, gives him her hand. But subsequently, in a very impressive scene, she implores Sir Gilbert to release her from her promise, by confessing that her heart is still another's—that she mistook vanity for love, and confounded worldly triumph with affection. Sir Gilbert leaves her, telling her that she is free—that he sought a wife and not a victim. Florentine is about to depart, when she once more encounters Clarence. The nephew has been having an interview with the uncle, whom he has accused of ruining his happiness by forbidding him in early life to marry "the baker's daughter." Sir Gilbert is touched by his eloquence and tells him to marry her. He now throws himself at Florentine's feet, and is accepted. Old Goldthumb being worked upon by a conspired dream-story forgives Felix for marrying Bessy; Professor Truffles, who is an old flame of Miss Tucker's, proposes to her and is accepted, and all are made happy, whilst the old trunkmaker says "that however bitter the draught may be—however heavy the load—let's swallow it with patience—let's bear it with a smile—hopeful in the belief that however dark the present, TIME WORKS WONDERS."

This is an outline of the plot of this charming play: to give its beauties in detail would be almost to reprint it. A few words, however, about the acting; and first and foremost we give the highest praise to Miss Fortescue. The part she played was, as we stated last week, originally intended for Mrs. Nisbett; but by her gentle and sweet interpretation of the amiable character, she left us nothing to desire, unless it had been a little more physical energy to carry out her very clever conceptions. We had formed a high opinion of this young lady's pourtrayal of pathos and feeling, from her acting in "The Momentous Question," and "The Chimes," at the Lyceum and Adelphi Theatres, some months back; but since Saturday she has taken a far higher position, and which she promises even still to improve upon. Her hysterical laughter, ending in tears, was admirably true to nature. Mrs. Glover, as Miss Tucker, was what only Mrs. Glover can be—we need say no more; and Madame Vestris threw great spirit into the part of Bessy Tulip; would we could prevent Time from laying his ruthless hand upon her. Mrs. W. Clifford and Mrs. Humby had little to do, but they played with care and judgment. Certainly Mr. Strickland's Professor Truffles was the best sustained of the male characters, and stood out from the play capitally. Mr. Farren was in some measure imperfect, and we had occasionally a little difficulty in catching what he said. He, however, played with his usual ability. Mr. Stuart was impressive and dignified as Sir Gilbert; and Mr. H. Holl was much applauded for his judicious acting in the fifth act, in the interview with his uncle. We can conscientiously speak in warm commendation of all the others.

The curtain fell amidst a roar of applause, from a house literally crowded to the ceiling—the presence of an unusual number of literary men showing the interest they took in this production of their brother author, and the estimation in which his talents were held. All the principals reappeared, to receive the congratulations of the audience; and upon a loud call for the author being raised, Mr. Jerrold appeared, and bowed from a private box. The comedy will have a long and brilliant career. Its success has been great and legitimate—another gratifying proof of Mr. Webster's honourable exertions in the cause of the drama. The publication of the piece, in a neat form, and at a moderate price, is to be commended.

LYCEUM.

A neat adaptation af a French vaudeville, called, if we mistake not, "Une Bonne Réputation," was produced at this house, at the end of the week, under the title of "A Good Name," and from the very favourable manner in which it was received, has acquired its apellation. It is from the pen of Mr. Stoquelar, and affords Mr. F. Mathews a famous opportunity for the display of his excellent acting. The "apropos bagatelle" of Polkamania, which was written by the same gentleman, has been revived, and appears to have lost none of its effect, to judge from the laughter of the audience. The part originally sustained by Miss Woolgar is neatly acted by Miss Farebrother. We regret to say that Mrs. Keeley has been suffering from a severe bronchial affection, which compelled her, for a few nights, to omit the songs in Whittington, except the lightest concerted pieces.

A very pleasant two-act piece, from the pen of Mr. Shirley Brookes, was brought out on Thursday evening, and met with very deserved success. It is called "Our New Governess," and was an admirable vehicle, not only for some unusually smart dialogue and repartee, but for some very clever acting, by Mr. and Mrs. Keeley, Mr. Wigan, and Mr. F. Mathews. We have seldom seen a play go with more unflagging merriment from beginning to end. A scene in which Mrs. Keeley, as The New Governess, submits her pupils to the examination of a friend of the family, brought down shouts of laughter. The young ladies over whom she presides also contributed to the general effect of the piece: one of them—a romp, with a great wish for a handsome husband—was played very naturally by Miss Howard and became quite a prominent character. At the conclusion of the piece, The New Governess, having lost her situation, appealed to her friends for a character; and this was immediately ratified by the audience with their own hands. The play was capitally put upon the stage—especially an archery fête in the second act: and was announced for repetition every evening amidst general applause.

ST. JAMES'S

M. Raven and Mademoiselle Plessy, continue to attract good houses: and on Tuesday, a very clever gentleman made his début, who, it appears, is engaged to give a series of soirées mysterieuses; or performances in legerdemain. This is M. Philippe from the Theatre Bonne Nouvelle, on the boulevard of the same name at Paris. The majority of his tricks were similar to those performed by Herr Dobler, but he is by no means inferior to that clever 'wizard' in neatness, or dexterity. We confess to being pleased at seeing good conjuring, and allowing our senses to be deceived; and some of M. Phillippe's transformations beat all conjecture. We may especially notice the performance of a figure, who rises from the box, and goes through various actions at command, being apparently insulated. He varied Herr Dobler's celebrated bouquet distribution, by showering down an immense quantity of little flags, apparently from nowhere, upon the audience.

PRINCESS'.

A five-act play, written by Mr. Kenney, was produced at this house on Thursday evening, and with complete success. It is called "Infatuation," the story turning upon the violent love entertained by the Duchess de Bracciano (Miss Cushman) for Hermain Lindorff (Mr. Leigh Murray). The lady is, however, married to the Duke de Bracciano (Mr. H. Wallack), who obtains for her a situation at court, that she may watch the Empress Maria Louisa, for political purposes. The Duchess, however, refuses to be made a spy, and, perceiving this intrigue of her husband, insists on being divorced. This the Duke objects to, until he is compelled to give his consent, through fear of having the fact known that, during the revolution, he caused the father of the Duchess to be executed—the secret remaining at present with himself and Pierre Laroche (Mr. Wallack). The divorce pronounced, the Duchess flies to put herself under the protection of Hermain, when she finds that he is every way unworthy of her, having acted with extreme duplicity upon perfectly interested motives. This is revealed to her by Laroche, and, despising her worthless lover, she marries her cousin, Julien St. Ange (Mr. ield).

The greatest care is observable in the writing throughout the piece: and the historical action, passing at the period of the Empire, is conducted with minute attention to veracity, both as respects the time and position of the various parties. Of the acting generally we can speak in terms of unqualified commendation. Miss Cushman played to perfection: each time we see this talented actress we are more impressed with her excellence. In the third act, especially, her interpretation of the part was most powerful and impressive. Mr. Wallack was forcible as Laroche; and Messrs. Granby, H. Wallack, and Walter Lacy, contributed to the success of the piece by their excellent acting. The applause at the fall of the curtain was considerable, and Miss Cushman was loudly called for, when she appeared to receive a shower of bouquets, aimed at her from the different boxes. Mr. Wallack subsequently announced "Infatuation" for repetition, amidst renewed cheering. The house was very full: indeed it appears that the drama has entirely usurped the place of the operas formerly represented here.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Omne tulit punctum, qui miscuit utile dulci.

During the current week there were two occasions of sporting account; one was the great Spring Meeting at Newmarket; the other, the match for the Belvidere Cup, between vessels of the Royal Thames Yacht Club, on their native element, the Thames. Elsewhere, the chief feature of popular interest in the former will be found set forth as it "moved and had its being;" the latter shall now be similarly dealt with. We stand on the threshold of the season of National Sports which have general reference: the curtain is about to draw up for the performance, with nature for a stage, and men of all conditions for the players. It will not therefore be out of time or place to offer a few practical observations on the social condition and tendency of our national games and pastimes, in relation to their influence upon the resources and the character of the country.

The sports of Racing and Yachting are peculiarly British. Our turf has a breed of horses without its equal in the world; and pleasure-sailing, if it did not make Britannia the Queen of the Waves, promises to keep her so. There are those who contend that we are not indebted to the turf for the possession of our renowned race of horses; others, who insist that the evil it does more than balances the good. It is impossible to demonstrate the fallacy of the first portion of this argument; we can only test it by analogy. The purest stream of the Desert blood might have found its way here, had the Percy never sent to seek and secure it in its far wildnesses—the canvas of Italy might have breathed, had Venice never brought forth her Merchant Princes to find and foster genius. But it was the Northumberland family that gave to our steed the best blood of Arabia; it was the Medici that gave to art those glorious creations which insure its immortality. The second admits of an answer as sure as it is satisfactory. The objectionable adherents of racing are all but annihilated: their "days are dwindled to the shortest span." The profession of the ring is (forgive the pun) on its last "legs:" we shall have no more palaces built of ruined prospects, and cemented by the tears of widowed hearts and hopes. The example set by the Government in the suppression of places devoted to play at race-courses promises to be followed by the abandonment of the ring, by every one having claim to character and condition. Betting, as a business, is all but at an end: gambling, as a recreation, has been, most wisely, abolished. By this reasoning we seek to turn aside prejudice, and win popularity for the national sport of horse-racing; because we hold that it is as good to be merry as wise; and, that it is as necessary for the moral as the physical health of a community, that opportunities be afforded for the amalgamation of all its elements in scenes of good-fellowship.

The consequence of the taste for yachting was, that more than the current remuneration was afforded for excellence in marine architecture. This brought greater talent to bear upon that portion of the geometry of motion, than had previously been directed to it. For proof of this, it is only necessary to point to the yards of the principal yacht builders—Joseph White's, of Cowes, for instance, where the Admiralty have found it convenient to go for their clippers. What health and hilarity belong to the pastime of rowing; what a specific for all the ills that flesh (especially within the bills of mortality) is kin to—is the oar.

"The same Roman arm
That rose victorious o'er the conquered earth
First learned, while tender, to subdue the wave."

Cricket—are not its balls the true "pills to purge melancholy?"—its fragrant carpet more worthy the foot of youth and boon spirits than all the chalked floors of May Fair? True—we had almost forgot—there are those to whom lusty limbs are denied; who may not take their pleasure in robust exercises; but for these is there not the gentle art? Sweet May, with her babbling brooks, and scented valleys, and painted populace, beckons the angler abroad—let him not refuse the call. What if the trout defy his cunning; he is certain to fill his lungs with sweet air, though he puts never a fin into his basket. And now say, reader, is not the rational disciple of our National Sports one who mingles the utile dulci?

LATEST BETTING AT NEWMARKET.

Below, we give the prices of the favourites now in force for coming events, and the nominal prices of those that, although not fancied at present, may be supposed to retain their positions. At the time our list was made up (Thursday morning), the horses most in request for the Cup, were Cataract, Semiseria, The Era, Sorella, Queen of Tyne, Counsellor, and the Irish lot; Fitzallen, backed on Wednesday afternoon at 7 to 1, was on the decline; his nominator is said to be so ill, as to make it doubtful that he will live the week out; should he die before the race, the horse will be disqualified, and bets will be off. The Derby betting has been very limited; and, unless Idas should go amiss, or turn roarer (the touts declare that he is so at "this writing"), will continue to the end of the chapter. Very little is said about John Day's horses, Mentor, Newsmonger, and Kedger, and nothing at all encouraging to his backers about Clear-the-Way. The Oaks promises to be a tolerable betting race.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Although the arrivals of English wheat for our market continue on a moderate scale, the supplies of that article offering to-day were quite equal to meet the wants of the dealers—the demand being in a sluggish state, at unaltered currencies. Holders of foreign wheat were again firm, but we have very few transactions to report. Bonded grain almost nominal. Barley and malt met a very heavy inquiry, at barely previous rates. The supply of Irish oats being on the increase, the oat trade was inactive, but beans and peas were quite as dear.

ARRIVALS.—English wheat, 4700; barley, 620; oats, 1740 quarters. Irish: wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 10,660 quarters. Foreign: wheat, 510; barley, 3510; oats, 1670 quarters. Flour, 4660 sacks; malt, 5430 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 46s to 48s; ditto, white, 46s to 54s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s to 52s; ditto, white, 52s to 57s; rye, 30s to 36s; grinding barley, 27s to 30s; distillings, 26s to 30s; malting ditto, 33s to 35s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 58s to 63s; brown ditto, 56s to 60s; Kingston and Ware, 59s to 60s; Chevalier, 65s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s, potatoe ditto, 23s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 21s; ditto, white, 21s to 22s; tick beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 40s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 35s to 36s; white, 33s to 35s; boilers, 36s to 38s, per quarter. Town made flour, 42s to —; Suffolk, Stockton, and Yorkshire, 33s to 35s, per 28 lb. Foreign.—Fine wheat, —s to —; Dantzig, red, 38s to 42s; white, 50s to 54s. In Bond.—Barley, 20s to 24s; oats, 17s to 18s; ditto, feed, 16s to 17s; beans, 24s to 29s; peas, 28s to 32s, per quarter. Flour, American, 19s to —; Baltic, 18s to —, per barrel.

The Seed Market.—With the exception of canary selling at a trifle more money, the seed trade has ruled dull, at unaltered quotations. Linseed English, sowing, 52s to 58s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 45s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 44s. Hempseed 35s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 12s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 8s to 12s; white ditto, 12s to 14s. Tares, 6s 6d to 7s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, £24 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 to £11 5s; ditto foreign, £7 7s to £7 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £6 per ton. Canary, 46s to 52s per quarter. English Clover seed, red, 45s to 50s: extra, 52s to 55s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, up to 68s. Foreign red, 40s to 43s; extra, 50s; white, 60s to 62s; extra, 75s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6½d, per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 45s 11d; barley, 31s 6d; oats, 20s 11d; rye, 30s 2d; beans, 33s 9d; peas, 36s 1d.

Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 46s 0d; barley, 32s 2d; oats, 21s 3d; rye, 30s 5d; beans, 35s 1d; peas, 35s 9d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 20s; barley, 6s; oats, 6s; rye, 10s 6d; beans, 7s 6d; peas, 7s 6d.

Tea.—The demand for all kinds of tea, since our last, has been somewhat inactive, yet prices are supported. Low congou is selling at 8½d to 9d; sound ditto, 9½d to 9¾d; and low twankay, 1s 1½d to 1s 2¼d per lb, cash. The imports are small, yet the stock is seasonably extensive.

Sugar.—The best qualities of West India sugar have been in fair request at full prices, but other kinds, as well as Bengal, have sold on easier terms. The refined market is active, at 67s to 68s for brown, and 69s for standard lumps.

Coffee.—Ceylon parcels have met a fair demand, at 44s to 45s for good ordinary. West India and other kinds are a slow inquiry, at late rates.

Rice.—There is not much business doing in this article, yet the quotations rule about stationary.

Fruit.—Currants are in better request, at 46s to 50s per cwt. Valencia raisins move off steadily, at 42s to 44s per cwt.

Oils.—We have only a moderate business doing in this market, yet the quotations are supported.

Tallow.—Russian is still a dull inquiry, on somewhat easier terms. P. Y. C., of fine quality, is held at 38s per cwt. Town tallow—which is not very plentiful—moves off at 38s to 39s per cwt.

Provisions.—Owing to the large arrivals, foreign butter has met a dull inquiry since our last, at a further decline in the quotations of from 1s to 2s per cwt., the highest rates not exceeding 88s to 90s. In Irish butter, so little is doing that the rates are almost nominal. The stock of bacon is heavy, yet the best parcels are in request, at full prices. Prime sizeable Waterford landed, is selling at 42s to 45s; and Limerick, 41s to 43s per cwt. Irish lard is in request, at an improvement of 1s per cwt. Other kinds of provisions support previous quotations.

Hay and Straw.—Coarse meadow hay, £3 12s to £4 8s; useful ditto, £4 10s to £5 5s; fine upland ditto, £5 10s to £6 16s; clover hay, £4 10s to £6 6s; oat straw, £1 18s to £2; wheat straw, £2 1s to £2 3s; per load.

Wool.—About 10,000 bales of wool, chiefly Colonial, will be submitted to public competition about the middle of the present month. Privately, very little is doing, yet the prices are mostly supported.

Potatoes.—The arrivals of potatoes continuing larger, the demand for them is heavy, at prices varying from 35s to 80s per ton.

Hops (Friday).—During the whole of the present week, notwithstanding unfavourable accounts have reached us respecting the appearance of the growing bine, we have had very little inquiry for hops, and prices are with difficulty supported. Sussex pockets, £7 0s to £8 13s; Wealds, £7 0s to £8 15s; Mid Kents, £9 9s to £11 12s; East Kent, £9 10s to £12 0s; Choice ditto, £12 0s to £13 0s; Mid Kent bags, £8 0s to £12 0s; East Kent ditto, £8 5s to £12 8s.

Coals (Friday).—Hollywell Main, 16s 6d; Townley, 15s; Stewarts', 20s; Hetton, 19s 9d; Adelaide, 19s 6d; Evenwood, 16s; Tees, 19s 6d, per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Our market to-day was but moderately supplied with beasts, the demand for which was tolerably steady, at fully Monday's quotations. We had on sale 40 oxen and cows from Rotterdam, and 200 beasts from Scotland. The mutton trade was very brisk, at an advance in the currencies of quite 4d per 8lb, and a clearance was speedily effected. Lambs—120 of which were received from the Isle of Wight—were in active request, at 4d per 8lb. more money. The same may be said of calves, but in pigs very little was doing. Milch cows sold at from £16 to £19 10s each.

Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 4d to 2s 8d; second quality ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 10d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; second quality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 10d; prime coarse woolled sheep, 4s 0d to 4s 4d; prime Southdowns ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s 2d; prime small ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 10d; large hogs, 3s 0d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 4d. Suckling calves, 18s 0d to 30s 0d; and quarter old store pigs, 16s 0d to 20s 0d each. Beasts, 670; cows, 140; sheep and lambs, 7170; calves, 181; pigs, 298.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—We had a steady demand to-day on the following terms: —Per 8lbs. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 0d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 4d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 10d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 5s 0d to 6s 6d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The effect of the American news has been to cause a decline in the English Securities, which remain heavy. Large sales continue to be made for the fall, upon the supposition that the position of affairs in Texas rather increases in complexity, instead of approaching a solution. The position of the French Ministry, and the indisposition of Guizot at this important juncture, is regarded as very unfortunate for the maintenence of the entente cordiale between this country and France. Consols have receded to 98⅜ for Money, and 99 for Time, these being the last quotations. Exchequer Bills are a shade worse, closing at 57 to 59; Bank Stock is 209 to 210; India Stock, 276 to 278; Three per Cent. Reduced, 97⅞ to ⅜; Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. 100⅜ to ⅞; Long Annuities, 11⅜; India Bonds, 70 to 72.

The only attraction worthy of record in the Foreign Market has been a slight decline in Mexican, in consequence of the departure from New York of the Mexican Minister. Its final quotation is 38⅛ to ⅜. Spanish Five per Cents. have quoted during the week 30⅜ to ⅝. The Three per Cents. are 40⅜ to 41. Portuguese maintains its quotations. The Portuguese Government have issued a decree for the conversion of the Portuguese Bonds of 1841 into a permanent Four per Cent. Stock. This satisfactorily accounts for the recent sudden rise of 10 per cent in the quotations of these securities. The last price is 67 to 68. Columbian is 15⅝ to ¾. Brazilian, 88 to 89. Belgian, 101 to ½. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents. 63⅛ to ⅜. Four per Cent. (Certificates), 99½ to ¾.

The Railway Market has been comparatively dull during the week, the principal business having been the arrangement of the Account. Although the amount of transactions have not been so large as heretofore, money fetched high prices as the closing of Account advanced. The Dublin and Galway, and Direct Northern, have suffered the greatest depreciation, from the want of compliance with the standing orders having caused sales. London and York, and Cambridge and Lincoln, were the favourite shares as the week advanced; the market, however, looked generally better after the conclusion of the settlement. The first Dutch line introduced into the market is the Over Ysel Railway, which quotes 1 pm. for coming out. Prices at closing are:—Aberdeen, 4⅜; Armagh, Coleraine, and Portrush, 2¾; Birmingham and Gloucester, 136; Birmingham and Oxford, 4½; Caledonian, 12⅜; Cambridge and Lincoln, 9; Churnet Valley, 7½; Cornwall, 2; Coventry, Bedworth, &c., 4½; Direct Northern, 3⅜; Dublin and Belfast Junction, 11½; Dublin and Galway 3⅜; Eastern Counties, 20½; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 66; Ely and Bedford, 2¾; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 19; Great Western, 188; Guilford, Farnham, &c., 5⅜; Harwich, 1½; Birmingham, 237; Blackwall, 9½; Brighton, 63; Greenwich, 10⅜; South Western, 80; London and York, 5⅜; Lynn and Ely, 6¾; Manchester and Leeds, 138; Midland, 156¼; Newcastle and Berwick, 13¾; Newark and Sheffield, 5; North British, 17¾; North Kent, 5⅜; Norwich and Brandon, 7½; Rugby, 4⅜; Scottish Central, 7½; Scottish Midland, 3⅜; Shrewsbury, &c., 4½; South Devon, 28; Dover, 41½; Trent Valley, 18¾; Bordeaux and Toulouse, 2⅜; Boulogne and Amiens, 10; Great Northern of France (Lafitte's), 5¼; Ditto, Rosamel, 2⅜; Louvain and Jemappe, 4¼; Namur and Liége, 6¼; Orleans and Vierzon, 14⅜; Orleans and Bordeaux, 9¾; Paris and Lyons (Lafitte's), 2⅞; Paris and Orleans, 47½; Rouen and Havre, 30; Sambre and Meuse, 9⅜; Tours and Nantes, 3.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols receded yesterday to 99½, but ultimately closed at 98⅞. Railway Shares were rather better: Churnet Valley and North Kent advanced; Dovers were lower; Paris and Lyons Scrip slightly improved.

MAGNIFICENT METEOR SEEN IN NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

On Thursday, April 24th, 1845, a blue meteor, of a most unusual size and brilliancy, was seen near Highfield House, the seat of E. J. Lowe, Esq., in the above county. The weather had been for the five days prior to the 24th, hot, and almost cloudless; for the mean of clouds for that period only amounted to 2·4-10. The temperature had reached its greatest intensity of heat on the 24th at 4h. P.M., viz., 70·1°, at which time the hygrometer was 59·2°; the wind nearly calm and veering to E., and in the evening to S. The barometer had been gradually falling from the morning of the 21st; and at 6h. P.M. of the 24th a heavy thunder-storm passed over Highfield House from the S. In the morning, a faint solar halo was formed; and, in the evening, an arc of a solar Iris very sensibly prismatic was visible.

At 9h. 35m. the night, which was very dark, suddenly became light as day, and the objects near and distant were visible as plainly as in broad daylight: immediately, a magnificent Meteor, of a blue colour, was seen traversing the interval from the Zenith, through the stars 21, 30, 40, and 41, of the constellation of Leo Minor, and the stars 95, 96, χ, 59, τ, and 75, of the constellation of Leo Major, a distance of 30°, which it accomplished in little less than three seconds of time: it exploded very near the star ϕ, Leonis Majoris, and, after falling in small fragments of light for the space of 1°, became suddenly extinguished. Its apparent size was very nearly equal to the disc of the moon, and perfectly round in form; but its brilliancy very far surpassed that luminary, and its intensity could not possibly have been less than three times as light as our satellite. The track which the Meteor took, is traced out in the diagram; but no train of light was left behind it. It appeared of no considerable height in the air. There were no clouds very visible at the time the Meteor was seen; but a few cumuli appeared soon after, and the moon rose of a red colour.

Should any one have noticed this Meteor in a southerly direction from this locality, a comparison of remarks would prove both interesting and important, for the height of the Meteor above the surface of our earth might be ascertained.—From a Correspondent.

METEOR SEEN IN NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

PROPOSED VISIT OF HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT TO ST. PAUL'S.

Orders have been given for taking on an additional number of workmen to complete the work of cleaning down and beautifying the grand portico of St. Paul's Cathedral, facing Ludgate hill, so that it may be finished, and the scaffolding removed before the anniversary festival of the Sons of the Clergy, on Thursday next, the 8th inst. Her Majesty and Prince Albert have signified their intention to be present on the occasion. The masonry, besides being cleaned down, is undergoing the process of painting to preserve the stone work. The columns are in a forward state.

THE BUDE LIGHTS, TRAFALGAR-SQUARE.

The lanterns for the reception of the Bude Lights to illumine this fine area, exhibit certain novel and meritorious peculiarities of form and construction, which has induced us to engrave them for our columns. The lanterns, four in number, are of an octagonal shape, from the design of Mr. Barry, R.A., and manufactured by Messrs. Stevens and Son, of the Darlington Works, Southwark. They are to be placed on four large bronze pedestals; the height of the larger pair, from the base to the bottom of the lamp, is 3 feet 6 inches, and the diameter, 3 feet 8 inches; from the bottom to the top of the lamp, 3 feet 6 inches; diameter, 3 feet 1 inch. These are to be fixed on the massive granite pillars on the south-east and south-west angles of the square.

BUDE LIGHT, TRAFALGAR-SQUARE.

The two smaller ones are of the following dimensions:—height, 9 feet to the bottom of the lamp; diameter of square plinth at bottom, 3 feet, on which rests the octagon base, rising 2 feet. Diameter of the column, 13 inches, gradually tapering to 8 inches, with 2 bands at proportionate distances. These are destined for the balustrades opposite the National Gallery: the gun metal of which the whole is comprised, is $\frac{3}{8}$ of an inch thick. The lamps are to be glazed with flint glass of the substance of an inch, with a 2-inch cut bevel, worked parallel surfaces, and all highly polished. The refraction of light occasioned by these numerous varieties of surface, is likely to produce a very brilliant effect; and in the event of another lamp being added, as proposed, to be placed between the fountains, some very novel appearances may perhaps be obtained, especially if the focus of either of the prisms should fall on the jets of water.

ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAYS.—The Select Committee appointed to inquire into the merits of the Atmospheric Railway system, state in their report that they have made a full inquiry into the working of the railway between Kingstown and Dalkey, and the result of their investigations is, that the facts establish the mechanical efficiency of the atmospheric power to convey with regularity, speed, and security the traffic upon one section of pipe between two termini; and they are satisfied, by the evidence of Messrs. Brunel, Cubitt, and Vignoles, that there is no mechanical difficulty which will oppose the working of the same system upon a line of any length. The Committee unhesitatingly give their opinion that a single atmospheric line is superior to a double locomotive line, both in regularity and safety, inasmuch as it makes collisions impossible, except at crossing places, and excludes all the danger and irregularity arising from casualties to engines or their tenders. The Committee admit that experience can alone decide the ultimate result, but they think that there is ample evidence which would justify the adoption of an atmospheric line at the present time.

THE EARL AND COUNTESS OF WILTON'S PARTY.—The Earl and Countess of Wilton gave a princely entertainment, on Monday evening, at their mansion in Grosvenor square, when they were honoured with the company of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, and Prince George of Cambridge. The Royal prince received the cordial congratulations of the entire party on that Prince's return from Corfu. Covers were laid for twenty two at the banquet.

CAPT. TAYLER'S BREAKWATER, OFF BRIGHTON.

Our artist at Brighton has sketched the annexed representation of the experimental portion of Captain Tayler's Breakwater, consisting of three sections, moored off Hove, (one mile from Brighton,) at the distance of a mile and a quarter from the shore, and nearly parallel to it about East and West. It was placed there in December last, under Capt. Tayler's superintendence, in her Majesty's tug, Monkey, the three sections being arranged thus —— ——; and two men were stationed on it, to keep a light to warn vessels off. Although up to the time of our informant writing, (March 27) there had been several smart breezes since the Breakwater had been stationed, there had been nothing like the gales to which the Brighton coast is subject, to test the utility of the invention.

PARIS AND LONDON FASHIONS.

In Paris the fine weather has at length evolved all the latent resources of the Spring toilette. And rarely has it been more graceful, or more becoming; for, whilst every day the manufactures both of France and England increase in luxury and in beauty, and greater pains are bestowed on the materials and on the tissues, our belles have discovered at last the grand secret—that the most important point of all is to choose the costume which becomes them best. Fashion is no longer arbitrary; whilst requiring that the general character of dress should be the same, it does not now banish from its privileged haunts those who modify in their observance the forms of its laws.

We must commence by the most important part of the promenade dress—the light and tasteful bonnet, which sets off the charms of so many fair faces at the daily promenade of the Bois de Boulogne, or Champs Elysées. The favourite bonnets—till the season be sufficiently advanced for those of crape or lace—are made of fancy straw, or paille de riz. The trimming of these bonnets is, however, far more elaborate than last season, a ribbon simply crossed over the crown is no longer admissible: a bonnet that pretends to any degree of vogue or distinction must be trimmed in three or five shades, whether of ribbon or crêpe lisse; bows combining all these shades must ornament the crown of the bonnet, on which a paquerette, a pale narcissus, a currant branch, or bunch of grapes, is also indispensable; velvet ribbons are also still worn; and shaded feathers for occasions of more ceremony are in high favour.

FASHIONS FOR MAY.

The bonnet must also be lined with crêpe lisse, or silk, of the same colour as the ribbon; the lining, if the bonnet be of open straw, appearing through the interstices outside, produces a soft and pleasing effect. The form of bonnet as before mentioned varies to a certain degree with the taste of the wearer; a change, however, is perceptible in all those worn this spring, being more raised above the forehead than before. The most favourite form is the Pamela, which should be worn only with long and luxurious curls: this form of bonnet is then very graceful and becoming; it clears the forehead completely, is small, and short at the ears.

Silk redingotes, with embroidered revers or collars, are much worn for the promenades—embroidery in every form being in vogue. The cashmere still alternates in Paris with the silk mantelet, or the barége shawl, for the warmer and brighter days; and till the weather becomes more certain, no further novelties can be pronounced upon as of decided vogue. It is the same as regards dresses for the promenade, which are still of shot or shaded silk, no élégante daring as yet to venture forth in the coloured muslins or barége, which render the summer costume of such peculiar lightness and elegance. Pale colours, for morning or evening toilette are very little worn; one of the favourite colours is pink, of a shade approaching the cherry-colour. Strange to say, despite the revolutions announced some time past in toilette, flowers still hold on a capricious and uncertain vogue, but we hope that at least the reign of the multiplicity of little flowers is over. Nothing can tend more to impair that unity and simplicity, and that broad and flowing aspect which should always characterise the dress of a lady, however splendid in materials, than these injudicious and trifling additions.

But it is in London that the Spring fashions will come forth in all their brilliancy. The expected fêtes of her Gracious Majesty have already set the wit of all the marchandes des modes to invent and to bring from Paris all that will best grace these splendid entertainments. Dresses of rich silk, shot in the most brilliant colours, or in white, bordered in splendid embroidery of silk silver or gold. Ball dresses, with three skirts in three different shades, and each trimmed with fringe, of verdigris coloured crape, trimmed with silver blonde, or tulle illusion, with a mixed embroidery of gold and silver—Court trains of gold and silver stuffs, embroidered in bouquets—are some of the materials preparing for the brilliant réunions of her Majesty, and for those of her aristocratic lieges, who will not fail to follow her august example.

For the head-dress for young ladies, flowers in all forms and colours are still the reigning fashion; and every day a new description of wreath or bouquet appears. Those in leaves alone, however, seem to predominate; and nothing can be more simple or more tasteful in effect, especially as they are now made with unusual perfection. Fruits also of every description are much worn in the hair, and on the dress. Grapes, mulberries, currants, hazel-nut branches, in their natural colours, are all worn in the hair, and have a charming effect. Whilst such is the costume of the more youthful votaries of fashion, Petits Bords and urbans are the evening head-dress of married ladies; little caps, very short at the ears, and trimmed with small flowers, or Turkish roses, are also much worn.

The foot, so characteristic of high-born beauty, is not neglected. Shoes, brodequins, and pantoufles, have always the square Melnotte form; but the variety of tissue, colour, and embellishment, is immense, and on these depend the display of real beauty, as well as the concealment of defects.

To give as complete a description as possible of the fashions of the moment, all souvenirs of Paris have been blended with the anticipations of London Fashion has at length crossed over the Channel; and our future communications on this all-fascinating topic to our fair readers, will take their data from what passes in the aristocratic circles of the English metropolis.

MADAME CASTELLAN.

HUGHES'S ELEPHANT CARRIAGE.

Mr. Hughes, a worthy successor of Van Amburgh, is now on what may be termed a tour of exhibition through the country, with what he terms his "Great Mammoth Establishment." On the 17th ult., he made his grand entry into Gloucester "in a style of true Oriental magnificence." This is high praise, certainly; but it is warranted by the superb appearance of the head of the procession—a Rath, or Burmese State Carriage and Throne, drawn by a male and female elephant. The length of this costly carriage is 13 ft. 6 in.; and its height, to the summit of the Peasath, or Royal Canopy, with which it is surmounted, is 15 feet. The caparisonings of the elephants are very superb, being covered with crimson velvet, embroidered with gold; and the car is richly gilt. The driver is an East Indian, in appropriate costume; and the proprietor of the establishment, similarly attired, occupies the car. It is altogether a most gorgeous affair, and is followed by a carriage and fourteen horses driven in hand, and other carriages, superbly caparisoned horses, palfreys, and pigmy ponies, the male and female artistes on their trained chargers, &c.

HUGHES'S ELEPHANT CARRIAGE, AT GLOUCESTER.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

"L'Elisire d'Amore" was performed on Tuesday night to a crowded audience. Great was our pleasure in hearing again this charming opera, which—written, composed, rehearsed, and finally performed within the space of twenty days—comes upon the ear with all the charm and freshness of a first idea, undisguised by those after-touches which, in a work of genius, more frequently mar than improve. The part of Adina found an admirable representative in Madame Castellan. Although, owing to her still recent indisposition, the voice of this charming artiste was occasionally wanting in its usual depth and richness of tone, she gave the light and sparkling melodies with which this opera abounds with a taste and expression which left nothing to be desired; whilst her fanciful and intricate fioriture seemed to acquire even an increased tenderness and softness from the comparative weakness of her vocal organ. As to her reading of the character it was perfect. to the capricious waywardness of the spoilt village beauty she added a grace and sweetness all her own. It is these truly feminine qualities which, united to the powerful dramatic feeling and vis comica of this gifted singer, give to her performance an attraction that it is difficult to define, and which it would be impossible for the most crabbed critic to resist. The charming duet, "Chiedi all' aura lusingiera," and that by Lablache in the second act, were exquisitely rendered by Madame Castellan: in the latter, especially, she seemed to have triumphed over physical weakness. Her voice had regained all its fulness of tone, her arch look bespeaking the consciousness of power, when she tells the confounded Dulcamara that she possesses an elixir more potent even than the "port wine" which he offers to administer.

It would be difficult to praise too highly Signor Corelli's performance in this opera. None of those who had heard him on previous occasions, but would probably have been surprised at the fulness with which he gave his notes, and the expression and energy with which he sang. The duet with Madame Castellan, that with F. Lablache, and, above all, the beautiful "Una furtiva Lagrima," the Cheval de bataille of every tenor, were given charmingly by Corelli; the latter was encored, and the whole part was admirably suited to his voice. F. Lablache made a very spirited Belcore; and as to that prince of singers and actors, his father, his genius seems to advance instead of retrograding with time. Every night we see and hear him, his voice strikes us as more magnificent, his wit as more mercurial, his good humour and kindliness more loveable. When we say that he acted Dulcamara, it is unnecessary to add that the audience was convulsed with laughter. The part he took in remedying the mishaps of Saturday night last must have been fresh in every one's recollection; his inexhaustible fund of drollery in the "Barbiere di Seviglia," filling up the void left for a time by Signor Mario's sudden defection, and the impression produced by Rosina's somewhat uncertain and agitated tones.

As a contrast to the comic "Elisire d'Amore," the last act of "Ernani," with its tragic finale, was given on Tuesday, with immense applause. Thursday brought forth "I Puritani;" the music is graphic and heavenly, and the cast is admirable, so that already, on Wednesday evening, almost every place where one could sit or stand, was taken in the house, beforehand. Need we say the result answered the expectations formed by the eager votaries. As to the novelties in the ballet department, they follow each other so closely, that it would be impossible to render justice to them all. The pas of the charming little Viennoise, the characteristic dances of Nena, the new divertissement, "Le Pecheni Napolitain," with Arber's charming music, and the Tarantella, by Lucile Grahn and Perrot, and "Kaya," only a week older, have not been considered sufficient for the public amusement; and the return of Fanny Cerito, accompanied by her bridegroom, St. Leon, in the charming divertissement "La Vivandière," and steps from "Le Lac des Fées," afforded, on Thursday, a fresh and all-powerful attraction. Added to this, a new pas d'action, "La Bacchante," a classic dance and tableau, rendered by the fair Dane and her graceful partner, Perrot.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Wurtzburg Gazette states that it is generally reported in Dresden that the Queen of England will visit Cobourg during the summer, and probably Dresden and Berlin.

The inauguration of the Beethoven Monument is to take place at Bonn towards the close of July. A grand musical festival is to be given on the occasion, which is to last several days.

From a return ordered by the House of Commons Select Committee on the Atmospheric Railway system, it appears that during 1844 there were 84 persons killed, and 102 injured by railway accidents in the kingdom. It is curious, however, to observe how few, comparatively, were passengers of that number. During the first three months of this year, there were, also, 22 persons killed and 17 persons injured by railway accidents. Such, at least, are the cases "reported to the Railway Department of the Board of Trade."

The fifty-second anniversary of the birthday of the Emperor of Austria was solemnised with much ceremony on the 19th inst., at Vienna. In the afternoon the Emperor and Empress rode out in an open carriage, and in the evening their Imperial Majesties visited the theatre, where they were received with every demonstration of loyalty by an overflowing audience.

A letter from Hanover of the 23rd states that a new loan, at 3⅓ per cent., to be secured on the taxes, is about to be raised, for the purpose of constructing railroads.

We read in a letter from Mentz (Grand Duchy of Darmstadt), April 20:—"The criminal tribunal persists in its jurisprudence against duelling. It has just pronounced sentence of imprisonment for one year, with hard labour, in a fortress, against a merchant's clerk, who killed a sub-lieutenant of dragoons in a duel about a year ago."

A letter from Philadelphia, mentions the death of Mrs. N. P. Willis, the wife of the American author, known by his work "Pencillings by the Way."

The Edinburgh papers announce the death of Thomas Duncan, Esq., an artist of talent, member of the Royal Scottish Academy. Mr. Duncan had but lately received an order from the Marquis of Bredalbane for a picture for which the artist was to be paid £1000.

A letter from Trieste, dated April 17, says, "His Royal Highness the Duke de Bordeaux and her Royal Highness the Duchess d'Angoulême arrived hither yesterday. The Duchess has left for Ancona, whence she will proceed to Loretto. It is said that the elder branch of the Bourbons will finally quit Goritz on the 15th of next month."

The musical festival which is appointed to take place at Wurzburg on the 1st of August will be attended by at least 1600 musicians from all parts of Germany. The temporary hall will be constructed for the accommodation of 5000 persons, besides those who are to take an active part at the festival

Letters from Rome state that the Government have again prohibited horse-racing, to the great disappointment and dismay of the numerous English and other foreigners residing at and visiting Rome. The Government has also increased the price to be paid annually for a license to hunt the country.

A letter from Berlin, of the 21st ult., gives an account of a mad attempt to assassinate the Prussian Minister of War, General Baron de Boyen, by a young sub lieutenant of artillery. The attempt was frustrated by the Generals attendants. Of the lunacy of the young officer little doubt can be entertained, although it is said that he had never before shown any symptoms of derangement, and, since his arrest, has conducted himself as if he had been in the full enjoyment of his intellectual faculties.

An alarming fire took place near the Hanoverian Post Office at Hamburg, a few days ago, which destroyed two houses. Strange to say, it commenced in the house of the very person in whose house the great fire of Hamburg also originated. The same person's house has been on fire four or five times; and he is now in custody.

GRAND MILITARY FUNERAL AT WOOLWICH.

We announced last week the decease of Colonel Sir George Charles Hoste, C.B., commanding the Royal Engineers in the garrison of Woolwich: and in another part of the paper will be found a sketch of his career. On Tuesday his funeral took place, and it was a military pageant of great solemnity.

Soon after ten o'clock the corps of Sappers and Miners, of whom the firing party was composed, commanded by Captain Howorth, accompanied by their band with drums muffled, marched in silence from their barracks to Mill Hill, the residence of the late colonel. Here they formed in procession with the friends of the deceased, and at a quarter before eleven they moved towards the parade. The band preceded, playing the Dead March in Saul, the firing party with arms reversed, afterwards the coffin, with the hat and sword of deceased on a gun carriage drawn by six horses, and guarded by Horse Artillery. Colonel Lacy, C.B., Colonel Turner, C.B., R.A., Colonel Mercer, second commandant, and Colonel Powell, R.M.; Colonel Oldfield and Colonel Sir F. Smith being the pall-bearers. The horse of the deceased colonel followed, led by two soldiers, caprisoned in mourning, with the boots of his late rider reversed.

The procession moved off in funercal order. The coffin was followed by the chief mourners, relatives, and friends. To these succeeded the Royal Marine band, the Marines and officers of that corps, and the officers and men belonging to the Royal Artillery and Engineers. On arriving at the church, the firing party filed off on each side, and leaned on their reversed muskets, as the procession, having been met by the rector of Charlton, the Rev. Arthur Drummond, passed into the sacred edifice, the body taken from the gun-carriage, and borne on the shoulders of sergeants of the Sappers and Miners.

The funeral service was then begun in a most impressive manner, and the band of the Royal Artillery performed the part, "Now is Christ risen from the dead," assisted by some youthful choristers. The body was then conveyed to the tomb, the firing party drawn up on each side, the officers and men encircling them in regular rows. The burial service having been read, and the coffin deposited, three volleys were fired over the grave, the intervals of loading having been filled up by martial music.

NATIONAL ANTI-CORN-LAW BAZAAR.—The Council of the League have determined to hold a BAZAAR, in the THEATRE ROYAL COVENT GARDEN, on THURSDAY, the 8th of MAY, and the following days. It has been undertaken by the Council in compliance with the wishes of a number of ladies of the highest respectability, who have deemed it the most appropriate method of expressing their sympathy with the objects of the League, and their approval of its proceedings; and who, in furtherance of their views, have formed a committee consisting of 1000 ladies.

The BAZAAR will be OPENED for EXHIBITION on THURSDAY, FRIDAY, and SATURDAY, the 8th, 9th, and 10th of MAY, and the SALE OF ARTICLES will commence on MONDAY, the 12th. The Pit of the Theatre will be boarded over, and the interior converted into one vast GOTHIC HALL. The Saloon will be devoted to the exhibition of arti les of taste and vertu, and specimens and models illustrative of the progress of the arts and sciences.

Many of the large manufacturing towns having intimated their intention of furnishing their stalls with articles of their staple manufacture, such contributions will not be removed at the period of sale, but will REMAIN ON VIEW till the close of the Bazaar.

Contributions may be forwarded, addressed to GEORGE WILSON, Esq., at the Theatre Royal Covent Garden, London; where all the requisite arrangements are made for their reception.

The Council are completing arrangements for placing SPECIAL TRAINS on all the principal lines of railway, to convey persons desirous of visiting the Bazaar to London at Reduced Charges. By Order of the Council, GEORGE WILSON, Chairman.

London, Covent Garden Theatre, April 26, 1845.

DESIGNS FOR TAPESTRY.—GIBBINS, 7, King-street, St. James's-square, respectfully informs the public, he has just returned from the Continent with the NEWEST PAPER PATTERNS—patterns on canvass, wools, silks, and canvasses from Berlin and Vienna, which, from the low Continental prices, he can offer for sale at a great reduction in prices. An assortment of 10,000 designs for sale, and some beautifully finished specimens of needlework, calculated for elegant presents.—7, King-street, St. James's.

SANATORIUM, or HOME IN SICKNESS.—The lease of the house hitherto occupied by this Institution having expired, and the house itself being unfitted, by its want of accommodation, for the purposes of the Institution, the Committee have long sought in vain for some suitable mansion which they might rent until sufficient funds could be raised for building. Unsuccessful in this attempt, they have been reluctantly compelled to close the establishment for the present. Convinced, however, from the experience they have had, that, if convenient premises could be purchased or built, the institution would not only support itself, but also afford the means of greatly extending its usefulness, the Committee have determined to exert themselves to procure the necessary funds for this purpose. So soon as these shall be obtained, the institution will be re-opened.—Further information may be had, and subscriptions paid to the Secretary, at the Office of F. W. Pott, Esq., 13, Godliman-street, Doctors' Commons; and Messrs. Jones, Loyd, and Co., Bankers, Lothbury. HENRY S. SMYTH, Secretary.

DISEASED AND HEALTHY LIVES ASSURED.

MEDICAL, INVALID, and GENERAL LIFE OFEICE, 25, Pall-mall, London, and 22, Nassau-street, Dublin.

Subscribed Capital, £300,000.

This Office was Established in 1841, for the Assurance of Diseased as well as Healthy Lives, having caused tables to be specially calculated for that purpose.

Members of Consumptive Families Assured at equitable rates.

Increased Annuities granted on Unsound Lives, the amount varying with the particular disease.

Healthy Lives are Assured at Lower Rates than at most other Offices.

More than two-thirds of the population are not Assurable in other Offices, from the prevalence of disease, and in several of the leading Assurance Societies in London, 23 per Cent., or more than one in five, of the applicants are rejected on examination.

About three-fourths of the Policies already issued by this Society are on Diseased Lives, the majority of which had been previously rejected by other Offices.

A Capital of Half-a-Million Sterling fully subscribed, affords a complete guarantee for the fulfilment of the Society's engagements. F. G. P. NEISON, Actuary.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, and GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—Every description of assurance may be effected with this Society, and policies are granted on the lives of persons of all ages.

Table of Premiums for Assuring £100 on a Healthy Life.

Age.	For One Year only.			For Seven Years at an Annual Payment.			For 14 Years at an Annual Payment of
	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.	£	s.	d.
25	1	1	0	1	2	2	1	3	8
30	1	2	1	1	4	1	1	6	1
35	1	5	2	1	-	2	1	9	3
40	1	8	9	1	10	4	1	13	6
45	1	12	2	1	14	8	2	1	0
50	1	16	11	2	3	10	2	13	11

The sum accumulated and invested, for the security and benefit of the assured, already exceeds half a million sterling; and the income, which is steadily increasing, is now £101,500 per annum.

Bonuses.—The two first divisions averaged £22 per cent. on the premiums paid. The third bonus, declared in January, 1842, averaged £25 per cent.; and the future bonuses are expected to exceed that amount.

The balance sheets of this Society are at all times open to the inspection of any of the assured.

Further information may be obtained of GEORGE H. PINCKARD, Actuary, 78, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London; or of any of the Society's agents.

For Cash, at DAVIES'S Old-Established Warehouse, 63, St. Martin's-lane, opposite Slaughter's Coffee-house

ESTABLISHED 18 YEARS.—WOOLLEN, SCOTCH, and MANCHESTER WAREHOUSE.—In calling the attention of the Public to a stock suited for the present season, the foolish assertion of selling cheaper than any house in the Kingdom is not held out as is too often the case; but, at the same time, we positively assert that no house can go to market better, or sell at a smaller rate of profit, our business being conducted on one system, viz., for Ready Money, thus enabling us at all times to meet the utmost competition. Every article in the Establishment is marked in plain figures, at the lowest possible price, from which no deviation can be made. We invite all to inspect and judge for themselves, being confident one purchase will ensure enlarged recommendations and support. No connection with any other house.—HILL and MILLS, 89, St. Martin's-lane, and Corner of St. Martin's-court.

TO THE CARPET TRADE.—THE ROYAL PATENT VICTORIA FELT CARPETING, made without spinning and weaving, having successfully overcome the prejudice created by competitors in other descriptions of Carpeting, and being now honoured with the patronage of her Most Gracious Majesty for its use in the Royal Palaces, the Patent Woollen Cloth Company, who are the sole manufacturers, inform the Trade that their new and beautiful Patterns in Carpetings for the present season are now ready for inspection at the Company's Warehouses, 3, Love-lane, Wood-street, Cheapside, where the Company have also a large assortment of elegantly-printed and embossed Table Covers, Window Curtains, Cloths for Coach-linings, Waistcoatings, Thick Felt for Polishing and Gun Waddings, D'Oyleys, &c. &c., manufactured by the same process. The public, in patronising the Felt Carpeting, will obtain, and for one half the price, an article superior in strength and durability to either Kidderminster or Brussels.—Manufactories—Elmwood Mills Leeds; and Borough-road, London.

NEW ENVELOPE.—In consequence of the great variety of Counterfeit Envelopes of ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, and other disreputable means resorted to by unprincipled individuals for imposing on the public their highly pernicious compounds under the title of "KALYDOR," the Proprietors and sole Preparers of the Original and Genuine Preparation, acting under a sense of duty, and regardless of expense in the attainment of their object—the protection of the Public from Fraud and Imposition—have employed those celebrated artists, Messrs. Perkins, Bacon and Co., who have succeeded, at great cost, in producing from a steel plate a New Envelope of exquisite beauty. It comprises a highly-finished engraving of the Grecian Graces standing on a classic pedestal, on each side of which is a rich profusion of flowers springing from an elegant cornucopia: these tastefully blending with Arabesque scrolls and wreaths, encircle the Royal Arms of Great Britain, surmounting the words, "ROWLAND'S KALYDOR," &c., &c., whilst a plinth at the foot displays the Signature of the Proprietors, in red, thus—
20, Hatton Garden, London, Jan 1, 1845. A. ROWLAND & SON.
ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, an Oriental Botanical Discovery, perfectly free from all mineral or metallic admixture. It purifies the skin from all Eruptive Maladies, Freckles, Discolourations, &c. To the Complexion it imparts a radiant bloom, and a softness and delicacy to the Hands, Arms, and Neck.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. Sold by the Proprietors as above, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

PATRONISED BY THE QUEEN AND ROYAL FAMILY OF GREAT BRITAIN, AND THE SEVERAL SOVEREIGNS AND COURTS OF EUROPE.
ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.—This ELEGANT, FRAGRANT, and TRANSPARENT OIL, in its preservative, restorative, and beautifying qualities, for the Human Hair, is unequalled throughout the whole world. For Children, it is especially recommended as forming the basis of A Beautiful Head of Hair!!! Price 3s. 6d., 7s., Family Bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d., and double that size, 21s.
CAUTION.—Each genuine bottle has the words ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL engraved in two lines on the Wrapper; and on the back of the Wrapper nearly 1500 times, containing 29,028 letters.
ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a fragrant white powder, prepared from Oriental Herbs of inestimable virtue for preserving and beautifying the TEETH and strengthening the GUMS. It eradicates tartar from the teeth, removes spots of incipient decay, polishes and preserves the enamel, imparting the most pure and pearl-like whiteness; and gives sweetness and perfume to the breath. Scurvy is by its means eradicated from the gums, and a healthy action and redness are induced, so that the teeth, if loose, are thus rendered firm in their sockets. Price 2s. 9d. per box.
CAUTION.—As a protection from fraud, the Hon. Commissioners of Stamps have directed the Proprietors' name and address, thus—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden—to be engraved on the Government Stamp, which is affixed on each box.  All other articles under the same names are Fraudulent Imitations.

PILBROW'S ATMOSPHERIC RAILWAY AND CANAL PROPULSION COMPANY (provisionally registered). Capital £600,000, in 60,000 Shares of £10 each. Instalment £1 per Share.
Since the issuing of the former Prospectus, the Provisional Directors have considered it desirable to negotiate with the Patentee for his whole right of patents, instead of confining themselves to the United Kingdom and Ireland, as originally proposed; and the Directors have now the satisfaction of announcing to the public that they have agreed for the purchase of the British and Foreign right of Pilbrow's Atmospheric Railroad and Canal Propulsion Patents. By this extended arrangement the Directors have obtained the patents upon much more advantageous terms for the proprietary, in consequence of which the amount of call necessary to carry out the object and intention of the Company will be greatly diminished, and the prospect of immediate return considerably increased.
In lieu of Five Pounds, One Pound per Share is considered ample to cover the expenses of purchase, and to lay down a line of sufficient length to prove the superiority of Pilbrow's Atmospheric principle.
The arrangement of this undertaking, however, necessarily involves many changes; the amount of capital and the number of shares must be considerably augmented, but the shares will still be continued at the same amount, viz., Ten Pound Shares, to meet the wishes of the original applicants.
An instalment of One Pound per Share will be required on the signing of the Deed of Settlement.
DIRECTORS.
The Right Hon. the Earl of ESSEX, Chairman.
The Right Hon. the Earl of Desborough — Captain Britten
George Buckley Bolton, Esq. — Frank Lambert, Esq.
Lieutenant-Colonel Gillies — Anthony White, Esq.
RESIDENT DIRECTOR—Dr. John Grigg Hewlett.
AUDITOR—Thomas Edwards, Esq.
CONSULTING ENGINEER—James Pilbrow, Esq.
ENGINEERS—Alex Gordon, Esq., M. Inst., C.E.; Fred. Braithwaite, Esq., C.E.
STANDING COUNSEL—Thomas Webster, Esq.
SOLICITORS—Messrs. White and Borrett.
SECRETARY—Charles Collins, Esq.
BANKERS—London Joint Stock Bank, City Branch; Messrs. Cocks, Biddulph, Biddulph, and Co., 43, Charing Cross.
Offices—6, King William-street, London.
The prominent advantages of this system of atmospheric traction are, that the continuous valve is dispensed with; roads are crossed upon a level without interruption of main; one atmospheric railway can be intersected by another, thus saving bridges, approaches, and leakage; and it is confidently expected that a stationary engine every ten miles will be sufficient.
The system combines extreme simplicity with perfect efficiency, and that obtained with a small comparative expense in working and construction.
It is estimated that a saving altogether upon the other plans of atmospheric railways (having the continuous valve) would be nearly £3,000 per mile; two mains or lines can, on this plan, be laid for little more than the cost of one upon the other plans; and a saving in working, or annual expenses, of two-thirds.
Increased safety is insured, also obstruction and destruction by weather and other sources are placed beyond probability, by the mains being buried, &c.
The objects of the Company will be to dispose of foreign patents; to grant licenses to Railway and Canal Companies to use the invention, or lay down the works under contracts with the different companies; and to lay down an experimental line in the neighbourhood of the metropolis, by agreement with any existing company or otherwise.
The income derivable from these sources offers considerable advantages, while the expenses, with the exception of the purchase of the patents, and laying down the experimental line, are obviously small.
A Model, upon a scale of one inch to the foot, may be seen at work on Wednesdays and Thursdays, between twelve and three o'clock, at the Company's offices, by application to the Secretary or Officers of the Company.
FORM OF APPLICATION FOR SHARES ADDRESSED TO THE SECRETARY.
To the Directors of Pilbrow's Atmospheric Railway and Canal Propulsion Company.
Gentlemen—I request you to allot me Shares of £ each in the above Company, and I undertake to accept the same, or any smaller number of shares that may be allotted to me, and to pay the deposit thereon, and to execute the deed of settlement.

THE QUEEN AT HOME.—In reply to numerous letters received, complaining of the deception practised upon them by specious and fraudulent advertisements, the Proprietors of the "London and Paris Ladies Magazine of Fashion," beg to say that the May Number, containing the above Splendid Print, is still on sale, having reprinted very largely to meet the demand. To escape fraud in future, Ladies should compare before purchasing. Price One Shilling. To be had of all Booksellers.

THE MYSTERIES OF LONDON.—Publishing in Weekly Penny Numbers, and Monthly Sixpenny Parts, beautifully Illustrated with Wood-cuts, THE MYSTERIES OF LONDON, by G. W. M. REYNOLDS, Author of "Pickwick Abroad," "Robert Macaire," "The Modern Literature of France," "Master Timothy's Bookcase," &c. Since the days of Boz's "Pickwick," no original work has created so powerful a sensation in the reading world as "The Mysteries of London." It was at first contemplated to publish it in Monthly Shilling Parts; but, upon mature consideration, the proprietor and author resolved to issue it in a form which should render it accessible to all classes. The prejudice against cheap literature having completely died away, this determination was acted upon; and a success which far exceeded the most sanguine expectations previously formed has crowned the work. The weekly and monthly sales, taken together, now amount to upwards of 30,000 copies. The thrilling interest of the tale; the vivid descriptions of London society, both high and low; the graphic delineation of strange or remarkable localities in the great metropolis; the exposures of all kinds of roguery to which the unsuspicious ones may become a prey; and the fearlessness with which the cause of the industrious millions is espoused, have given to "The Mysteries of London" a character which has become the element of the most lasting popularity.—London: G. VICKERS, and all Booksellers and Newsmen in Town and Country. Paris: A. and W. GALIGNANI.—Part VII. was published April 30th.

THE ATRAPILATORY, or LIQUID HAIR DYE; the only dye that really answers for all colours, and does not require re-doing, but as the hair grows, as it never fades or acquires that unnatural red or purple tint common to all other dyes. ROSS and SONS can, with the greatest confidence, recommend the above dye as infallible, if done at their establishment; and ladies or gentlemen requiring it, are requested to bring a friend, or servant with them, to see how it is used, which will enable them to do it afterwards without the chance of failure. Several private apartments devoted entirely to the above purpose, and some of their establishment having used it, the effect produced can be at once seen. They think it necessary to add, that by attending strictly to the instructions given with each bottle of dye, numerous persons have succeeded equally well without coming to them.
Address Ross and Sons, 119 and 120, Bishopsgate-street, the celebrated Perruquiers, Perfumers, Hair-cutters, and Hair-dyers. N.B. Parties attended at their own residences, whatever the distance.

GREAT SAVING IN SOAP AND LABOUR.
Royal Letters Patent, granted March 4, 1844.
WARD'S PATENT WASHING and CLEANSING POWDER, manufactured at the Oldbury Alkali Works, near Birmingham. One great advantage which this powder possesses over others consists in its not injuring the hands of the persons using it. Other Washing Powders contain carbonate of soda in its free state, which, by acting upon the skin, inflames the hands and renders them sore and wrinkled. Other advantages peculiar to this powder may be stated as follows, viz.:—A saving of at least one-half of the soap which is necessary when soda is used. A great saving in the labour of washing. The colour of linen and other fabrics turns out far superior in whiteness to that which is given by any other means. From the wear and tear caused by the rubbing and maiding being diminished, the durability of the clothes is increased.
This Powder will be found very valuable in Scouring Greasy Floors and Tables, in Cleansing Brass, Tin, and other Utensils of domestic use, and also Publicans' Pewter Pots.
 Warranted not to injure articles, though made of the finest materials.
Sold in packets, at 1d., 2d., 3d., and 6d. each, with directions for using. Be particular in asking for WARD'S WASHING POWDER, as no other possesses the same qualities.—To be had of all Druggists, Grocers, Oilmen, &c., or wholesale from the Manufacturers by application to Mr. P. WARD, at the Works as above, or in London, to Mr. JOHN MACARTNEY, 2, Coleman-street Buildings.

SHAWLS.—EVERINGTON'S successors (Graham and Smith) have dissolved Partnership. GEORGE SMITH, now carrying on business in the spacious premises lately occupied by Randell and Bunce, 72, Ludgate-hill, respectfully invites the Nobility, Gentry, and Public to inspect his magnificent Stock of SHAWLS, and he particularly informs gentlemen purchasers that one price only is made, and that price marked on each article in plain figures. Thirteen years' experience in the late house of Everington, enables George Smith to place before his patrons the same choice collection of goods which for so many years past it has been his particular department to select from the various and most talented Continental and British manufacturers. The success of his new system is complete. The economy of his arrangements will supply the best and most fashionable manufactures at moderate prices, while the order of his Establishment effectually secures ladies from any disagreeable importunity to purchase more than they require, or that which is in opposition to their tastes. Unencumbered by those heavy expenses which the mania for decorating houses of business has heaped upon the prices of goods, George Smith will sell, on ready money terms only, at much less than the usual profit, every useful and fashionable article in Shawls, Silks, Satins, and Velvets, Mantles, Handkerchiefs, Scarfs, Worked Muslin and Lace Collars and Pelerines. Every description of Printed Dresses, from 5s. each to the most costly fabrics. Every article required in full or half Mourning. A room is set apart for the exclusive sale of British and Foreign Table Linen, and every kind of Linen for family use, Long Cloths, Muslins, &c. A beautiful assortment of Swiss Window-curtains.—32, Ludgate-hill.

IMPORTANT AND LABOUR-SAVING DISCOVERY.
SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, for cleaning Gold and Silver Plate, Jewellery, Silver Plated Goods, &c., &c.—The following Letter, from Dr. URE the eminent Chemist, at once establishes the usefulness of this new discovery:—
"I have examined the preparation invented by Messrs. JONES, for cleaning silver, called SILVO-GALVANIC CREAM, and find it to be safe, effectual, and instantaneous in its operation. Being founded on chemical principles, it merely removes the tarnish on plate, and restores the white silver lustre without abrading or wearing the precious metal itself in the slightest degree. £20, and the Duke of Cambridge £10 to the funds. In January last there were in the Asylum 33 orphan girls, and one a boarder. The premises at present are in St. Michael's-terrace; but they having been found inadequate to the enlarged purposes of the charity, the erection of a new building was decided on; the funds were in part raised; and a site generously given by the Lord of the Manor; and a new edifice designed by Mr. George Wightwick, of Devonport. It will be 78 feet long by 44 feet 6 inches broad, and will contain four stories, capable of accommodating 100 female orphans, including apartments for the matron, &c. It will front Stoke-terrace, and command a fine prospect of the Sound, Hamoaze, &c. The Asylum is to be housed over by September next, and finished by Midsummer, 1846.

The ceremony of laying the first stone was performed within an inclosed area, where seats were provided for spectators. At nine o'clock, the Provincial Grand Lodge of Freemasons was opened, at the Asylum, in St. Michael's Terrace, and it was close tiled until the arrival of the Provincial Grand Master, Earl Fortescue, the Directors, subscribers, and friends of the charity, met at half-past nine; the Magistrates, Town Council, and other authorities, met at the Town-hall; and the several parties proceeded to the church, where they awaited the coming of Earl Fortescue, who did not arrive from London until near twelve o'clock: his lordship then entered the church at the head of the Freemasons, who carried their various standards, regalia, and symbols. After divine service, a Masonic Ode was sung, and a collection made. The various bodies then met, and, in procession, walked to the ground; and after the National Anthem had been played, an Ode on Masonry sung by the children, and a prayer offered up by the Past Grand Chaplain, and "the sacred roll," detailing the event, was deposited, with some coins, in the hollow of the stone. The P.G.M. then received the silver trowel, belonging to the Institution, from Brother L. Tripe, of Lodge Sincerity, and also the trowel of the Provincial Lodge from the Senior Grand Deacon, and spread the cement. The upper stone was then lowered into its place, the band playing an air. The Grand Master then proved the stone to be properly adjusted by the plum rule, level, and square, successively delivered to him by the Junior Grand Warden, Senior Grand Warden, and Deputy Grand Master, after which the Grand Master gave three knocks with the mallet, and then delivered to the architect the several implements for his use. The plan and elevation of the building were then presented by the Grand Superintendent of Works to the Grand Master for his inspection, who delivered them to the architect, for his guidance. Corn, wine, and oil, were then strewed and poured on the stone, in accordance with the customary practice. A prayer was then delivered by the R. W. D. P. G. M., Dr. Carwithen; the Masons answered "Amen," and the ceremony concluded. Earl Fortescue then addressed the assembly, as did the Provincial Grand Secretary. The usual Masonic proclamation was then made; the assembly cheered loudly; the National Anthem was played, and the procession returned to the Asylum in inverted order, followed by a vast concourse of spectators.

After the ceremony, an elegant déjeûner was given at Captain Somerville's, the indefatigable treasurer of the Institution; and in the evening, the event of the day was celebrated by a sumptuous dinner, at Morshead's Royal Hotel, Admiral Charles Ross, C.B., in the chair.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF THE ROYAL BRITISH FEMALE ORPHAN ASYLUM AT DEVONPORT.

FUNERAL OF THE MARQUIS OF DOWNSHIRE.

On Thursday week, the remains of this deeply lamented nobleman (a brief sketch of whose life, with a portrait, appeared in our journal a fortnight since,) were consigned to their resting-place at Hillsborough, in Downshire.

The progress of the funeral train from Dublin to Hillsborough was marked by manifestations of the regard in which the deceased nobleman was universally held. On Tuesday evening, the cortège reached Newry, attended by a large body of the most respectable inhabitants of that town. The coffin was deposited for the night in St. Mary's Church, the Rev. Daniel Bagot, the vicar, having read the burial service.

The spectacle presented, on the approach to Newry, was extremely interesting. The mourning coaches, in which were the Marquis of Downshire, Lord Edwin Hill, Baron Sandys, Lord George Hill, J. T. Reilly, Esq., T. Crozier, Esq., H. Murray, Esq., were accompanied by a number of private carriages, and followed by a procession of gentlemen dressed in black, with crape on the left arm.

On Wednesday morning, a little before seven o'clock, the pealing of the funeral bell announced the re-assembling of the mournful train. The procession had not far left Newry, when it was joined by parties of mounted tenantry from Hilltown, Rathfriland, and adjacent places. About six miles from the town, a fine body of tenants, chiefly from what is called the Fortescue Estate, likewise fell into the ranks. In this manner, constantly increasing, the cortège approached Loughbrickland and Banbridge.

At nine o'clock, about two hundred of the respectable inhabitants of Banbridge assembled at the Downshire Arms, and proceeded, two and two, attired in black, and wearing weepers on the left arm, to meet the solemn funeral train. This they met at Loughbrickland. They formed a line on each side of the way, and kept in that order till the whole of the procession passed on, when they took their place in the rear.

On arriving at Banbridge, the hearse and mourning carriages halted for about an hour and a half, and then set forward, followed by the rest of the procession, in the same order as from Newry, the gentlemen of Banbridge leading the way.

At Dromore, again, the inhabitants closed their shops, and great numbers of them joined in the solemn procession. The bell of the cathedral pealed its solemn note; and the church bore an escutcheon, and on the tower the Union British flag reversed.

About two miles from Dromore, the procession was met by the tenantry of Hillsborough and its vicinity; Archdeacon Mant being at their head; and, from one to two miles, the highway was filled with a dense living mass, numbering from 3000 to 4000, in carriages and on horseback, besides foot-passengers and spectators. The effect of the whole scene we cannot attempt to pourtray. The white scarf on nearly every man's shoulder, together with the accompaniment of the white hat-band, had an effect most dazzling.

At half-past six, Hillsborough was reached, and the coffin deposited in the Castle.

Next morning, multitudes from Belfast, Lisburn, and other towns, assembled long before the hour appointed for the burial services; and the body lay in state at the Castle: the outside coffin was of very strong oak, covered with fine crimson silk velvet, finished with gilt nails, massive gilt handles and escutcheons; and a large inscription-plate, with the family arms, surmounted by the coronet and crest. The inner coffin was of mahogany, lined with white silk, padded, and highly polished. This was likewise enclosed in a strong leaden coffin.

After the ceremonial had been witnessed by thousands, the tenantry, in their scarfs and hatbands, were drawn up in a close line on each side of the streets leading from the Castle to the Church, and at one o'clock the procession began to move from the Castle, in the order shown in the engraving.

On arriving at the door of the Church, the procession was met by the Rev. Mr. Mesham, the domestic chaplain of the Marquis of Downshire. By him, also, the service for the burial of the dead was read. Afterwards, he ascended the pulpit, and delivered a funeral address from Rev., c. xiv., v. 13.

The sermon being ended, the funeral train left the Church, and proceeded to the family vault, which is in immediate connection with it. Here the remainder of the solemn service was performed. "The narrow house appointed for all living," had consigned to it all that was mortal of the late exalted owner of the Castle of Hillsborough.

The Castle is of considerable antiquarian interest. King William III. slept there when on his way to the Battle of the Boyne; and the family of the Hills have since been its hereditary constables.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

ST. MARGARET'S, SOUTH FORELAND.

Normandy is not sufficiently regarded as the birth-place of an ecclesiastical architecture; and it has followed that the splendid works erected by the Normans in this country are but little understood, or ignorantly ascribed to the Saxons. Of this, a remarkable example occurs in the beautiful little church of St. Margaret's, situated in a retired nook at the back of that "high and bending cliff," the South Foreland. No more beautiful specimen of a church was ever erected; and yet, in the common belief of the neighbourhood, it is considered to be the work of the savage Saxon hordes.

ST. MARGARET'S CHURCH, AT CLIFFE, NEAR DOVER.

This church was built by the Normans, probably about the time of Henry II.: it contains a nave, two side aisles, and a chancel. The nave, considering the small size of the building, is of really noble proportions; and, the general air of grandeur which pervades it, is heightened by the simplicity and huge dimensions of its piers, columns, and decorated arches.

The clerestory is pierced by six narrow splayed windows, without ornament on the inside, but on the exterior they are made to alternate with a series of eight cluster pillars, bearing an enriched intersecting arcade, and supporting a bold and very characteristic corbel course. This arrangement is very ingenious and effective. The western entrance is highly enriched with a series of embellished arches, crowned with a triangular pediment of rare design. The tower—which is supported on the inside by four lofty pillars—was formerly decorated with turrets on the angles; but these have been destroyed, and a tasteless embattled parapet placed in their stead. Our cut shows the tower before these "restorations" took place. We commend this church not only to general visitors, but to the attentive consideration of our architects.

FIELD GARDENS.

THE fate that generally attends a measure brought in by an "independent member"—that is, a member not officially connected with the Government—will befal the Field Gardens Bill of Mr. Cowper. It is easy to foresee that it will fail; all the signs are exhibited that foreshow the Parliamentary doom of a breaking-down bill. Its author is not so confident of its goodness but that he is prepared to expunge some clauses and alter others. The Government regards it with a very limited and qualified favour, indeed; and to some of its provisions expresses a positive and "insuperable" hostility; and, to crown all, there is no very general feeling in its support which can be appealed to, as a defence against the official hacking and hewing in Committee, where it will be so altered that its own parent will scarcely be able to recognise it. All these are the symptoms of a failing measure: we have seen hundreds of bills sicken and die in the same manner. The mode of extinction varies sometimes, but the fatality is much the same. The Field Gardens Bill, as framed by its introducer, will evidently not pass into a law. Nor are we sure, looking at the measure itself, that it is much to be regretted.

The principal object of the measure, however, still remains—a thing to be desired; is it to be given up as hopeless? We trust not; but, for effecting it, we place more reliance on the "voluntary principle" than on a legal enactment; and we believe that what might be done from free-will, would give more satisfaction to all parties than any compulsory regulations. We fear that in the latter case the advantages to a poor man of having a piece of land to cultivate would be much qualified by other circumstances. The great benefit of a cottage garden is indisputable, when attached to the residence of the labourer; it then employs profitably his hours of leisure, which otherwise might be worse than unprofitably spent. But the same advantages do not arise from a plot of ground situated at two or three miles distance from his dwelling; his usual labour exhausts him too much to leave much inclination to encounter a walk of three or four miles, and the time it would require to go and come, would leave but a scanty remnant to appropriate to the cultivation of his little domain. To those accidentally placed in the neighbourhood of the allotments, they would prove a benefit; to those living at any distance from them they would rather be the reverse. When quite out of employment they might, it is true, work in them, with some effect in ameliorating their condition; but the efforts of the Legislature should be directed rather to making full employment abundant than to devising expedients that seem to go on the principle that a compelled idleness is a necessity. A labourer in full work could only devote a portion of his time to his allotment by suffering a diminution in his wages, which are his support, and what he gained one way he would lose another; clearly there would be no benefit in this, and it forms one of the chief difficulties of the question.

To be of any advantage to the poor, any system of this kind must produce something in addition to the labourer's wages; it must not be carried into effect as a substitute for any portion of his earnings; still less must it be made the cause or pretext for any diminution of them. This would not be the case where a man had a garden to his cottage; but it is by no means an improbable result from his holding an allotment in a field at a distance from his home, the letting and holding of which is in any way connected with the machinery of the Poor-law. We certainly participate in the apprehensions expressed in the debate of Wednesday night, that the bill would be the means of throwing the labourer on the waste land of the country to make up for the deficiency of his wages; or, what would be still worse, to justify a reduction of them below even their present inadequate amount. We quote a passage from the speech of Mr. Roebuck, because it points out this tendency, and at the same time gives an outline of the measure itself:—

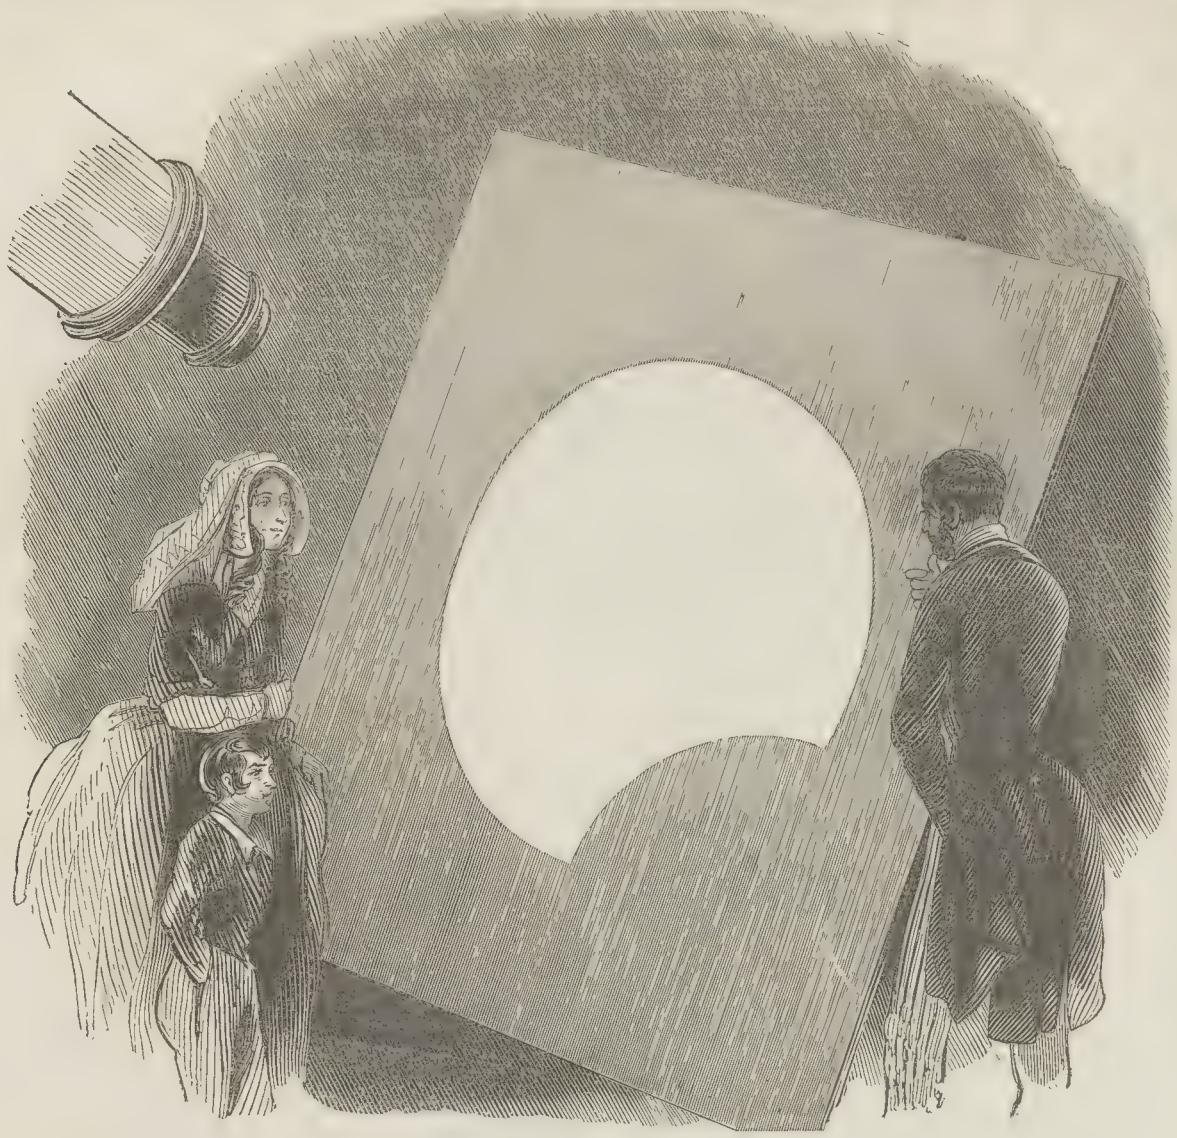
> The main object of the measure was to supply the deficiency in the wages of the labouring classes. (Hear.) It was a sort of supplementary poor law. It was an attempt to rob the poor under the guise of humanity. (Hear, hear.) And how did the hon. member propose to effect his purpose? He proposed to get a number of persons, inhabitants of a parish, together, any three of whom might call a meeting to take into consideration the means of enclosing the waste or common lands belonging to the parish. They then were to have the power of appointing field-wardens, who were to have power to take such land; and the bill went on to enact that these persons might take for this purpose "any land or ground belonging to such parish, or held in trust by the churchwardens thereof, or by the guardians of the poor, and which should not be already cultivated as parish lands." That clause alone would show what the true character of the bill was. It was not intended by the framers of it to touch the parish lands already under cultivation, for that would interfere with their own plan. But it was intended to take common or waste lands, or forest lands, and to lease them all out in the proportion of not more than half an acre for every householder in the parish, who should not be rated to the poor at £10. All this showed that the hon. member's bill was a substitute for the poor-rate.

We do not agree with the Hon. Member in the position he lays down, that the labourers ought to depend solely on their wages for subsistence; we think the land might be made to furnish something in addition to those wages; but we should protest as strongly as himself against any allotment system—field or garden—being made a substitute for wages or a reason for lessening them. There is some probability too, in the following anticipations of the consequences:—

> No doubt for the first three or four years there would be fancy fields looking like gardens, and apparently highly advantageous to the poor. Yes; but what would be the consequences? The population would be bound to the soil. The cottier system which prevailed in Ireland would become predominant in England, and the same unhappy results would spring from it. That bill was the first step towards introducing the ruinous and depraved method of dealing with the land which had produced such evil results in Ireland.

The Home Secretary has somewhat similar apprehensions:—

> He knew that small patches of land attached and close to the cottages on a farm would conduce in a great degree to the comfort and the happiness of the labourers, but this was a proposition of another kind. The land might be situated at a distance from the cottages; the cultivation might occupy much of the labourer's time, and there was much danger that the system would partake in a short time of the characteristics of the cottier system in a sister isle, which had contributed so much to the misery of the population there. He must also remind the hon. member of the persons who would be the fieldwardens in the agricultural districts. They were those who were the employers of labour; they were those who entered the market of labour for the purpose of obtaining labour, and they had a strong interest, both directly and indirectly, in reducing the wages of labour.



The fate of the measure is sealed; the courtesy of Parliament always supposes the best of motives to the originator of a proposal, and general practice gives him the opportunity of advocating it to a certain stage of his Bill; and then the extinguisher is quietly put upon it, and the whole matter is forgotten till the next Session.

But it is melancholy, nevertheless, to see these attempts to better the condition of the poor miscarry one after the other, knowing that that condition needs bettering so grievously.

ECLIPSE OF THE SUN.

THE ECLIPSE OF THE SUN, MAY 6.

The Eclipse of the Sun on Tuesday being announced as an "Annular Eclipse, visible at Greenwich," the people of the metropolis were much disappointed at not seeing the phenomenon when at its height, in the promised form of a "ring." It ought, however, to have been foretold as an eclipse only partially visible at Greenwich, where the obscuration of the sun's light commenced at 20h. 31m. ·3s., reached its greatest height at 21h. 36m. ·8s., and ended at 22h. 47m. ·3s. The central annular eclipse only passed over the places on the Earth's surface, whose positions are

The morning was unfavourable for the spectacle, and the advance of the shadow was the only part seen. About one-fourth of the sun's surface was shut from sight. The diminution of light and heat was very perceptible. The Surrey hills, viewed from London, became almost invisible; the birds in the suburban gardens sang their evening songs; the flame of a candle gave a distinct illumination in a room exposed to the sun's rays; and people of a poetic turn fancied that a "lurid light" was prevalent—and even ominous.

Our cut exhibits the mode of observing an eclipse of the sun practised by the fortunate possessors of large, well-mounted telescopes. A sheet of paper is placed in a line with the eye-piece of the instrument, and receives, instead of the retina in the eye of an observer, a reversed image of the sun. The same method is pursued in tracing the sun's spots.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

As all France is centralised in Paris, so all Paris appeared to be collected in one huge focus on the occasion of the Fête day of Louis Philippe. Amidst all the theatrical effects attempted by the political stage-managers, perhaps the most gratifying was the distribution of alms; and such a ragged, ulcerated, sickening sight as the recipients presented would be vainly attempted by any artist who may have passed a life in illustrating the subject of Lazarus and Dives; and yet, there was something even in this display truly French, and withal picturesque. Two theatres were improvised on the Champs Elysées, which were, of course, devoted to encouraging the barbarously bellicose propensity of the Grande Nation. Here figured Abd-el-Kader, like the Wilde Sarazon of the Ancient Mystery—surrounded by turbaned Turks and Bedouin Arabs—and groups of armed troops clad in gilt morocco; and then there was the Battle of Isly, in which all the Infidels were consigned to "immortal smash," and all the Frenchmen escaped scot free, without a wound, and covered with perennial glory. For the higher classes, there was a table spread in the Palace of the Tuileries for 100 covers: the scene was admirably arranged; and here, too, was given a grand concert; and the brass instruments of M. Saxe "blew a blast so loud and dread," as might have awakened the great Marshal Saxe out of his cerements. At this the Republican King, accompanied by the Royal Family and the Comte of Paris, came on the balcony, and bowed frequently and cordially to the "greasy million," who split the welkin with shouts of "Vive le Roi!" The whole extent of the Champs Elysées was one huge fair — all sorts of theatres and dancing booths and feeding booths covered the grounds. Many of the tents were elegantly decorated, and brilliantly illuminated, while the pyrotechnics—for ingenuity of design and brilliancy of effect—were superior to anything of the sort ever witnessed, even in this sky-rocket nation. The medical arrangements—you will smile, perhaps, at this—were really admirable; surgeons, with their assistants, armed with all their horrible paraphernalia, were stationed at various points, in case of accidents, resulting from the rush of the railroad carriages, which delivered their myriads into the heart of Paris: however, I have not heard of a solitary accident. A poor gunner, who was wounded on the last 1st of May, has received a plaster from the King, in the shape of 300 francs.

The Government seem determined to enlist all the intellect of the litterateurs in its interests. It has already spontaneously accorded the Legion of Honour to three of the most popular writers—De Balzac, Alfred de Musset, and Frederic Soulié. This has been presented to them unsolicited. The elevation of Victor Hugo to the peerage has increased the popularity of the Ministry, although I need not add, that those of the adverse faction seek to discover in these elevations matter for complaint, and assign motives which I much doubt ever entered into the minds of the advisers of these honourable distinctions.

Splendid banquets have been given by the Ministers. The one given by the Minister of Foreign Affairs to the members of the several diplomatic bodies, was presided over by M. le Marechal Sebastiani. This was a social congress—a true entente cordiale—no grasping but that of the viands—no overreaching but that of the wine-cup. The toasts of all nations were pledged in full bumpers, and speeches full of compliments issued from the lips of the world's representatives.

The annual sitting of the "Cinques Académies" came off on Saturday. I never remember seeing so strong a gathering. M. Halevy, the President of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, presided. His speech was really admirable. It possessed much spirit and lucidity, and was greatly applauded. The prize founded by M. le Comte de Volny was then contested: nine memoirs, printed and in manuscript, were then sent in, and the commission charged with their examination signalised the work of M. Pott, "The Bohemians in Europe and Asia." After the decision had been announced, M. Viennet, of the Académie Française, read some inedited fables, which I think possess all the elements to insure a lasting popularity: they are new, piquant, and the points are admirable. These created a marked sensation. And yet it would appear that there is but little original literary genius existing: talent there is plenty; but the principal aim of the literature of the day is to dazzle and surprise, and to enlist the senses without improving the sense or bettering the moral condition of the people.

Notwithstanding the absence of the true poetical sentiment in the French people, they act at moments and upon certain occasions with something which closely approximates to it. For instance, the old tomb of Abélard and Héloise, better known to your countrymen through the poetical letter of Pope than through the safe medium of history: well, this mutilated tomb, in the cemetery of Père-la-Chaise, has been restored and surrounded by a handsome grating. Whether this restoration tends to strengthen the sympathy for the "pretious scholar" and "his hapless mate," may be a question not easily answered. The cui bono is here not misplaced; but this meretricious pair of sentimental voluptuaries find a living echo in the thousands of fashionables that now daily flock to visit the "spot where their ashes lie."

Two thirds of the quidnuncs here have been in a perfect state of fusion for some weeks past, in consequence of a number of bricklayers, carpenters, &c., being employed in the gardens of the Tuileries. The general supposition was that a telegraph was being prepared for the purpose of communication with the Chamber of Deputies. The mystery has at length been solved, and, as is usual in such cases, its simplicity has completely foundered the political gobemouches. It appears that Napoleon had a subterranean passage built, which reached from the palace to the terrace which bounds upon the water. 'Twas by this his son used, with his nurse, to reach a small pavilion which the Emperor had erected; but which, during the Restoration, had been destroyed. This passage has been cleared and lengthened as far as to the stairs of the terrace, where the splendid statue of Cleopatra is to be placed, from the pedestal of which egress will be had. The Comte de Paris and the young princes who have been hitherto obliged, during the winter, to go to the Palace de Elysée Bourbon when they desired to take air and exercise, will have now a garden where they may enjoy their sports without going from the Tuileries. Thus a great deal of ingenious speculation has been wasted, and much valuable hypothesis scattered to the winds.

Thiers and Dupin have smashed the Jesuits. It is, I think, pretty well settled that the "Society of Jesus" will no longer be suffered to trail their slime over the hearthstones of France. Thiers was forcible but shallow; Dupin eloquent and logical. One sentence of Dupin's was admiraby conclusive. He said, "The Jesuits formed an ardent militia, ever armed to war with heresy. After the Jesuits, the Dominicans; after Jesuitism, the Inquisition."

Considerable excitement exists just now relative to some contemplated improvements in the present system adopted by the Mont-de-Piétés. The extent of business effected at these establishments far exceeds what generally is supposed. The yearly advances exceed upwards of twenty million francs, independently of renewed pledges. The advances which are made on pledges and articles retained reach to twelve hundred thousand francs. The great importance of such advances and returns, and the infinite interests concerned, are worthy the deepest monetary study.

FRANCE.

The Paris papers are not prolific of news this week. The debate on the arming of the fortifications in the Chamber of Deputies has been commenced, and although the Opposition journals are endeavouring to influence the public mind upon the subject, the chief excitement is among the newspapers. The Government will, no doubt, carry its proposals on the subject. Some attention had been directed to a speech of M. Arago, who opposed the measure on scientific grounds. The Débats, in allusion to it, says:—"M. Arago spoke of inundating the ditches, of barring the Seine at the Pont Neuf, and of the means of illuminating the environs of Paris from the heights of the ramparts—a fabulous mode, which should first be tried within the walls. He spoke of a steam gun which would fire so many balls within a minute, and the effect of which would be to render an assault against a town hereafter impossible; and many other subjects certainly highly interesting in the mouth of M. Arago."

The Débats then quaintly gives its opinion, that the result of the discussion will be to reduce the debate from the height of the observatory to the domain of reality.

Our Paris correspondent assures us that the health of M. Guizot has undergone considerable improvement since his retirement to Passy, and that no doubt is entertained that the hon. Minister will resume his official duties at the expiration of his congé. M. Villemain and M. Guizot walked arm-in-arm in the Bois de Boulogne on Sunday.

Monday being the anniversary of the death of Napoleon, masses for the repose of his soul were celebrated in twelve of the principal churches of Paris.

We are glad to say that tranquillity appears to be restored in Switzerland, A letter from Berne of the 29th ult. says that the Government has defeated the Opposition upon a motion for inquiry into its conduct, by a majority of 156 to 28. Argovia has agreed to the treaty with Lucerne for the ransom of prisoners.

The Chamber of Deputies, among other topics, has been engaged in a discussion raised by M. Thiers, respecting the Jesuits. The question at issue would appear to be the continuance of the Jesuits in, or their expulsion from, France; but the opponents of the motion represented it as a pretext of the Freethinkers and sceptics to mask their real object, which is said to be the destruction of the obviously reviving spirit of religion in that country. The topic was disposed of by a mere technical vote.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT AT LYONS.—A correspondent at Lyons has sent us an account of a lamentable accident, attended with the loss of twenty lives, which took place in that city on the day of the King's fête (the 1st inst.) from the crowding of persons on a bridge, to witness the fireworks upon the occasion. Our correspondent says:—"The bridge called the Pont de Pierre is a very strong old narrow bridge—it is not more I should say than eighteen feet wide, with immense strong stone walls on each side, something like the sides of London-bridge; this bridge is toll free, and is the principal thoroughfare from one side of the Soane to the other. The bridge, then, being facing the one for the display of the fireworks, was densely crowded with persons, as well as both banks of the river. A military officer, with whom I am well acquainted, and who is a much better judge of numbers than I am, calculated the number of persons present at eighty thousand—I thought there were more. After the fireworks were over the people began to disperse; those who lived on the right side of the river, but who were placed on the left, the better to view the fireworks, had, of course, in returning home, to pass this dreadful narrow bridge: the same occurred to those who lived on the left side of the river, but who had placed themselves on the right side. It therefore occurred that thousands and tens of thousands had to pass on their way home this fatal bridge. There is a small elevated foot-path on each side of the bridge, upon which only one person can pass. After a little time I contrived to get upon this path, and was nearly half way over, groping my way very slowly; in, however, about a quarter of an hour the bridge became completely choked up—it was impossible either to go one way or the other. The women became frightened, and many fainted; then commenced the horror—the dreadful struggle—the struggle for life: all at once a panic seemed to seize the people, many thinking that a portion of the bridge had given way, and there was some reason for thinking so, for part of the wall on one side of the bridge had been taken down to give facility to the workmen who are erecting a new bridge, close to where the old one stands; therefore there was nothing to save them from being pushed into the river; to those who did not know the real state of the bridge, this then might have given rise to the panic, or to the idea that the bridge had given way. All at once then this mass of people turned round, pushing with dreadful force to prevent, as I imagine, themselves from being pushed into the river; meeting those coming in an opposite direction, and forcing them back with dreadful confusion—the women, the children, the young girls, and the old men, fell in heaps, and were literally trodden to pieces; the feelings of those who have thus lost their friends or relations cannot be described, though I never once lost my presence of mind. To the honour of the French character be it spoken, that many of them thought more of saving others than of saving themselves; as it was, upwards of twenty persons were killed, many dreadfully wounded; many, I fear, were pushed into the river, so that the real loss of life cannot be stated: the houses near the bridge were filled with the dead and the dying. One poor gentleman, from Villefranche, lost his only son in a most dreadful manner, a very fine boy, his only hope—he was literally flattened, smashed to pieces; never will the recollection of this lamentable scene of the fête of Louis Philippe be effaced from my memory."

THE UNITED STATES.

New York papers to the 14th ult. have reached us by the ship Sea. Sir Robert Peel's reply to Mr. Polk's insolent message was not then known. The only fact worthy of mention in the papers is a serious conflagration at Pittsburg, which took place on the 11th. Nearly 1200 houses were destroyed, and the loss is estimated at ten millions. Much merchandise was destroyed, but fortunately there was no loss of life.

WEST INDIES.

The Clyde has arrived with the West India Mails. Her dates of departure are, from Honduras 20th March; Tampico, 26th; Vera Cruz, 2nd April; La Guayra, 3rd; Demerara, 4th; Trinidad, 5th; Barbadoes and Jamaica, 8th; Grenada, 10th; St. Thomas's 15th, and Bermuda, 20th.

It is stated that the settlement of the Sugar Duties has given satisfaction in Jamaica. The news of the most interest received by the Clyde relates to Mexico. The whole country is represented as being in a most unsettled and disturbed state. Nothing is yet decisive as to the ultimate fate of Santa Anna. He was still confined in the Castle of Perote, the existing Government being by far too insecure and on too fragile a footing to adopt any measures regarding his future destiny. Nearly the whole population are much disappointed in the advantages which they anticipated from the deposition of Santa Anna. They had begun to lose confidence in their present rulers. The mercantile community, in particular, were highly dissatisfied in regard to the promised alterations in the tariff, which had not yet been ceded to them. A large military force was ready to support any movement—in short another civil war was considered inevitable unless a more energetic government came into power. A plot had been discovered among a portion of the troops for declaring in favour of Santa Anna and a Federal Government: it was, however, suppressed for the present. Up to the date of the sailing of the Clyde the Government had not taken any steps in regard to Texas, nor could anything be learned as to whether it was probable a war would be declared against that country.

ARRIVAL OF THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The monthly Overland Mail has arrived from Bombay, brought to Suez by the Cleopatra. The dates are from Bombay to the 1st of April, from Western Australia to the 24th of January, from China to the 7th of February, from Calcutta to the 21st, from Madras and Delhi to the 23d of March. The news is not important. The troubles in the southern Mahratta country were over, a vast number of prisoners of the baser sort having been taken. The chiefs at length surrendered themselves. The troops are now nearly all withdrawn. The last detained detachments are hastening into the cantonments.

In Scinde matters in the main are peaceful. Sir C. Napier, with a force of 7000 men, still continues beyond the desert.

The troops will, in all likelihood, return as fast as possible to Sukhur. The hot weather was at hand, and they had been sorely pinched for want of provisions.

Another act of cold-blooded assassination has taken place in the Punjaub, Rajah Golab Sing, who had been surrounded at Jumboo by the state soldiery, commenced negotiations with his assailants, when vakeels or delegates were appointed to confer with him. These he treacheronsly massacred; and a good deal of bloodshed subsequently followed. The last tidings intimate the restoration of peace, but it is doubtful whether it will last long. The Governor-General continues at Calcutta, from which he cannot move till thh end of August. His Government is realising the expectation formed of it from the beginning, of being most perfectly pacific. Everything is tranquil throughout India. Cholera prevails amongst some of the Madras troops, but the health and condition of the people at large is satisfactory. The Bishop of Calcutta is obliged to return to England on furlough for the benefit of his health.

An express has arrived at Bombay, announcing the capture, by the Goa authorities, of Phonde Sawunt, the chief of the Sawunt Warree rebels, together with several of his adherents. He was wandering through the Goa jungles when taken. Their wives and families had previously been taken, and kept in custody in a large fortification near the powder works at New Goa. The Sawunt Warree refugees were confined in the fortress or convent of Reyes Magos, to the north of the Pangim river.

One of the good results of the establishment of steam communication between Calcutta and Singapore is the rapidity of intelligence. We have letters and papers from Singapore to the 6th of March. The principal news relates to the loss of the fine ship Inglis, belonging to Bombay, which got on shore on the 10th of January, near Anjeer. Every effort was made to save the ship and cargo: about a quarter of the cotton on board was saved. The captain (Isaacson) died some days after at Batavia, of anxiety and fatigue.

The news from China comes down to the 10th of February; it is not remarkable. There was a partial stagnation in business, arising from the holidays of the Chinese new year.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

FRAUDS UPON THE CUSTOMS BY LANDING WAITERS.—In the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH, on Tuesday, judgment was given in the case of Mr. Blake. The defendant, with an individual named Tye, had been found guilty of having conspired to defraud the revenue, by conducting their proceedings, as landing waiters at the Custom-house, in such a manner as to cause a loss to the Customs of about £8000 in the course of a year. The Court now sentenced the defendant Blake to be imprisoned for seven calendar months for one set of the offences of which he was charged, and seven more upon another set, making fourteen months in all.

BILL DISCOUNTING.—In the Court of BANKRUPTCY, on Monday, the case of Mr. Gibbs was disposed of.—The bankrupt was described as a money scrivener, carrying on business in Jermyn-street, but was, in fact, a discounter of bills to an immense amount, for noblemen, gentlemen, and gentlemen's servants, male and female, and an agent in granting the latter annuities, at large (promised) rates of interest.—Mr. E. James and Mr. Phinn appeared for the assignees, to oppose the application for his passing his last examination, on the ground of the extremely unsatisfactory state of his accounts, which even now left £37,000 totally unaccounted for.—Mr. M. Chambers supported the bankrupt's application; he was satisfied that the bankrupt's accounts were as satisfactory as he could render.—Mr. Commissioner Holroyd said that under all the circumstances of the case, he would permit the bankrupt to pass his final examination, reserving to the creditors and the Court the right of further dealing with the merits of the case when the bankrupt came up for his certificate, which he suggested should be done on an early day.—The 11th of June was then named.

MR. WARD AND THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.—In the COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, on Wednesday, Mr. Kelly obtained a rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue directed to the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the University of Oxford, to command them to restore the Rev. W. G. Ward, late a fellow of Balliol College, to the degree of bachelor of arts and master of arts in the said university, of which degree he had been deprived by the House of Convocation of that university. Mr. Kelly argued that the proceeding taken by the convocation was illegal, and therefore void.

YORKSHIRE CHESS ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of the Yorkshire chess-players will be held at Leeds, on Wednesday next, the 14th of May, when a field-day of unusual interest to the lovers of this delightful pastime may be looked for, as it is understood that in addition to the customary phalanx of strong players connected with the association, Mr. Staunton, with several amateurs from the metropolis, will be present.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

After the presentation of various petitions, the Duke of Buckingham inquired whether Chaplains of Gaols were authorised to withhold any statement made by a prisoner in gaol, referring to the recent case of Tawell.—The Duke of Wellington had no authority to answer the question, but understood by the Canon-law, that a clergyman is prohibited from revealing a confession, except in a case where it was necessary for the protection of his own life, or to prevent the commission of high treason.

The St. Asaph and Bangor and Manchester Dioceses Bill.—Earl Powis moved the second reading of this bill.—The Duke of Wellington opposed the bill, and moved, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—The Bishop of Bangor and the Earl of Winchilsea supported the bill.—A very long debate ensued.—The house divided, and the numbers were—

Majority against the second reading ———		32

The house did not adjourn till one o'clock this (Saturday) morning.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The following bills were read a second time, and ordered to be committed:—The London, Worcester, and South Staffordshire Railway (Dudley to Wolverhampton) Bill; the London, Worcester, and South Staffordshire Railway (Dudley and Sedgley Branch) Bill; and the London, Chatham, and North Kent Railway Bill.

The Surrey and Sussex Roads Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Glasgow, Barrhead, and Neilston Direct Railway Bill was read a second time and ordered to be committed.

The Bristol and Exeter Railway Branches Bill, after a few words from Mr. G. Bankes, was read a second time and ordered to be committed.

Maynooth College Bill.—Sir R. Peel moved the order of the day for the house to resolve itself into a committee on the Maynooth College Bill.—On the question that the Speaker do leave the chair, Mr. Hindley strongly protested against this bill passing into a law; it would cause the greatest dis content and dissatisfaction, both in England and in Ireland. He would enter his protest against the measure; and if any hon. member would second him, he would move that the committee be postponed for six months. (Hear.)—Colonel Sibthorp said he would willingly second any motion to get rid of the bill.—Mr. Plumptre spoke at some length against the bill.—Sir R. Peel said it was his determination to persevere with the bill. (Cheers).—After some further discussion, a division took place, and the house resolved to go into committee by 160 to 52. The house therefore went into committee.—Sir J. Hanmer moved the omission of the words which limit the trustees of Maynooth College in taking any real property with which it may be desired voluntarily to endow them.—After a long discussion, however, the amendment was withdrawn.—The whole of the clauses, with the exception of 10 and 11, were gone through.—Mr. Law then moved the omission of clause 10. On this the house divided. The numbers were—

For the clause	210
Against it	88
Majority for the clause		— 122

Mr. Law declined to divide upon clause 11, and therefore the whole of the clauses were agreed to.—The report was ordered to be brought up on Monday.—The house adjourned about midnight.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Auction Duties Bill.—On the proposal for going into committee on this bill, the Duke of Richmond moved that the bill should be committed that day six months. The measure, he said, was wholly uncalled for—would be a loss of over £300,000 to the revenue, and would not give the slightest relief to the agricultural interest, which, in justice, ought to be considered in any contemplated reduction of taxation. If the measure were to be debated as one of confidence, or the contrary, in the Government, he would be prepared to vote that, as regarded the agricultural measures of this session, he had no confidence in the Government.—The Earl of Dalhousie replied to the Duke of Richmond, and contended that the agriculturists would be extensively relieved in the way of indirect taxation, by the duties taken off sugar, coffee, cotton, &c., and that, as regarded the auction duties, justice demanded that a mode of taxation admitted to be unjust, onerous, and oppressive, should be abolished.—After rather a discursive debate, the amendment was rejected by 33 to 15, and the bill went through committee, as did also the Customs Duties Bill, and the Sugar Duties Bill.—The house adjourned about eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The Government of New Zealand.—In answer to a question from Captain Rous, Mr. Hope said that Captain Fitzroy had been superseded in the government of New Zealand, but not on any grounds connected with the charges made against him by the New Zealand Company, or at all affecting his personal character or honour.

The Maynooth College Bill.—On the motion for receiving the report on the Maynooth College Bill, Mr. S. Crawford moved an amendment to the effect that any state grants to religious sects was a violation of the rights of conscience, detrimental to religious truth, and dangerous to civil and religious freedom; but, after a long debate, when the division took place, only two votes were given for the proposition, and the report was received by a majority of 141.

The Irish Great Western Railway.—Some discussion took place upon a proposal that the promoters of the Irish Great Western Railway (Dublin to Galway) Bill be permitted to proceed with their bill, notwithstanding the report that the standing orders had not been complied with. Ultimately the motion was agreed to by 97 to 81.

Navy Estimates—The Slave Trade.—The house resolved itself into a committee of supply on the Navy Estimates.—Lord Palmerston drew the attention of the house to the alarming increase of the slave trade in Cuba and Brazil, and impressed upon the Government the necessity of active interference by destroying all the barracoons of the west coast of Africa; and at the same time insisting upon the liberation of all those slaves in Cuba who have been unlawfully detained in slavery in that island.—Sir R. Peel said he did not despair of seeing a cordial union between France and England for the suppression of the slave trade—a union which would be more effectual for that object than any other measure whatsoever. He would rather decline for the present giving any opinion respecting the state of the slaves referred to in Cuba; but he feared that the loss of General Valdez, as Governor of the Colony, had not as yet been adequately supplied. With respect to the proposal of destroying the barracoons, whether contrary to national law or not, he must say that he did not think they would serve their object by acting illegally. He thought it probable, however, that the consent of the native chiefs might be obtained for the destruction of these barracoons by negotiation.—In the course of the discussion that ensued, Sir C. Napier said that the only means of putting an end to the slave trade was by raising a regiment of a couple of thousand blacks in the West Indies, and taking them to the coast of Africa, which they should scour from north to south, destroying every place from which slaves were embarked. He did not know whether this was or was not contrary to the law of nations; but this he did know, that it was the only way in which the trade could be put a stop to. These estimates occupied the house till nearly one o'clock, when an adjournment took place.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The Parish of St. Stephen's, Walbrook.—The house only sat for about an hour, which was chiefly occupied in the presentation of petitions. Among them was a petition from the churchwardens and parishioners of St. Stephen's, Walbrook. They stated that the affairs of the parish had for a long series of years been conducted in the most unsatisfactory manner, and that they had now become a subject of public notoriety; that certain differences had arisen between the parishioners and Mr. Michael Gibbs, which had now resulted in a litigation of which no man could see the termination, and that in consequence of this the church of St. Stephen's, Walbrook, was falling into ruins, and that no adequate provision was made for the payment of the officers of the church, including the respected rector. Under these circumstances the petitioners prayed that some general Act might be passed by which the rights and property of the parish might be adequately protected without recourse to so much wasteful litigation.

The following bills were read a third time and passed:—The Customs Imports Duties Bill, the Auction Duties Bill, the Sugar Excise Duties Bill, and the Colonial Passengers Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

There was not a sufficient number of members present at four o'clock to form a house.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

New Member.—Mr. Fitzgerald took the oaths and his seat for the county of Tipperary, in the room of the late Mr. Otway Cave.

The Corn-Laws.—Mr. Villiers postponed to the 20th inst. his Corn-Law motion.

Condemned Sermons.—In reply to a question from Captain Polhill, Sir J. Graham stated his belief that the course pursued on a late occasion by the Sheriffs of London, with respect to the admission of the public to the chapel of Newgate during the condemned service, had been adopted in consequence of misapprehension. He had thought it his duty to direct a prison inspector to proceed to the gaol of Newgate, and to institute a rigid inquiry as to the whole course of proceedings both on the Sunday and on the morning of the execution. He had not yet received any report from the inspector of prisons, but when the evidence was laid before him he should not object to lay it on the table of the house. His opinion was that it would be desirable to introduce some legislative enactment on the subject.

Mr. Mazzini.—Sir J. Graham, in answer to Mr. Bouverie, said that he had caused inquiries to be made about the truth of the accusations which he had brought against Mr. Mazzini, on the faith of the report in the Moniteur. He had caused inquiries to be made of the judge who tried Ribiero and Capriolo in 1833, and of the public prosecutor who had conducted those trials. Their answers to the inquiries made were full, explicit, and direct; and they stated that no evidence was produced at the trial which inculpated Mr. Mazzini in the least. Had he known at the time he made the original statement, the fact that Mr. Mazzini brought an action against a newspaper for repeating the charge, and much more if he had known what the impression of the judge who tried Ribiero, and that of the public prosecutor were, he would never have made the statement he did. He now thought it due to Mr. Mazzini to make the only and the best reparation in his power, namely, that the retractation should be as public as the accusation. This statement was received with loud cheers.

Physic and Surgery Bill.—Sir James Graham moved the committal, pro forma, of his Physic and Surgery Bill, in order to allow him to make amendments in it, which he fully explained to the house. He now proposes that there shall be three colleges—the College of Physicians, the College of Surgeons, and the College of General Practitioners. He proposes, likewise, to amend the Apothecaries Act, and to obliterate every vestige of that system of apprenticeship which he conceives to be injurious and degrading to the profession. He proposes also to maintain the Council of Health in its present form, taking care that the general practitioners shall be represented in it, and that for this purpose two members of the College of General Practitioners shall be members of the Council of Health. The University of London is to be represented at the Council of Health either by its Chancellor or its Vice-Chancellor. After much discussion the bill was committed pro forma, and the proposed amendments introduced; the future stage having been moved by Sir James Graham for the 9th of June.

The house sat till nearly one o'clock, but nothing of interest occurred.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Royal Assent.—The Royal assent was given by commission to the Sugar Excise Duties Bill, the Auction Duties Repeal Bill, the Customs' Duties Bill, the Companies Clauses Consolidation (England) Bill, the Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill, the Lands Clauses Consolidation (England) Bill, the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill, the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill, also to several private bills. Some conversation took place upon the propriety of making some regulations for the management of railway bills, and the house adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

Irish Railways.—A long conversation took place upon a motion of Sir G. Grey, for a Select Committee to inquire and report whether any and which of the standing orders which are enforced in the case of Railway Bils in Great Britain are unnecessary, and ought to be dispensed with in the case of Railway Bills in Ireland. Some hon. members proposed to rescind the decision to which the house had come on the Great Western (Ireland) Railway Bill, but no step was taken upon it, and the motion of Sir G. Grey was agreed to, and the Committee appointed.

Call of the House.—Mr. Hume gave notice that he should move a Call of the House on Thursday, the 22nd.

Mr. Hutt then brought forward his motion, that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a resolution for admitting corn, the growth of Australia, at the same duty as that of Canada.—A long debate followed, which was closed by Sir R. Peel and Lord Howick.

On the division the numbers were—

For the motion	94
Against it	147
Majority against the motion		— 53

The house then adjourned at half-past eleven.

Peebleshire Election.—Mr. Mackenzie, the new Lord of the Treasury was re-elected for Peebleshire, on Monday, without opposition. He explained the course he had pursued upon the Maynooth question, and vindicated his consistency thus:—I always voted against the small grant, because I thought it was too small; but I over and over again declared, and my friends knew my opinion, that if a larger grant had been proposed, I would have voted for it; and therefore, I hold, I have not been guilty of any inconsistency in voting for a larger grant now. I voted against the small grant, because I thought it did mischief; I voted for the larger grant, not because I was certain it would do better, but because I think the experiment ought to be tried.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The eve of Whitsuntide is not remarkable for much holiday demonstration: in the coming week all the world and his mother will be merry-making: in the present, the circle of pleasure only afforded a small segment for the select. But that was eminently piquante: quite an Olympic bourse bouche: the Chester race meeting. Of its sports, its crossing and jostling, and other matters of the like sort, essentially appertaining to it, we shall come to speak presently; first, offering our desultory notes and comments on the old City, the quaintest assemblage of bricks and mortar in Great Britain, or, probably, in the great globe itself. Horace says, it was not everybody's luck to go to Corinth in his time—and as, despite of railways, there may be people who have never seen Chester in ours, it is really doing them good service to tell what sort of a place it is. Suppose they should stand in need of such information, and seek it in Brookes's Gazetteer for instance, what do you suppose they would find there? That it is "the principal port of embarkation for Ireland," which is as near the fact as, that Primrose-hill is the spot from which we receive the principal supply of native oysters. Indeed, if the sea ever did visit the neighbourhood, it must have made its last call about the period when the crustacea removed from the vicinity of Highgate and Hampstead. The peculiar character of this queer old place centres in its ways, topographically, not moral—the latter being those of cathedral towns in general; that is, conspicuously excellent. But its pathway is a thing quite out of the common way; a contrivance that puts to shame all that has ever been said or sung of the chivalry of politeness. It is neither more nor less than this, that the inhabitants have thrown open their first floors for the accommodation of the whole human family. The citizen of Chester provides a street in front of his residence, for the passage of carriages, and carts, and quadrupeds, as is the custom in all civilised communities, but he scorns to put his brother on a level with these. For his convenience, he confiscates his personal pride and circumstance, and gives him his drawing-room for a trottoir. If this be too abstruse for Cockney comprehension, let our City friends imagine the state apartments of Devonshire House substituted for the Piccadilly flags, and they will have some idea of the scale on which pedestrianism is conducted on the banks of the Dee. Here, however, it is fit to observe—to prevent mistakes—that the populace of this most courteous of burghs share with their fellows the passions that all flesh is heir to. Once upon a time, we were present at an election within its walls, and happened to arrive at the bridge just as a party of free and independent voters had thrown General Grosvenor's carriage over the battlements, and were cheering the equipage as it floated down the river. Naturally we inquired why they had done so? and received for answer, "Because they thought the General was in it!" We take it that, as a sample of our apology, this is unique.

They have a belief in Cheshire that, in the event of a drought, there would be a specific for it in the announcement of racing on the Rhoodee. So far as individual experience enables us to form an opinion, the persuasion is well founded: we have rarely or ever assisted at a meeting on the course, without being convinced that waterproof clothing is a mere affair of imagination; an invention that laughs science to scorn. Of course it rained during the present anniversary, and as hard as it could during the Cup race, by way of climax. The races began on Tuesday, and concluded yesterday; but the whole interest was absorbed by the event aforesaid, which took place on Wednesday. In the good old times, the Cup used to be a good old family affair, for which the neighbouring nobility and gentry having race horses sent them to race, as a point of etiquette. Now they have changed all that; and if there be one issue on the turf more "miscellaneous" than another, it is the Chester Handicap. To crown all, on Wednesday last, it was won by a "cock-tail"—but this is jumping to a conclusion. Being a matter of more suspicion—to use parliamentary language—than any yearly put upon the course, it commands more patronage of the ring than any, not even the Derby excepted. In quality, the Epsom books may be the heaviest, but in quantity, the speculation on the Trades' Cup would be found to have the pull. This year it was prodigious: not less than fifty horses were publicly backed for it, and when it is had in observanee that the winner was never mentioned in the market, nor any where else till the day, what a harvest it must have been for the "legs!" The occasion drew together the whole world of racing, amateurs and professional; and the hour of four drew to the post a field of twenty—by no means keeping the word of promise to the hope or the eye. Lord George Bentinck, as usual, was fugleman—a post for which he is peculiarly qualified. Excellent well did he marshal his troop—and at the signal of the lowered flags, off they went like rockets. The race was run all through with great severity—all through which a half-bred giving weight to many good thorough-breds of his year—had the best of it, and won in a canter. Here is a problem for your turf philosophy. Intrepid, the winner, last year ran ten times, including two walks over—and was beaten for but four of his engagements. He carried 6st. 6lb. as a four-year-old, but nobody ever thought about him, and he was at 40 to 1 at starting! Thus was the greatest sporting issue of the racing season of 1845 decided in favour of an animal with the ignominious title of a "cock-tail." To such complexion does the science of handicapping bring the mighty of the turf. The conclusion of the Cup race was the signal for the tens of thousands to take to their heels, as if the gentleman in black was entitled to the hindmost. "And wherefore this hot haste?" inquires the reader. Because in the race week every man, woman, and child, at Chester, adopts as a motto and a social compact, the last words of Marmion!

Chester Cup.—Mr. Gully has claimed the race on the ground that Intrepid is thorough-bred, and the stakes are withheld. The proof rests with Mr. Gully.

AQUATICS.

The 24th, 25th, and 26th of June have at length been fixed for the Royal Thames Regatta.

Royal Yacht Squadron.—The season for this distinguished club promises, from the number of yachts entered, to be the most brilliant witnessed for several years past. There are at present at the grand rendezvous upwards of 100, and several new ones approaching towards completion.

Royal Thames Yacht Club.—The Earl of Fitzhardinge has presented this distinguished club with a silver cup, value £50, to be sailed for by yachts the property of members, and in the contest to be manned and steered by them exclusively. This match will be an amateur one indeed. The 17th of June has been fixed for the contest.

Wednesday.

This being the all-important day of the week on which the "Tradesmen's Plate" or "Cup" was to be decided, it led to the customary excitement in and about Chester, and although the morning was unfavourable, from slight but refreshing showers, the multitude who poured into the ancient city exceeded all calculation, and when congregated on the course presented a coup d'œil of extraordinary interest. The race was over at half-past four, up to which time the "decisions" were as follows:—

The Two-year-old Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each. Five furlongs.

Lord G. Bentinck's Princess Alice	(Whitehouse)	1
Mr. J. O'Brien's The Traverser		2

The Tradesmen's Plate of 200 sovs, added to a Handicap of 25 sovs each. Twice round, from the Grosvenor Post to the coming-in chair. One hundred and twenty-three subs.

Won in a canter.

Death of Admiral Sir David Milne.—We regret to announce the death of this distinguished officer, which took place on Monday morning, on board the steam ship Clarence, which was then on its way from London to Edinburgh.

Festival of the Sons of the Clergy.—On Thursday the anniversary Festival of the Sons of the Clergy was celebrated at St. Paul's. Owing to the announcement that his Royal Highness Prince Albert would be present, the attendance was exceedingly great. Amongst the stewards on the occasion were his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Marquis of Waterford, Viscount Beresford, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, &c., &c. Full choral service, accompanied by the organ, was performed, and at the conclusion, the committee, stewards, and others, repaired to Merchant Tailors' Hall, where the annual dinner took place.

PORTRAITS OF EMINENT LIVING PAINTERS.

J. M. W. TURNER, R.A.; WILLIAM COLLINS, R.A.; DANIEL MACLISE, R.A.; FRANCIS GRANT, A.R.A.

Art is never more the subject of conversation in the London circles of fashionable life than it is from the first Monday in May to the close of the Royal Academy Exhibition. Have you been to the Academy yet? Have you seen Mr. Turner's Landscapes, or Mr. Grant's fine portraits? or what do you think of Collins or Maclise? are the questions that are regularly put to you; and all who love art exhibit a laudable curiosity to know what the men are like who continue to attract and deserve attention. "I would rather," says Johnson, "have the portrait of a dog I know, than all the allegories that were ever painted;" and we are so much of Johnson's way of thinking in this matter, and enter so earnestly into the pleasing topics of conversation at this time, that we have had four of our great painters' portraits expressly taken for this paper, that our readers may see what four of our great artists are like, who still continue to advance the glories of their calling.

Joseph Mallord William Turner (better known as J. M. W. Turner) was the son of a hair dresser in Maiden lane, Covent-garden; and sent his first work, a "View of the Archbishop's Palace, at Lambeth," to the Royal Academy Exhibition of the year 1790—five-and-fifty years ago. His very early works gave no great promise of after excellence in his art. They were views, for the most part, of the exteriors of celebrated buildings—"The Palace at Eltham," "Malmesbury Abbey," "Gate of St. Augustine's Monastery, at Canterbury," "West Entrance of Peterborough Cathedral," "Tintern Abbey," "Lincoln Cathedral," varied occasionally by a "View on the River Avon, at Bristol, near St. Vincent's Rock, "The Interior of a Choir," "A Rising Squall," or "The Pantheon in Oxford-street on Fire." He first sought his subjects at sea in the year 1797, when he sent to the Royal Academy Exhibition of that year his "Fishermen Coming Ashore at Sunset Previous to a Gale," and his "Fishermen Becalmed Previous to a Storm." He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in the year 1800, and to the Exhibition of the following year he sent one of his very finest works—"Dutch Boats in a Gale—Fishermen Endeavouring to Put their Fish on Board." A vacancy occurring in the ranks of the Academy Mr. Turner was at once elected a Royal Academician. This was in 1802, and his pictures of that year justified the honour—"Fishermen upon a Lee-Shore in Squally Weather," and "Ships Bearing Up for Anchorage." Tired, for a time, of fishermen and the sea, he took to other subjects, and exhibited his well-known views of "Edinburgh from the Calton Hill;" "Falls of the Rhine at Schaffhausen;" "Pembroke Castle," with a thunder-storm about it; and, still more ambitious, "A Country Blacksmith Disputing upon the Price of Iron and the Price Charged to the Butcher for Shoeing his Pony;" "The Unpaid Bill, or the Dentist Reproving his Son's Prodigality;" "The Deluge;" "Dido and Æneas;" "Dido Building Carthage;" "Apollo and Python."

Mr. Turner is equally distinguished for the excellence of his oil pictures and his water-colour drawings. He has the art of poetizing everything by throwing a cloud, or a rising mist, or a setting sun, with now and then a thunder-storm, or a rainbow, over the whole of his composition. But in his early style his "Fishermen at Sea;" his picture in the Bridgewater Gallery; his "Guard Ship at the Nore" (in Mr. Wadmore's Collection), are better of their kind than any of his after productions we can name. Mr. Turner is an artist upon peculiar principles. It is either the fashion to admire him altogether, or to condemn him at a glance. The feverish glare of his present style—that systematic defiance of every kind of principle in art or appearance in nature—still continues to find admirers; and a book has been written of late, and it is a clever one, wherein every excellence in landscape art is found pre-eminent in Mr. Turner. He is the very William Blake of living landscape painters. Let us not forget, however, his "Italy, a Composition," or some of those circular views of Venice he takes so much delight in painting—while we condemn the exaggeration of his art, and call to mind his "Jessica at the Window." He is a great painter, and may be seen on his throne at Mr. Windus's, at Tottenham.

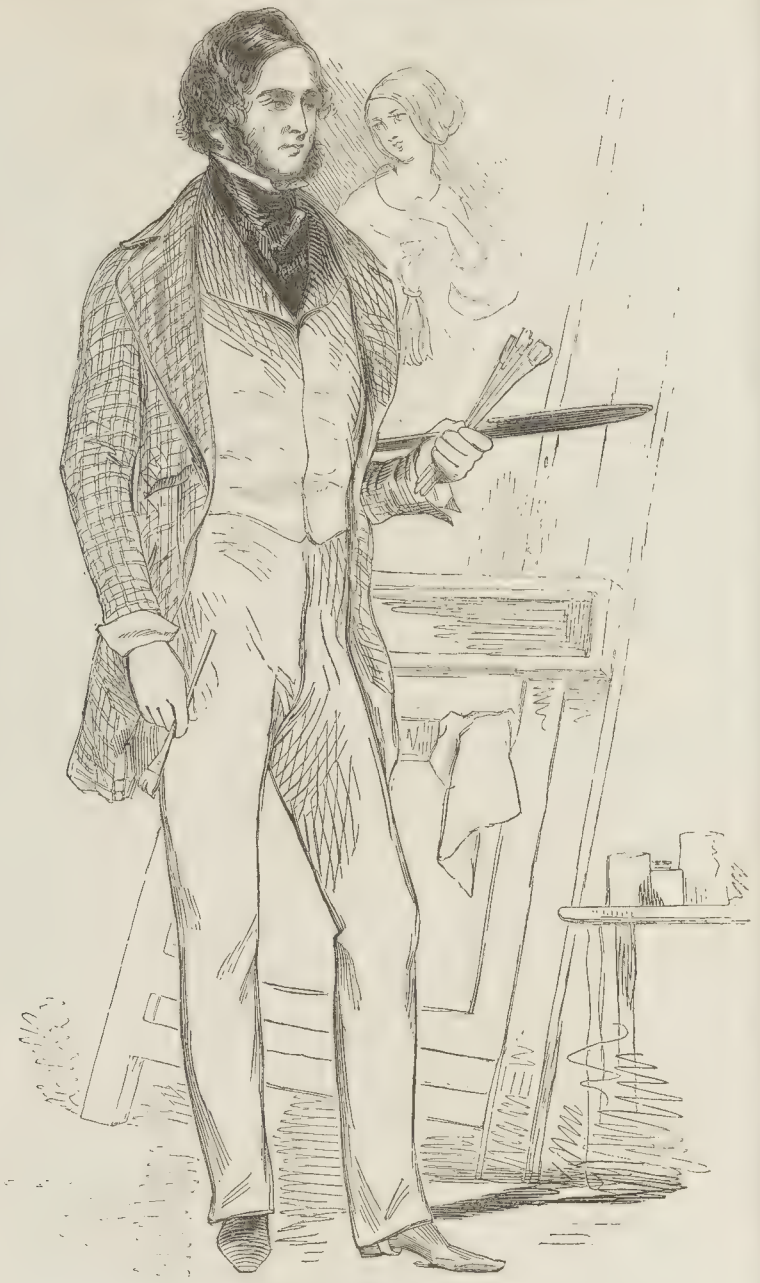
William Collins was the son of a painter and picture dealer of the same name, and sent his first works to the Royal Academy exhibition of the year 1809—"Boys at Breakfast," and "Boys with a Bird's Nest." One of his early works—"A Country Kitchen,"—a performance of the year 1811, may be seen in Mr. Sheepshanks' collection. It is a little hard, but the detail and execution are quite capital.

We may associate the name of Collins with everything that is pleasing in rural life—Children picking hops—Children gathering blackberries—and Children examining the contents of a net—with everything too that is connected with the life of a fisherman on the sea-coast. His "Fishermen coming ashore before Sunrise," his "Young Shrimp Catchers," and his "Fishermen on the look-out." He has been and still continues a most admirable painter. But we prefer the finish of his early pictures to the style he now indulges in. Mr. Collins was elected an Associate of the Roya Academy in the year 1815, and a Royal Academian in the year 1820.

Daniel Maclise was an exhibitor for the first time on the walls of the Royal Academy in the year 1830, when Mr. Turner had been before the world for forty years. His early works were chiefly portraits—a little hard, but characteristic and clever. We remember his portraits of "L. E. L.," and Campbell, the poet, with a great deal of pleasure. In 1832 he exhibited his "Puck Disenchanting Bottom;" in 1833, his "Snap-apple Night, or Allhallow Eve in Ireland" (since engraved); in 1834, his "Installation of Captain Rock;" and in 1835, "The Vow of the Peacock." The Peacock was a clever picture; a little exaggerated, perhaps, in style, but full of the germs of future excellence; and so thought the Academy, for he was elected an A.R.A. soon after. In 1836, he exhibited his "Macbeth and the Weird Sisters;" in 1837, his "Lady Sykes;" in 1838, "Salvator Rosa painting his friend Masaniello," and that charming illustration of "The Vicar of Wakefield," "Olivia and Sophia fitting out Moses for the Fair." The visitors to the Exhibition of 1839 will recollect his jovial representation of "Robin Hood;" and the visitors of the year 1840, "the Banquet Scene in Macbeth," the "Scene from Gil Blas," and "Malvolio, in Yellow Stockings, and Cross-gartered." To the Exhibition of 1841, Mr. Maclise sent his "Sleeping Beauty," and another incident from "The Vicar of Wakefield," "Hunt the Slipper, at Neighbour Flamborough's;" to the Exhibition of 1842, "The Play Scene in Hamlet (in Mr. Vernon's collection); to the Exhibition of 1843, "The Actor's Reception of the Author," from "Gil Blas;" and to the Exhibition of 1844, a "Scene from Comus," for the Queen's summer-house at Buckingham Palace.

Mr. Maclise is a young man, and has yet only played and trifled with his strength. He is destined for great things; but he must work hard, and give himself time, for the race is not always to the swift. He is deficient in the perspective of space, and has yet to acquire a good eye for colour; but he has great dexterity of hand, with a fertile fancy, and a fine imagination. We look forward to his fresco in the July Exhibition, at Westminster Hall, (now near at hand), with the highest expectation.

Francis Grant first sought public approbation, as a painter, in the year 1834, by the "Breakfast Scene at Melton," in the Royal Academy Exhibition of that year. It attracted a good deal of attention, but artists passed it by, and critics overlooked it, as something with which Art had nothing to do. His early works found favour in the eyes of all who are interested in the turf. In 1837, he exhibited "The Meeting of his Majesty's Stag-Hounds on



W. COLLINS, ESQ., R.A.,

Ascot Heath;" in 1839, "The Melton Hunt," with some six-and thirty portraits in it; in 1840, "The Queen on Horseback," attended by Lord Melbourne and the Lords in Waiting; and, in 1841, "A Party at Ranton Abbey, the Shooting Lodge of the Earl of Lichfield," the last of his works in his first style, for about this time he began to feel his strength, and the portrait of Lady Glenlyon, in the Exhibition of 1842, established his name as an artist of the highest excellency in that branch of the art. He has since performed wonders; and, in the present Exhibition, carries the palm away, for female portraits, from all competitors. No one can come near him. He paints a female face with all the delicacy of Sir Thomas Lawrence, and inserts a background with all the warmth and frankness of Gainsborough His Miss Singleton is a charming three-quarter portrait—lady-like and unconstrained in action, with a sweet expression, and most admirably coloured. "The Two Sisters," are however still better—portraiture rising into ideality; while parts of his "Master Fraser on his Pony"—the head of the boy especially—cannot but command our warmest admiration.

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

This is the seventy-seventh Exhibition of the Royal Academy since its formation, in 1769, and the eighth since its removal to Trafalgar-square. It is, on the whole, an average Exhibition. We remember many better within the last twenty years, to say nothing of a prior period, when Lawrence bewitched us with his female portraits, and the works of Wilkie required a railing before them to keep an admiring multitude from doing an unwilling injury to a work of art. We have seen a better Exhibition within the last five years, for the present one is much in the condition of the Irish people, suffering extremely from the system of absenteeism. Landseer, with his hands in the brick and mortar of a new house, has found time, and that barely too, we are told, for a single picture. Eastlake, engaged in the duties of more than one office, falls back on the "Comus" of a former year; and Mulready, engaged constantly in drawing on wood, rummages his studio for a picture he had by him—painted fifteen years ago! and the crayon sketch of a subject already familiar to us in the finished picture; while Maclise, busy with his fresco, for the July Exhibition, in Westminster Hall, has lacked leisure for any other work. Now that Wilkie is no more, we can ill put up with one subject and one only from the fascinating pencil of Edwin Landseer, while a sketch from Mulready, however excellent, can ill repay the spectator, who expects a finished work from the hand he has so much reason to admire. Critics, it is true, are easily disappointed, and an admiring public perhaps expects too much. Why should Landseer paint so little, Eastlake and Mulready remain so idle, and Maclise disappoint us altogether?

The council has assigned the place of honour in the present exhibition to the single work of Edwin Landseer—a picture without a name, a kind of "Good Shepherd:" a commission, it is understood, from Sir Robert Peel. In the right hand part of the picture is seen a rude figure in stone of Christ on the Cross, and before this figure a "Good Shepherd" is represented kneeling, with his flock of sheep around him, and his dogs not far distant, by his cap and crook. The story is, therefore, very small—the sentiment and execution everything. It is really a very fine picture, though the sheep, in dexterity of touch, are hardly equal to the well-known picture of "The Tethered Ram," and the stone cross and figure are a little too large for the surrounding portions. The "Good Shepherd," however, is beyond all praise, a stretch of pinion beyond Mr. Landseer's usual flight, from which we may augur well of his success hereafter in the higher branches of his calling.

Mr. Eastlake's picture has all the usual excellences, and all the year-after-year deficiencies of his style and treatment—nay, more, it is hardly equal to "the height of that great argument" he has chosen—the noble conclusion of Milton's "Masque of Comus." Pure and refined in its conception, and careful in its execution, it yet wants that presiding something which would place it at once in the regions of high art. The painter is scarcely spiritual enough for the poet whose conception he embodies, and we have, moreover, a repetition of the same ideal excellence of face unworthy of the inventive powers of Mr. Eastlake's pencil. The winged boys want the spirituality of Sir Joshua's circle of winged heads, now under Mr. Eastlake's charge in the National Gallery, and the hands of the female figure (Psyche, we suppose) are of too fleshy a substance, and, what is more, of too large a size for the possessor.

Mr. Etty deals, as before, in Loves and Graces, dipped in the colours of the rainbow, and fresh from a banquet of Provence roses. "Come to me and I will give you flesh," was the cry of a wild MacGregor to an eagle that soared above his head in one of his native fastnesses. Come to me and I will give you flesh, Mr. Etty might make his cry to the Loves and Graces of poetic fancy, for no one can paint flesh as he can paint it. He has here a subject from L'Allegro—"Zephyr with Aurora Playing," for he has got tired of "Comus" for a time. Mr. Etty has a frolic pencil, and this is one of the best works we have lately seen from his hand. Eastlake and Etty combined, would make one great painter. The purity of the one would keep down the occasional impurity of the other, and Etty's colour would give a glow divine to the cold clay-like execution of Mr. Eastlake's pencil.

Mr. Howard (R.A.) is here again in one of his unhappy dotages—it is pleasant, however, to see, that if he has lost his early mantle, it has fallen on the shoulders of one who wears it with a becoming grace. The "Sabrina" of Mr. Frost is a fine conception of Milton's meaning in his Masque; well grouped, full of fine feeling, and in parts very delicately painted. At first sight it will pass for a Howard, before

> That sprightly ease
> Which marks security to please had altogether left him. But Mr. Frost must not remain content with the fame this picture will acquire him; he must forsake, moreover, the servile paths of imitation, and fly a flight hereafter with unborrowed wings.

Mulready's little picture is excellent in its way, full of fine colour, and full of character, indicating a story rather than telling it. A boy is seen seated at a table, with an illustrated edition of a "Big Ha' Bible" before him. He has a child on his knee, represented in the act of starting forward with a childish exultation of constrained delight—we say constrained, because the boy alone keeps the child from leaping altogether from his knee. All the little accessaries are admirable—the fire with the ample pot upon it, the chimney-piece with the painted figures on its shelf, the back of the person who is taking in the bread at the door—all are happy. It is really, we add again, admirable in its way.

Collins has a picture embodying a humorous incident, and called in the catalogue, "Fetching the Doctor." A boy has just alighted from the back of a rough shaggy pony, at the door of a villager, Dr. Locock. He has knocked, and the Doctor has come down with a light in his hand to hear what he has to say. The expression on the boy's face, as seen by the effect of the Doctor's light, is most excellent. Nor is the Doctor's face without those extraordinary torturings of muscle, produced in all our faces when newly awakened from a heavy sleep, and at an unusual hour. The whole story is well told, and the painting firmer than is usually observable, in the later style of this admirable artist.

Leslie has a small picture, called "The Heiress"—representing a well-proportioned room, furnished in the purest taste, with two female figures seated, and a third in her walking dress, who has newly entered the room, followed by a page with a letter on a silver tray. Story there is none, but the taste is excellent, and the several parts throughout are painted in the finished style of an old Dutch painter. Articles of elegance abound about the room, and a full length figure of a man, by Van Somér, is seen on one part of the wall, and a three-quarter portrait in a wig, by Sir Godfrey Kneller, in another. The young lady, "The Heiress," is very lovely, and is supposed to be tormented with offers. This is a superior picture to the scene from "Molière," by the same artist, hanging here as a pendant to it, but which, if we recollect aright, we have seen before in Mr. Sheepshanks' keeping.

Mr. Webster, who has acquired the name, from the frequency of his school subjects, and the skill with which he treats them, of "Do the Boys Webster," has here a "Dame's School," fully equal to the well known "Frown" and "Smile," in the collection of the late Mr. Knott, and now, since the sale, at Christie's, in Mr. Bicknell's keeping. It is full of incident, and differs throughout from every other picture of a village school that we can call to memory. The child repeating her lessons to herself, and the little girl wholly intent at learning to thread a needle, are pictures within a picture. We have but one fault to find, and it is a very small one, though of some moment in our eyes. Why did he put a cane in the hands of the school mistress? Shenstone gives her a bird, and describes the children when out of school as shaping, in their fancies, a tree before the door into village rods, and "tingling at the view."

We must own to having felt a good deal of disappointment at the pictures by Sir William Allen in this year's Exhibition. His "Nelson at Cape St. Vincent Boarding the San Nicolas" is poor and petty in its style and treatment; and his "Peter the Great Teaching his Subjects the Art of Ship-Building" a little too showy in its action for the Czar, who worked as a common shipwright. But the Russian faces in the picture carry the stamp of their nation about them, and Allen has here been equal to himself.

"The Duc de Biron," of Mr. Lance, has the merit of telling its own story, without the aid of words. The incident in the picture may be new, however, to many of our readers. The Duke, enraged at the contents of a letter he has received from the Duke of Savoy, crushes the letter in one hand and grasps his sword, in the act of vowing vengeance, in the other. His sister, who is standing by, seizes his arm, and reminds him that the King (Henry IV., of France) whose life he seeks, had saved his life, at the battle of Fontane-Française, with this very sword. This is an affecting incident, and Mr. Lance has made the most of it.

Mr. Leitch's landscape, engraved for our present number (a view in the kingdom of Naples, near Ournelo Contrada di Sora) is a charming picture, in the manner of the late Sir Augustus Callcott. Nor has Mr. Leitch lost sight in the picture before us, of Unwins and Penry Williams. The figures are cleverly disposed about the foreground, and the story—a kind of Halt—is appropriate in every part to the surrounding scenery.

We shall return to the Royal Academy Exhibition in our next week's number. A careful examination is required for anything like criticism, and such has been the crowded state of the rooms during the present week, that incivility was almost necessary to get one near a picture of any name.

FIRE NEAR TEMPLE BAR.—On Wednesday morning, shortly before two o'clock, a most alarming fire broke out upon the premises, in the occupation of Mr. Martin, a tailor, No. 3, Bell yard, Temple-bar, a very narrow and densely populated neighbourhood. An instant cry of "fire" was raised, and after considerable trouble, the inmates were aroused from their slumbers. The flames, however, had obtained the complete possession of the shop, and they were ascending with fearful violence up the staircase, thereby cutting off all means of escape to the numerous persons in the house, by the regular means. Several persons quickly made their appearance at the upper windows, bewailing in a most piteous manner their distressed condition. A blanket was instantly procured, and being held by some of the neighbours, one or two children were thrown from the second floor, and were received in the blanket below, without receiving any personal injury. The fire escape from the police station was brought up soon after, when three or four other parties effected their escape by jumping from the upper windows into it. The firemen were not able to extinguish the flames before the shop and its contents were destroyed, and the staircase and upper part of the building were severely damaged.

CHILD DROWNED IN A WASHING-TUB.—On Tuesday Mr. Baker held an inquest at the Wellington, Cornwall street, St. George's-in-the-East, on the body of Sarah Smith, aged three years. It appears that the deceased was a fine healthy child, and on Friday evening she was playing by herself in the yard, in which was a washing-tub of clear water. Feeling herself thirsty, she attempted to drink from the vessel, when she overbalanced herself, and fell into the tub head foremost, and was drowned. She was discovered in five minutes afterwards by a little boy six years old, who pulled her out, and although means were used for upwards of an hour to resuscitate the body, they were of no avail, life being extinct.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Son of Ink," Ipswich.—We do not know the date when the "nick" was first cast in printing type; in all probability, it was an early improvement; for "it is one of those pretty contrivances for saving labour which experience has introduced into every art, and which are as valuable for diminishing the cost of production as the more elaborate inventions of machinery."

"A Two Years' Subscriber," near Penzance.—The "Flute Preceptor" and the song in question may be obtained, by order, of any music-seller.

"Pittore."—Mr. Ackermann, 96, Strand, purchases drawings of artists. Our rate of remuneration for contributions varies with their merit.

"X. Y. Z."—The London and Birmingham Railway runs by a tunnel at Kensal-green, north of the Cemetery.

"J. J.," Liverpool.—The subject suggested has been omitted for want of room.

"T. O.," Bishopsgate-street Without, will see by our present number that we are not unmindful of "the many poor of Great Britain and Ireland."

"A Subscriber," River-view-terrace.—It is not usual to divulge the authorship of anonymous contributions to periodicals.

"Rara Avis."—We shall be glad to engrave our correspondent's namesake, on the arrival of the specimen.

"John Harrison."—See No. 88 of our journal for a description of the Atmospheric Railway.

"H. M."—"James's Novels" is correct; the possessive s is only dropped when the noun ends with double s; as "righteousness' sake."

The Editors of the "Bromley Magazine" are thanked for Nos. I. and II. of their miscellany, the staple of which is by the pupils of Mr. Rawes's Academy; the papers on botany are excellent.

"E. L.," South Wales.—The present circulation of the journal in question is within 3 or 400 of 25,000 copies.

"Allegro," Dorchester.—The concluding number of our present volume will be published on June 28 next; the Index, Title-page, &c., will be given with the first number of the next volume.

"A Constant Reader," West Malling.—St. George was adopted as the patron of soldiers by the English Crusaders, for the succour which he was supposed to have afforded them at the siege of Antioch. As such, Edward III. made him patron of the Order of the Garter; and he thus gradually became considered as the patron of chivalry, and the tutelar saint of England.

"Sweepstakes."—Not at present.

"L. M. N."—The ingenious author of "The Bible in Spain" is, we believe, in good health.

"D. S.," Glasgow.—The first Waverley Ball was given in Edinburgh last spring; and on July 8, a similar fête was given at Willis's Rooms, St. James's.

"A Well-wisher."—We are ever anxious to gratify "the fair portion of our readers;" but the list of drawing-room dresses would occupy more room than we can possibly spare.

"A Correspondent" is thanked for the sketch of the Stulz Monument, which shall appear anon.

"J. A."—The account of the six-oared match at Eton reached us too late for insertion.

"Hibernicus" is thanked for the hint.

"Vicesimus."—Dr. Elliotson's work on Physiology and Anatomy is a first-rate production.

"G. C.," Middleton.—The charge for our journal is 6s. 6d. per quarter, paid in advance.

"A. M. S."—Trafficking in presentations to Christ's Hospital, by receiving money, or other consideration, by an order of Court, dated Jan. 8, 1830, disqualifies the child named in the presentation, from being admitted into the hospital; and any Governor implicated in any part of the transaction will for ever be disqualified from granting a presentation. We do not find the name in question in the Post-office Directory.

"Melksham."—Laughing and talking in church are highly indecorous, though reproof from the pulpit may subject the clergyman to the charge of eccentricity.

"J. O. R. N.," Sheerness, is thanked for the sketch of the vessel: a few details would be also acceptable.

"Podex" is too oracular.

"T. W.," East Smithfield.—The Duke of Wellington completed his 76th year on Thursday week.

"J. A. S.," Poole.—The necessity of residence is superseded by license.

"J. H.," Llangollen.—Chess is unexceptionable. Tomlinson's "Amusements in Chess" is an excellent first book.

"J. N. A.," Prudhoe.—Order of any bookseller, price 3s., coloured, in a case.

"M. N. O.," Yorkshire.—St. Giles's Church, Camberwell, will be found described in Nos. 90, 135, and 139 of our journal.

"Y. B." should apply to the Income-tax Commissioners of the district.

"A Subscriber" should consult Senefelder and Raucourt's Treatises on Lithography, both translated into English.

"A Wanderer" is thanked for the sketch.

"J. R. H.," Ryde.—We already have a correspondent in "the island."

"Sarah Harrop," Chester.—The "Cyclopædia of Practical Receipts."

"A Tailor," on reaching the metropolis, will readily meet with a work on "The Art of Cutting."

"G. J. R.," Corfe Castle.—The sketches have been omitted for want of room.

"E. H.," Ipswich.—We have no intention, at present, of engraving the Custom House.

"H. P."—Mr. Bunn's address is Theatre Royal, Drury-lane.

"W. H. C.," York, begs to inform a correspondent that Hogarth's print of the March to Finchley, in 1745, with the S left out of the title of the King of Prussia, is valuable; very few having been worked from the plate before the error was discovered.

"Caddis."—The common trout has been found weighing as much as 15 lbs.

"A Regular Subscriber."—A divorce can only be obtained by Act of Parliament, the expense of which is great; the time depends on the nature of the evidence.

"J. H.," Bilston.—The Camera Obscura may be seen at the Adelaide Gallery, or Polytechnic Institution. The other exhibition named is closed.

"F. S.," Huddersfield.—Mr. Carus Wilson's case has already been detailed in our journal.

"Y. T." wishes to ascertain whether levees were not, prior to 1821, held at Dublin Castle on Sundays, exclusively.

"C. J. G."—The second named Assurance-office.

"Frank Johnson," Stamford.—The central span between the piers of the Hungerford Suspension Bridge is 676½ feet, being 110 feet wider than the Menai Bridge. See our last number.

"A Subscriber," Plymouth.—The title is given by virtue of the office.

"J. S. T.," Carlisle.—The person would, certainly, not be eligible to the office named.

"T. H. W.," Bermondsey.—The emoluments are too varied and uncertain to be enumerated.

"Beppo," Cork.—"Rococo" is antiquated, old fashioned.

"Gipsy Queen," St. Columb.—The mistletoe is found on other trees besides the oak; the apple, for instance.

"A Correspondent," Stamford.—The price of the Paging Machines varies from £60 upwards, and £30 per annum for the use of the same to the patentee.

"A Constant Reader," Derby, should consult an agent for patents.

"A Foreign Lady, and an Old Subscriber."—The engravings will appear shortly.

"B. B."—The dewlap is the loose skin that hangs from the coat of the ox, &c.

"Zaccheus."—The triple leg on the reverse of the Manx halfpenny is the arms of the Isle of Man, substituted for a ship, on the Scots obtaining possession of the country, with the Western Islands. These arms are Gules, three armed legs proper, or rather argent, conjoined in fess, at the upper part of the thigh, fleshed in triangle, garnished and spurred topaz. It is said of the three legs, that with the toe of the one the islanders spurn Ireland, with the spur of the other they kick at Scotland, and with the third they bow to England. The Latin legend implies wherever it falls it will stand.

Monument to the Duke of Sussex, Kensal-green.—The stone was supplied by the Haytor Granite Company, from their Fogginton Quarry, Dartmoor, Devon: the top stone weighs eight tons, and the other four about fifteen tons; total, upwards of twenty-three tons.

"V. Z."—"Quoad Sacra," is as to sacred things; but the meaning of the phrase depends upon the context. The quotation was misprinted, and is not sense. "Macdonnell's Dictionary of Quotations" is a serviceable work.

MONEY MARKET.—The Railway List enclosed to us, by a correspondent, is one of the most clear and readily to be understood that is issued. It is impossible to simplify anything so plain.

ANOTHER MANIAC.—On Wednesday afternoon, a respectably-dressed man, having the appearance of a mechanic, was observed by the police chalking, in large letters on the pavement, between the fountains in Trafalgar-square, the words "Napoleon for ever!" Upon being desired to desist, he refused, and they immediately proceeded to take him into custody, when he broke from their grasp, and threw himself into one of the reservoirs. The water was, however, too shallow to drown him, and the police having drawn him out he was carried to the Gardener's-lane station. He is supposed to be insane'

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1845.

THE Court of Aldermen has been compelled to take notice of the loud expression of the disgust of the public, at the late scene in Newgate, and of the discussion it has caused in Parliament. At the meeting of the Court on Tuesday last, some explanations were given by the parties immediately concerned, which had the effect of placing the matter in a worse light than before; inasmuch as everybody confessed to the grossest negligence in the discharge of their duty. There have been two orders issued by the Court itself, against the practice of admitting the public to the chapel of the gaol—one in 1825, the other in 1842; but, with a mode of doing business, peculiar, we should think, to the Corporation of London, the first order was never communicated to the Governor of the prison—the very person of all others who ought to have known it—and the second was never sent to any of the Sheriffs who succeeded those of the year in which it was issued! We should like to see the Merchant's or Banker's establishment in London, in which such bungling and neglect would be tolerated for one moment; and we should like also to be informed, why the business of the public, for which these officers receive honours and emoluments, cannot be as well attended to? There seems to have been the most superb indifference to anything like duty on all hands, though the Town Clerk is kind enough to take the greatest share of the blame upon himself. The statements of the Sheriffs, in explanation of the affair, are as extraordinary as all the rest of the transaction. Mr. Sheriff Hunter acknowledged "the propriety of the observations that had been made in the High Court of Parliament;" and that "the Sheriffs were gratified with the interference ordered by the Secretary of State into the whole matter." As those observations contained an exceedingly strong condemnation from every speaker, of the conduct of all concerned, it is strange that Mr. Sheriff Hunter's colleague should assert, immediately after the above acknowledgments, that "the Sheriffs did not admit they had committed any act of which they were ashamed;"—that "everything that had been done, was done after due reflection, and advisedly; and that he defied any one to say that they had done anything wrong. All that had been done, he was prepared manfully to defend." This is chivalrous certainly, but does not appear to be "absolute wisdom." What is wrong, is wrong; all the defending in the world will not alter its character, and if it was done "advisedly, and after due reflection," it is just so much the less excusable. But we are happy to think that the end of these abuses is near at hand. A conversation took place in the House of Commons, on Wednesday evening, which pretty well settles the matter; in answer to a question on the subject from Captain Polhill, Sir James Graham said, after touching somewhat lightly on the disregard by the Corporation authorities, of their own regulations—

> He was bound to state, as to the former part of the subject, that his attention having been painfully called to great irregularities on the preaching, not only of the last condemned sermon, but also on the morning of the execution (hear, hear), he had, in the exercise of the power vested in him as Secretary of State under the Prisons Act, directed one of the principal inspectors to proceed to Newgate, and to institute a strict and rigid inquiry into all the transactions that occurred, both on the Sunday and the morning of the execution. That report, founded on evidence, he had not yet received, but when it was, he should be prepared to state his opinion to the House; but his present impression was that, founded on that report, some legislative interference would be necessary.

An Act of Parliament will, we hope, put an end to these disgusting exhibitions of religion degraded for the gratification of a depraved curiosity, for an act cannot be set at defiance even by the Corporation of London; and the penalties of breaking it may serve to remind them of it, if another fit of forgetfulness comes over them. But we trust that Sir James Graham will go further than the City of London, and not legislate for Newgate only; we hope the measure will be general, and apply to every prison in the kingdom, restraining, in express terms, the attendance at executions to the Sheriffs and the officers of the prison; the public and the press, which is but the public represented, ought to be rigorously excluded, and, for its own credit, the journals of England ought to give every support in their power to the Home Secretary, if he brings forward such a measure, and to urge him to originate one, if he does not. We dismiss the disagreeable subject, with the following description given by Alderman Copeland, of the detestable sort of excitement that the possibility of getting admittance to such scenes creates:—

> There was a morbid appetite to witness those exhibitions, and the importunities upon such occasions exceeded anything the House could possibly conceive. Upon the trial of Hocker, and subsequently at his execution, the importunities the magistrates of the City of London received from persons of all classes of the community, not only for seats to hear the trial, but to be present at the execution, were beyond anything that could be conceived.

The Court of Justice must be open and free, for the publicity there is a safeguard; but the chapel and the cell, when the prisoner stands within the darkness of the shadow of death, are no places for the intrusion of a callous and indifferent crowd. Let the doors be shut, and the entrance forbidden; when admittance is impossible, the desire to be admitted must cease, or, at all events, remain ungratified.

WHATEVER may be the immediate cause of the dreadful catastrophe at Yarmouth, the accident furnishes another proof of what we have before had occasion to make some remarks on—the utter helplessness of an English crowd in any situation of danger. The complete ignorance of the great mass of people of those physical and material laws—the penalty of violating which is death or mutilation of the most horrible kinds—is absolutely afflicting; nothing more completely proves our deficiency in the matter of general education. It would be scarcely credible were it not supported by the evidence of more than one person, that between the first sign of the giving way of the Suspension-bridge and the fall itself, time enough elapsed for all upon it to have escaped! But no one understood that first fatal sign; the "noise," that was to so many the sentence of death, only caused "laughter," as if the failure of the fastenings on which all their lives depended was an excellent joke, second only to the miserable exhibition that assembled them! How slight a knowledge of the construction of such a work would have enabled them to comprehend the warning; but all was careless ignorance. We believe the same thing would happen under the same circumstances in any part of England—nowhere sooner than in this great Metropolis. The sailor does not laugh at the cracking mast or the parting cable, on the strength of which his existence depends; the peasant of the Alps does not laugh at the signs of the falling avalanche; it is not courage that can be careless, and "laugh" at such moments; it is merely that pitiable ignorance of which we have so often to lament the effects, but as a nation, take no means to dispel. We cannot expect a pleasure-seeking crowd to be all philosophers; but a moderate degree of reflection would often show them the risks they run. If any one wishes to see an example of the perils of ignorance, let him go to one of the landing-places of our river steamers, on a fine summer Sunday or holiday. The cupidity of the owners of these vessels, and the indifference and carelessness of the authorities, are admirably seconded by the total inability of the London holiday makers to see when they are in danger and when not. It is a common thing to see a boat loaded with at least four times the number that the natural law in virtue of which she floats, will safely permit. A breaking crank, the slightest panic, with cause or without, the smallest rush to one side or the other, and the whole mass would go to the bottom in a hideous scene of shrieking and despair; the entire city would then ring with the "Appalling Accident," the Coroner would be busy, and the penny-a-liners and the papers would make a fortune by the event.

The happy ignorance with which the Cockneys embark in an already over-crowded boat amounts really to something remarkable; not a suspicion crosses them that they are courting their own destruction, and that they escape it by no merit of their own. We have seen seamen who had many times crossed the Atlantic exhibit dismay at the spectacle of the rocking and swaying mass; the smart linen-draper's shopman would think it a want of "pluck" to show any such apprehension; but the Tar is right and Titmouse is wrong; one knows the danger from being able to comprehend the circumstances; the other's indifference is not courage but ignorance. Till some fatality as great as that at Yarmouth occurs on the river we do not expect the Government or the City will take any means of protecting the people against the consequences of their own carelessness. It is melancholy to think that in the recent case most of the victims might have escaped had they had but ordinary perception of the danger impending over them; perhaps it may do some good if we thus point out the perils that the same ignorance and carelessness are exposing people to in the other.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

WINDSOR, THURSDAY EVENING.—(From our own Correspondent.)—It having been arranged for the Court to proceed to Claremont on Saturday, some of her Majesty's carriages and horses have been commanded to leave the Royal Mews on that morning, for the use of the Queen and the Prince Consort during their short stay in Surrey. According to present arrangements, her Majesty and his Royal Highness will leave the Euston Station, on the line of the South Western railway by a special train, for Gosport on Monday morning, proceeding thence in the Lightning, Government steamer, to Osborne House, and returning the same afternoon. The object of the Royal visit to the Isle of Wight is for the purpose of inspecting the extensive alterations and improvements now in progress in the vicinity of her Majesty's newly purchased marine residence at Cowes.

BUCKINGHAM PALACE.—The Queen had a concert on Monday evening at Buckingham Palace. The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, arrived at half-past nine o'clock. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent (attended by Lady Anna Maria Dawson), and the Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden (attended by Baroness de Strumfeder and Baron de Schreckenstein), arrived shortly afterwards. Later in the evening, Prince Ernest of Hesse Phillipstahl, Prince George, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, and Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, arrived. The general company were ushered into the Picture Gallery. At ten o'clock, the Queen and Prince Albert were conducted by the Lord Chamberlain and the Lord Steward to the saloon, which had been fitted up for the concert. The Royal Family and the other distinguished visitors followed, and the performance commenced. Supper was served in the dining-room.

THE QUEEN'S LEVEE.—Her Majesty again held a Levee at St. James's Palace on Wednesday, at which numerous presentations took place. Their Royal Highnesses the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince George, and their Serene Highnesses the Prince of Leiningen and Prince Ernest of Hesse Philippstahl, attended the levee.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE ISLE OF WIGHT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert intend proceeding to Osborn House, her Majesty's late purchase at the Isle of Wight, on Monday next, going down to Gosport by special train on the South-Western Railway, and embarking from the Royal Clarence Victualling Yard on board the Lightning steam tender, which vessel is ordered round from Woolwich specially for the purpose of conveying the Royal party to the island. Her Majesty's stay at Osborn, we believe, will be short, the only object being to inspect the arrangements being made, and to determine on such new alterations and improvements in the house, barton, and estates, necessary and befitting the marine residence of the Sovereign.

THE QUEEN DOWAGER'S JUVENILE PARTY.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager gave a juvenile fête on Monday afternoon, at Marlborough House. The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, arrived from Buckingham Palace at a quarter past four o'clock, and were received at the garden entrance by the Queen Dowager, attended by her Ladies in Waiting and the Vice Chamberlain. The Prince of Leiningen accompanied her Majesty and Prince Albert. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Prince George, and the Princess Mary, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburgh Strelitz, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, her Royal Highness the Grand Duchess Stephanie of Baden, were also present. A select party of the nobility had been honoured with invitations. The Queen and the Queen Dowager were seated in the centre of the elevated seats, and the other visitors having entered the hall, les Danseuses Viennoises performed their dances under the direction of Madame Josephine Weiss. The Royal and august party were served with refreshments, after the performance, in the dining-room, and other apartments.

THE PRINCESS DONNA ANNE OF PORTUGAL.—Her Royal Highness Princess Donna Anne Maria of Portugal, aunt of the Queen of Portugal, has arrived in London. The Princess is in her 39th year, and married in 1827 the Duke de Loulé.

THE COUNTESS OF JERSEY'S GRAND BALL.—On Tuesday night a magnificent fête dansante was given by the Countess of Jersey, at the family mansion in Berkeley-square. It was by far the most numerous congregation of the nobility that has taken place at any private assembly this season, several members of the Royal Family, many of the leading members of the corps diplomatique, and above 500 of the nobility assembling at her ladyship's invitation. The ball was given in celebration of the birth-day of Lady Clementina Villiers.

CHRISTENING OF THE SON OF THE MARQUIS AND MARCHIONESS OF DOUGLAS.—The christening of the infant Earl of Angus and Arran, son of the Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas, took place on Tuesday, in the presence of a select circle, in St. James's Chapel, Paddington. After the ceremony all the company present returned with the Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas to their residence in Connaught place, where a déjeûner was served. His Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar was present.

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGE.—A marriage, which has been some time in contemplation, will be solemnised on the 26th inst., between Viscount Lovaine, eldest son of the Earl and Countess of Beverley, and Miss Drummond, the daughter of Mr. Drummond, of Albury Park, Surrey.

HER MAJESTY'S FANCY DRESS BALL.—This splendid fête is definitively fixed to take place at Buckingham Palace, on Friday, the 6th of June. A portion of the invitations have been already issued from the Lord Chamberlain's Office. The period selected for illustration by the costume worn upon the occasion is that from 1740 to 1750. The era intended to be illustrated is that of the second George exclusively. The following may be taken as a general description of the dresses at the period referred to. The prevailing materials used in the full dress female costume were white velvet or white satin of the richest description, elaborately embroidered. The bodies were made extremely deep, the lower portion of the dress being set out by a hoop. Brocade dresses were also very much in vogue at this period. The ladies wore small, coloured shoes, with high heels, and the hair was of course powdered. The gentleman's dress of the period consisted of a velvet doublet with large deep flaps, the whole richly embroidered. The waistcoat generally of white satin, embroidered in gold, extended half-way to the knee, and the breeches were made tight of the same material as the coat. The stockings reached to the top of the leg, and were generally rolled down just above the knee, below which they were fastened by an ornamental garter. A cocked hat, buff boots with high heels, and a powdered wig, completed the attire. None of the guests invited to participate in the fête can appear at Court unless their costume is fully identified with the period specified in the cards of invitation.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY. May 8th.

TRINITY COLLEGE.—Mr. George O. Edwards, of Framlingham, has been chosen Westminster Scholar by the Master of this College. The very Rev. John Lamb, D.D., Dean of Bristol, and Master of Corpus Christi College, has been just appointed to the Vicarage of Olveston-cum-Alveston, Gloucestershire; value £799.

OXFORD.—TRACT NO. 90.—At a meeting of the Board of Houses and Proctors, held at Oxford, on Monday, the Board came to a resolution, "That a formal censure upon the tract need not, under existing circumstances, be brought before Convocation."

THE LATE CONDEMNED SERMON.—At a Court of Aldermen on Tuesday, some conversation took place upon the subject of the censure cast upon the Sheriffs in reference to what took place at the condemned sermon preached to Hocker. The Lord Mayor, after defending the Corporation, said he had never been present at an execution, except upon one occasion when he was Sheriff elect. That was at the execution of Courvoisier.—Mr. Sheriff Sidney was sure the Sheriffs were most anxious to pay deference to the proper authorities; but he was anxious it should go forth that the Sheriffs did not admit that they had committed any act of which they were ashamed. He therefore hoped opinion would be suspended until a report was made to the Secretary of State.—Sir Peter Laurie, by way of illustrating the diseased sympathy felt for criminals, said there was at present in Bethlem Hospital, a man who had been tried and acquitted on the ground of insanity. [Sir Peter Laurie was here supposed to allude to the case of Oxford, who fired at her Majesty in the park.] He would not mention the man's name, but he pledged his honour to the fact, that a lady of title was anxious to procure that individual's autograph, and, upon being refused the favour, she actually employed a solicitor, who was well known, to obtain it for her.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A letter from Vienna states that a violent storm burst over that city on the 24th ult., accompanied by so much rain as to cause an inundation. Several persons are said to have perished.

A letter from Toulon states that the Emperor of Morocco was, at the date of the last accounts, earnestly endeavouring to capture Abd-el-Kader. The brother of the Emir, Sidi Said, who had been sent to Fez to calm the anger of the Emperor, had been killed there, some accounts say by order of the Sovereign, others that he fell a victim to the populace.

We learn from Athens, under date of the 19th ult., that news had been received in that city that 2000 Turkish troops had arrived on the frontier of Phthiotis, a district in Thessaly. A body of Palicares entered Patras, thinking that the town had risen, but was disarmed by the public force. Another band had suddenly appeared in Doris, where it had attacked the village of Vitirnitza. The conspiracy, which had fortunately been discovered, is stated to have had extensive ramifications. Another vessel had been seized at Patras, loaded with gunpowder, and sailing under Ionian colours.

Letters have been received from Buenos Ayres to the 26th of February, by which it appears that the Government of Buenos Ayres had issued a decree prohibiting all vessels from discharging at that port which had on any pretence whatsoever touched at Monte Video on their way up the river. The decree was to take effect on the 1st of March last.

The German papers mention that M. Liebig, the celebrated professor of chemistry at the University of Giessen, has discovered a mineral substance, which, when combined with guano, will produce one of the most fertilising manures known.

According to a letter from Rome the guillotine has lately become of more general use in the Papal states; several executions had recently taken place in the provinces, and on the 18th ult. a young man, only 23 years of age, was executed for the crime of murder. This young man had been sentenced to death some time ago, for a murder committed a few years before, but in consequence of his youth he had been pardoned, his sentence being commuted to a term of imprisonment. His execution was for the murder of an attendant in prison.

The Duke of Sussex steamer, belonging to the New Commercial Packet Company, was wrecked off Boulogne on Saturday night, in consequence of having sprung a leak. The passengers, upwards of 20 in number, and also the crew, were happily saved. The captain succeeded in running the wreck ashore. The occurrence took place near the spot where the Amphitrite was lost in 1833. There is scarcely a portion of the ship which is not strained, and many of her planks are started. She is a very old vessel.

Advices from Batavia, of the 20th of December, make mention of accounts having been received there of fresh troubles in the high country of Padang. Troops were at once dispatched to the scene of disorder, and had made themselves masters of the district. The latest correspondence announced the destruction of some villages by incendiaries.

A grand banquet is to be given to the leading members of the Cabinet, and a large party of the Conservative Peers, on the 17th instant, at Goldsmiths' Hall.

The branch railroad from Woking to Guildford is completed, and has been opened to the public.

The Journal de Constantinople of the 16th ult says: "The Sublime Porte has just come to a decision, in virtue of which ten commissions are named to visit the provinces of the interior, for the purpose of receiving the complaints and demands of the inhabitants, inquiring into the wants and resources of each locality, and collecting with care information calculated to enlighten the Government, and enable it to adopt efficacious measures to ameliorate the condition of the country, secure the welfare of all classes of the population, open new modes of communication, encourage agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, create useful and charitable establishments, and render education general, &c."

The papers received by the West India mail mention that the first Jamaica railway is progressing rapidly towards completion; and it is satisfactory to learn that the fifty men sent out from England to carry out the undertaking, have all continued in exeellent health, although exposed daily to the sun's rays, and working the line through a marshy district, where miasma must necessarily prevail.

According to the Frankfurter Journal, the official reports of the damages caused by the recent inundations in Bohemia contain the most disastrous accounts. Five districts in particular have experienced immense losses. In that of Leitmeritz alone not less than 40 villages were destroyed. Out of the 170 houses in the village of Kehl, not one was spared; and half of the hamlet of Lieben, principally inhabited by Jews, was carried away. A century will scarcely suffice to repair the damage.

The portion of the northern railroad which runs between Paris and Amiens is so nearly finished, that it is expected to be opened within two months at least.

The Diet at Coblentz has declared in favour of the protective system of commercial policy. It appears that the visit of the King of Prussia has been postponed.

Among the many new things that steam brings from abroad are new potatoes, some of which have been brought by the steamer Clyde, from Bermuda.

The Berlin correspondent of the Frankfurter Journal states that the Court of Wirtemberg and the head of the house of Hohenzollern are in treaty respecting a matrimonial alliance between the Crown Prince of that kingdom and a Russian Princess.

According to a letter from Alexandria the youngest daughter of the Pacha of Egypt is to be married to Kaimeel Bey, one of the Pacha's aide-de-camps. A French house at Marseilles received from the Pacha an order for a handsome necklace, which they have sent out, the cost of which is not less than 200,000 dollars. The postal convention with Egypt has not been ratified.

The Commerce states that the accounts of the famine which continues to prevail in the district of Arva, in Hungary, are filled with details truly horrible. Men and beasts are living on the same aliment, and lately, on a surgeon of Zazrira making a post mortem examination of the body of a young man who had died of hunger, he found in the stomach a quantity of undigested hay.

It appears from the investigation by Mr. Law, of the Insolvent Debtors' Court, into the affairs of Mr. C. Matthews, that the estate will pay a dividend of about 6d. in the pound.

A New York paper, by the last arrival, states that General Jackson was in such a dangerous condition, that his death was hourly expected.

The Journal des Débats publishes a letter from Alexandria, which states that "a commission sent to Egypt by the Russian Government in the year 1843, to study the important question of the possibility of disinfecting by the effect of heat objects contaminated by the plague," has completely succeeded in its object. It is no longer permitted to doubt that heat is one of the most effective agents of disinfection, and one of the most easy of being carried into effect—a fact calculated to modify essentially the quarantine regulations.

A letter from Lucerne of the 1st gives an account of a curious sentence, at Nidwald, upon a Lieutenant Nermaun, who had joined the Free Corps in the attack upon Lucerne. He is condemned to stand in the public market-place for four hours with a rod in his hand, then to be flogged with it, and afterwards to be imprisoned for six months, during which time he is to receive "religious instruction."

A Stockholm letter, of the 22d ult., announces the return of the King of Sweden, and states that immediately after arriving at the palace he dissolved the Regency appointed to act during his absence. It appears to be decided that the King of Prussia will pay a visit to the Royal Family of Sweden in the course of the summer, and that the Queen's brother, the Duke de Leuchtenburg, will arrive about the same time with his august consort.

A letter from a clergyman at Berlin, states that M. John Rongé, of the German Catholic church, has been murdered by the Roman Catholics; that they have shot him.

A letter from Warsaw, of April 25, states that the Emperor of Russia has published a Ukase, declaring that all Jews must lay aside their costume, and assume the national one. No one can escape from the effects of this decree longer than for five years from the present time, and even then only by paying a sum of money.

It appears from the official list of petitions that the number presented up to the present time in favour of the grant to Maynooth was 46 only, signed by 15,483 persons, whilst there are no less than 7629 petitions against the proposed endowment of that seminary, signed by the enormous number of 982,862 persons.

The breaking up of the ice in Canada has been attended with sad results. Such has been its movement over the falls of Niagara, accompanied by a strong north wind, that the Niagara river was completely blocked up. The damage is not far from 100,000 dollars.

The Bishop of Rochester has, it is said, purchased the seat of Mr. John Round, M.P., Danbury-place, Essex. The purchase-money is stated to be £26,000. The timber, furniture, and fixtures to be taken at a valuation.

The Courrier Français announces the death of a former member of the Council of Five Hundred, M. Chabert, Lieutenant General on the retired list at Grenoble, in the 87th year of his age.

M. Boyer Fonfrede, brother to the illustrious Girondin, beheaded in the revolution, died at Bagneres de Bigorre, on the 2nd instant.

A letter from Barramquilla (near Carthagena) dated March 15, gives an account of an awful catastrophe which occurred on the plains of Maraquita, two days' journey this side Bogota, at the head of the Magdalena. A part of one of the snowy mountains gave way, and a torrent of snow, mud, gravel, &c., overflowed the plains for six square leagues, burying everything under it. It is said, at its first outbreak, to have topped the highest trees, and that a thousand souls have perished.

A silver fountain of extraordinary magnitude and exquisite workmanship, intended as a present to Mehemet Ali from the East India Company, has just been completed. It is upwards of ten feet high, and contains 10,400 ounces of silver. It is richly ornamented with fruits and flowers.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE APPEARANCE OF THE CROPS.—We find from the provincial papers received during the week from all parts of the country, that the appearance of the crops is highly promising and satisfactory, the late rains having produced an almost magical effect upon the face of the lands.

FATAL FIRE AT FAVERSHAM.—Shortly after midnight on Wednesday week, a fire was discovered in the house of Mr. Payne, a baker in Faversham, and in an adjoining house occupied by a person named Sims. On an alarm being given, the occupants of both houses were speedily got out; but a servant girl of Mr. Payne, had returned to the house for something to cover her, and was suffocated by the smoke. The body was found in the morning but slightly burned. Upon inquiries being made by the agent for the insurance companies, and other official persons, Sims, the occupant of the house adjoining that of Mr. Payne, was taken into custody on a charge of setting fire to the premises. A coroner's inquest has been held, the result of which was that a verdict of Wilful Murder was returned against Charles Sims, who, who, it appeared from the evidence, had set fire to the premises, by which the deceased met her death.

FIRE NEAR SITTINGBOURNE.—About ten o'clock on Sunday night, a fire broke out in the stabling belonging to Mr. Ludgater, farmer, of Lower Halston, about four miles from Sittingbourne. The premises, which form an extensive range, consisting of substantial barns and granaries, stacks of corn, stables for several horses, sheds for agricultural implements, and waggon lodges, are, with their contents, completely consumed, and the total loss is not less than £2000.

IRELAND.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—The meeting of the Repeal Association, on Monday, was only remarkable for the statement of Mr. O'Connell, that it was too late to bring the question of the Repeal of the Union before the Legislature this session. He persisted, however, in warmly advocating the measure. "During the present month," he said, "they would have a demonstration in Cork, and another in Meath, besides the celebration of the 30th of May, in Dublin. (Cheers.) Against the commencement of the next session of Parliament, they would have petitions from every county, every town, every village, and every family in Ireland, in favour of domestic legislation. He was determined that the British Minister should have ocular demonstration of the feelings and wishes of the Irish people." (Hear, and cheers.)
